Student Union food court now feeding students

fter years of planning and months of setbacks, the Student Union food court opened Monday to a rush of hungry people. But the restaurants are experiencing problems and students are upset.

"We're happy to be open," said Student Union Director David Mucci. "We're just working through some rough edges.

Long lines, slow service, limited menus and bad food are students' main complaints about the Marriot managed Taco Bell and Sub Connection franchises.

University of Idaho graduate student Susan Raines said the food was under cooked at Taco Bell. "The chicken was so raw I almost gagged," said Raines. "Besides that it was pretty good.

Mucci said students need to understand the food court just opened and there will be "service delays and food production problems" for a few weeks.

Long lines and poor service are mostly due to an untrained staff and only two of the food court's four counters are open said Marriott Retail Director David Garrett. He said he opened the doors to meet the students' needs and expected problems at first.

"There was no training done before the opening," said Garrett. "When we get a full staff ready, we'll be cooking," Garrett said Marriott is trying to do their best with the food court. "Hopefully there won't be a problem with quality after this week," he said.

UI Junior Greg Patton said he stood in line for 20 minutes and the restaurant "They probably should have waited to open," said Patton.

Garrett said the Student Union could not get a "full blow" Taco Bell franchise which offers a full menu but said the "express" counter will offer featured items and may eventually expand to offer more choices.

Although the Sub Connection has been closing at 2 p.m. to prepare for the dinner rush, Taco Bell has been serving more than 500 people per day and grossed over $2,000 Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Burger King, Espresso Stop and TCBY yogurt shop are waiting for supplies and plan to open before the food courts grand opening on Oct. 4.

Olympics raise money for American Cancer Society warms of women clustered the administration lawn Saturday afternoon. They were participating in one of Sigma Alpha Epsilon's fall fundraisers, the annual SAO Olympics.

"It went really well. Quite a few people showed up and everybody looked like they had a good time," commented Ryan Whitney, co-chairman of philanthropies for Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

The events best Sept. 9 at 2 p.m. on the administration lawn and ended at the Sigma Alpha Epsilon's chapter house later that afternoon. A $25 entry fee is required for each female living group wishing to participate in the Olympics.

The men of Sigma Alpha Epsilon brought in $225 from the entry fees which will go towards their philanthropy The American Cancer Society.

Women from all over campus were invited to compete in seven events for points to determine the winning living group of the Olympics. The games were tug-of-war, the three legged race, relay race, wheel barrel race, volleyball tournament, a banner contest and they ended the event with a pie eating contest back at the SAE chapter house.

Delta Gamma sorority placed first and Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority placed second out of the seven living groups that participated. Points are calculated from the outcome of the events and judging of the living group's banner.

"I look forward to SAO Olympics because it provides complete and positive sorority involvement and at the same time raises funds for our fall fundraising events," commented Sigma Alpha Epsilon senior, Jeremy Winners.

The fall semester is a busy time for the two philanthropy chairman of Sigma Alpha Epsilon. Whitney and his counterpart, J.P. Praiser have been busy not only with the SAO Olympics but also a golf tournament to be held later this month. Last year the golf tournament raised about $3,000 and awarded prizes ranging from a pick-up truck to a case of golf balls. Prizes are awarded for getting a hole in one, the longest putt and the longest drive. All of the money from entry fees also goes to the American Cancer Society. The tournament is to be held on Sept. 30 at the University of Idaho Golf Course.

Whitney added, "We felt that the event went very smoothly and we appreciate the participation."

Windows 95 gets ‘strange launch’ at UI Computer Store

udents, faculty and staff are not lining up at the University of Idaho Computer Store to buy a copy of Microsoft's Windows 95.

UI Computer Stores inability to price Windows 95 competitively, and a hesitant higher-education marketplace, have curbed campus sales. Microsoft did not offer an educational discount on the Windows 95 operating system for university retailers. "Every higher-education retailer is in the same boat," said Robert B. Parker, supervisor of the UI Computer Store. "I could sell it at cost and still not be price competitive."

"The UI Computer Store retails Windows 95 at $115. Parker said Windows 95 is the most anticipated software release in the last decade. As a result, ever vendor of computer software, including super-stores, mail-order firms and "every retail channel in the world," are buying Windows 95 in bulk, he said.

Policy gives tribes consultation in Endangered Species Act

Indian tribes will have more say in decisions under the Endangered Species Act during the Clinton administration, according to a new policy. The policy, announced Sept. 1 by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service, seeks to ensure that federal and tribal governments in all aspects of the endangered species program from providing information about which species should be protected to more active management of recovering species on or near tribal lands. Native Americans in most instances have tentacle hunting and fishing rights that must be honored, with respect and great care," said John Rogers, acting director of the Fish and Wildlife Service. The policy calls for the agencies to coordinate with all tribal governments in determining which species to list, conducting surveys and implementing consultation procedures. The agencies also must consider impacts to reserved hunting and fishing rights and trust lands, and exercise special regulatory authority for threatened species when those rights are involved. The Interior and Wildlife Service said 12 tribes in the Rocky Mountain area are working on energy management plans for their respective fish species on their reservations. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is responsible for non-game fish on their reservations. The Washington State Fish and Wildlife Department is responsible for non-game fish on their reservations. CAAPS encourages responsible pet ownership

Justin Oliver Rueb
Sun

Returning to school is an exciting time as students get adjusted to their new homes. Many people buy or adopt pets to complete the transition, not knowing that they are not allowed in many apartments. Now is the time when dogs and cats are flooding animal shelters, said Yvonne Herman-Rosenberg of the Companion Animal Aid and Placement Society.

CAAPS is a volunteer agency that places rescued pets in foster homes until permanent owners are selected through an application, interview and screening process. Spaying and neutering services, as well as pet food and medical treatment are provided to low-income pet owners.

Herman-Rosenberg urges people to check if pets are allowed in the lease before buying or adopting. In addition, she encourages people to consider other factors such as the size of the pet in relation to the space it is kept in.

"If you have a fenced yard, it is likely to be a good home for a large breed such as a Rottweiler, Greyhound, or Malamute. For a smaller home without a fenced exercise area, near a busy street, a small breed such as a Terrier, Poodle, Dachshund or Cocker Spaniel would do better. Cats do well in any size house, pet cats are kept indoors by knowledgeable owners," which prevents them from being injured by traffic or other animals.

Unwanted pet populations are skyrocketing in this country, with at least 29 million unwanted dogs and cats being euthanized in 1990 alone. To curb the problem, Herman-Rosenberg encourages spaying or neutering. "Homeless companion animals roam urban and rural areas. They die of disease, starvation, in traffic accidents, are prey to other animals or are killed by humans. This mass killing of innocent companion animals, most of which were young and healthy, must be stopped. To help solve this tragic destruction of unfortunate feline companion animals, we strongly urge pet population control by neutering or spaying rather than by killing."

If you would like to contribute time or money to CAAPS, you can reach Yvonne Herman-Rosenberg at (509) 335-2508.

Dickinson said delaying Windows 95 installation in labs will give Microsoft some time to work out potential problems in the software.

Parker said Microsoft will fix "bugs" found in its software by October or November. For further information on the release of Windows 95, contact the UI Computer Store at 885-5518, or by electronic mail at upisstore@uiui.edu.

New college opens in Idaho Falls

Janet Birdsell
Sun

The new Idaho Institute of Arts and Technology opened Monday in Idaho Falls.

"This is an exciting moment for Idaho and the Mountain West," said Administrator Ted Carpenter.

With a population of about 90,000, Idaho Falls is the 15th largest city in Idaho. IIT is the first four-year college in the city according to the Idaho Falls Chamber of Commerce.

IIT will offer Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees in Biological Sciences, English, and International Business. This fall, first semester courses are being offered, such as introductory biology, English composition, speech, choir, and band. Foreign languages such as Spanish, French, Polish, and Czech are also offered.

"One of our goals is to graduate students equipped to succeed in the global market," said Katie Jones, a member of the Board of Trustees.

IIT was incorporated by community members on July 27, 1992 as a non-profit organization. Tuition is $2400 per semester for in-state and out-of-state students. The national focus is on art and design.

"We wish to give the students something for their money. But we're a private college, so of course tuition is slightly higher than yours is," said Carpenter.

Seventeen faculty members are on staff. Many are retired or current employees of the Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory in Idaho Falls. "Hopefully, the quality, caliber, and vision (of the faculty) will spill over to the students," Jones said.

Classes at IIT start as early as 7 a.m. and evening classes last until 9:30 p.m.

"We basically have morning classes and evening classes. I've found that students don't like afternoon classes," Carpenter said.

The school is owned by the eight-member Board of Trustees. Carpenter said. Most, but not all, live in the Idaho Falls area. Trustee Leon Lederman is a Nobel Prize Laureate, Jones said.

Both Jones and Carpenter declined to reveal the number of students currently enrolled. "We have a small number...we anticipate 30 students by the third week (when enrollment statistics become official)," Carpenter said.

Up With People stay with Greeks

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Twelve people from the Up With People cast have been staying at University of Idaho Greeks since Monday. Up With People is an international multimedia program which travels all over the world spreading a message of understanding to the communities they visit.

To save on the cost of traveling around the world, Up With People cast members stay with a host family for the duration of their stay in a particular city. Twelve cast members elected to stay in Greek houses on UI’s campus this week instead of staying with a host family in Lewiston where they will be performing this weekend.

The idea to stay at the Greek houses came from Delta Tau Delta senior Bryan England, who took a year and a half off his education here at UI to join Up With People. Now an alumni of the program, England became involved in this year’s program three weeks before the cast arrived in Lewiston. At that time, England suggested some of the Greek houses as hosts for the cast.

England invited several other Greek houses to host cast members. Hosting cast members this week were Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternities, and the Delta Delta Delta, Alpha Phi and Gamma Phi Beta sororities.

Up With People interviews around 8,000 people each year from around the world to join their cast and places 700. Each cast member spends a year in the program traveling around informing people about the program and doing interviews. There are about 140 people interviewed with five different casts.

The non-profit, non-religious, non-political organization is represented by people between the ages of 17 to 25 by 25 different countries.

Cast members join for a variety of reasons. When asked cast member Jeremy Snyder from Pennsylvania responded that he was on the school council and had the opportunity to spend the day with cast members, talked to an alumni of the program and hosted a girl. Then he interviewed for the position and began the hard work of fundraising and learning the show.

Some of the cast members just saw the show and contacted the group while others hosted cast members or heard about the program and took it upon themselves to learn more about it.

Souders commented, “The mission of Up With People is to affect the world and learn about the world.”

* SEE PEOPLE PAGE 5
The cast members emphasized that the group doesn’t preach, but tries to develop understanding and how to get along with different cultures.

Kai Tekari of Finland added, “Everybody can find something in the program. It teaches people that they can exist together.”

Up With People allows young people to travel all over the world. Klaus Weichardt from Germany commented, “If you go to a country as a tourist you see the land, but not the culture.” Up With People provides cast members the opportunity to meet people and get an in-depth look at their culture. Most cast members say they will have the opportunity to spend time with 80 to 90 host families.

The cast will spend the time up until their three week Christmas break in North America. Afterwards they will travel onto Finland, Sweden and Norway. For some cast members it is their first opportunity to visit the United States. Mimi Vashin of Seattle said, “People here are friendly. Everybody stops to talk to you.”

Vivian Lainer of Switzerland commented on how friendly everybody here is and how much time they take to talk to you. Lainer also pointed out how much different things are in this country compared to others. They were particularly surprised to see such large grocery stores with so many choices and open so late.

Some cast members were concerned when they first started the program that they wouldn’t go to some of the countries they wanted to see. However they all agreed it hasn’t turned out to be a major issue. Vivian summed up their feeling by saying, “It’s not where you’re going that’s important, but the people you’re with and the people you meet.”

Many of the cast members that stayed in a Greek house this week had never been exposed to such a system. They spent the week going to classes, meeting people and having a good time while at the same time still interviewing people for the program as well as informing them and preparing for their shows this upcoming weekend in Lewiston.

If you’re interested in becoming a cast member of Up With People, the 12 cast members will be at the fraternity and sororities on campus until Monday evening. Most of the cast members are not music majors but they are all very special students. As Tekari said, “It’s just personal, not ability. There are no auditions, only interviews.”

All of the cast members present said that Up With People has been a positive experience. Siobhan McCumb from Canada said, “It’s an incredible experience.”

Soudier commented, “Up With People is a safe environment to take risks. You can go out on a limb with your cast and feel comfortable.”

Jim Rennie, former Outdoor Program director, dies after extended illness

Deborah Norum
Co-sponsorship

Jim Rennie came to Moscow, Idaho, in 1973 where he began employment at the University of Idaho. During his early career he established the Outdoor Program and remained as director until 1986. From 1986 until 1994 he worked as the coordinator of University Programs; as well as programming responsibilities, he retained oversight of the Outdoor Program related services. From a small program serving approximately 200 people in 1973, he mentored and facilitated the growth of the Outdoor Program to include outdoor rentals, the Idaho Education Adventures program, cooperative learning, co-curricular activities, adventure travel, and expedition to places like McMurdo, Mt. Hood, and Baja. Presently, the Outdoor Program serves over 10,000 people. Under his tutelage the Outdoor Program served as a model for similar programs around the country.

During his employment with UI Rennie completed a B.S. degree in 1982 and a M.S. degree in Recreation in 1991. Additionally, he was an Adjunct Recreation Professor within the Division of Health, Physical Education, Recreation, and Dance, where he taught numerous academic courses in Outdoor Leadership and Adventure skills. His interest in leadership provided a background for creating the university wide Student Leadership Program.

His expertise in recreation and his leadership ability attracted national attention. Dozens of students from across the country completed academic internship requirements under his direction. One of his lasting endeavors is the International Conference on Outdoor Recreation. As the creator of this conference, he opened the pathway for collegiate professional development within the specific area of outdoor recreation. As an accomplished writer, he authored numerous articles in a recreation and leadership journals. Additionally, in his national and international travels, he delivered professional presentations to a broad range of recreation and leadership subjects.

In 1991, he was awarded the Earl Whitleaf Regional Newsletter Award by the Association of College Unions International.
Prosecutor defends handling of harassment case

Associated Press

IDAHO FALLS—Bonnieville County Prosecutor David Johnson disputes criticism that he moved too slowly to investigate a racially motivated confrontation in Idaho Falls this summer.

An investigation was launched within two weeks of the July 20 incident, and not because of any political pressure, Johnson said in a statement.

"My office is committed to enforcing the law, but will do so within the confines of the law," he said. "No case will be filed solely for political advantage."

American-John Lewis, local president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, reported that he and a co-worker were chased and assaulted 20 while bicycling. Three white men in a van shouted racial insults and death threats at Lewis and his companion.

One of the three men in the van was charged with malicious harassment. But the warrant came more than a month after the incident, and after the suspect left the area.

City officials last week said prosecutors could have moved more quickly on the case.

In a three-page statement, Johnson defended his procedures.

The initial report on the incident was never sent to the prosecutor's office, he said, and the first Bonnieville County sheriff's report did not refer to the incident as "a possible malicious harassment case."

The sheriff's office finished a follow-up to the first report a few days later, and the prosecutor's office asked for an investigation on Aug. 1, Johnson said.

The investigation was hampered by witness accounts, Lewis said he could not identify the man who threatened him, Johnson said. But Lewis still wonders why prosecutors did not move on the case sooner.

"Nobody wanted to talk to me," he said.

By the time the prosecutor's office began its investigation, Idaho Falls Mayor Linda Milam and the state attorney general's office both had urged the county to act. But Johnson said that was not a factor.

"When the mayor contacted our office, we indicated that we appreciated his concern and the matter was being looked at," he said. "Nevertheless, since the investigation was not a criminal matter that is a legal issue that would be legally addressed and was not an issue of second guessing by her or anyone else."

The attorney general's office stepped in at Lewis' urging, said Eric Cawley, a spokesman for the attorney general. But Johnson said Lance's office did not pressure prosecutors.

"The attorney general is no way advised us to file charges or to help us to proceed in this case," he said.

Study finds extended learning important for work success

Associated Press

FULLMAN, WA.—There is a high demand for continuing education as college-educated Americans try to maintain an edge in the workplace, a Washington State University study released Tuesday concludes.

The $77,000 study by the school's Social and Economic Sciences Research Center reports that four out of five workers polled said they need more education to be successful at their jobs.

The March telephone survey of 1,124 adults in the 48 contiguous states is believed to be the first nationwide study of Americans' experiences and views of lifelong learning.

Nine out of 10 respondents age 30 or younger said additional training or education is important for work success. And nearly three of five adults between 50 and 64 said it was important to them.

"The more that technology takes hold in private agencies and firms, the more pressure on people to keep up with that technology and stay productive," said Prinelle Salent, the study's author. "Getting educated once is not enough in the kind of knowledge society we're in." The study shows that work in the information age has changed people's need for learning beyond college and options for obtaining it, said Don A. Dillitt, a professor of sociology and rural sociology and Ranching in the West.

"Two powerful motivators for this change are that employers are encouraging people of all ages to get more work-related training, and many workers expect to experience a career change," he said.

The survey shows that half of the respondents aged 40-49 had been encouraged by their employers to get additional information. The same proportion said they expect to change careers.

"Our study has both good news and bad news for higher education."

Albertson's charged with manslaughter in store death

WEST PALM BEACH, FL -- A manslaughter charge was unsealed Tuesday against the Albertson's Inc. supermarket chain in the death of a shoplifting suspect even though eight employees have been cleared of wrongdoing.

William Alexander, 34, died of asphyxiation after employees tossed him to the floor on the street side of the registers at a Delray Beach store Aug. 5. He was suspected of taking toothpaste and a belt buckle worth $7.

"He had been kicking and fighting them and was fairly angry," said police spokesman Mike Wright. But the first officer to arrive at the store "reached down and felt no pulse."

The indictment of the company was absolutely unjustified, said Michael Road, spokesman for the 772-store chain based in Boise, Idaho.

"Based on all that we know, we have always felt confident that our employees acted reasonably and lawfully during the course of the shoplifting incident," he said. "Now on the other hand, we don't understand and are disappointed by the grand jury's decision to charge the company."

There was no indication why the 16-member grand jury chose to indict the company but issued a report Thursday clearing the employees.

The cause of death was disclosed, but the autopsy report and other evidence presented by prosecutors to the panel to justify the second-degree felony charges remained sealed, said Michael Edmondson; spokesman for the Palm Beach County state attorney's office.

Clinton Administration finalizes response to Batt dumping offer

Associated Press

BOISE, Idaho (AP)—The Clinton administration agreed in principle on Tuesday to Gov. Phil Batt’s conditions for resuming radioactive dumping in Idaho.

But in his 16-page response released to the governor’s office just before 5 p.m., Assistant Energy Secretary Thomas Crumly included a modified version of the 11-page proposal Batt made nearly two years ago.

Batt said it was not possible to determine the extent or impact of any of the modifications sought by the governor.

But Jeff Schrader, who handles nuclear waste issues for Batt, said, "There’s some changes they’re going to have to take a serious look at. It’s not a slam dunk."

The governor, who had twice extended his deadline for the Energy Department’s response, was notified that the proposal had been received while on the state airplane on route to Boise from Coeur D’Alene, where he had attended a state Land Board meeting.

Schrader delivered the federal response to the governor on his arrival in Boise, and Batt and Attorney General Al Laросс were expected to review the document overnight.

Crumby followed up the transmission of the response with a telephone call to Batt spokeswoman Amy Kleiner, who said the governor would talk with Crumby by phone on Wednesday in what she said would likely be a courtesy call.

Crumby said the administration would like the governor’s reaction to their proposed changes by week’s end. Kleiner said, but he did not make that a firm deadline.

While the major components of the governor’s proposal appeared to have been accepted, even Batt had not expected unconditional agreement to his proposal to accept half the waste shipments the government wants to dump in Idaho in return for an enforceable guarantee that all high-level waste—new and old—and nearly all low-level waste be removed from the state by 2069.

"It would be highly unusual if they accepted every dotted i and crossed t," said Batt, who has indicated he would make adjustments, but no substantive changes to the deal.

If the modified proposal is acceptable to Batt, it would quell the fears raised by the NEA that any possible liability is being imposed by Idaho’s refusal, backed up by a federal court order, to accept new waste shipments.

Fear prompts Nampa residents to limit activities, consider moving

Associated Press

NAMPA—More than one-third of Nampa residents surveyed recently said they had limited their activities because they fear crime, and almost one in five have considered moving.

The July survey of about 360 people—approximately 1 percent of the city’s population—also found that Nampa residents fear juvenile crime, want more police officers and want those officers to be more visible.

"People do have a perception of fear of crime," Assistant Police Chief Alas Creech said. "You can see it throughout, but it is particularly true in areas involving juveniles."

The Nampa Police Department worked with Boise State University criminal justice student Lisa Herrera and the school’s sociology department on the two-week, door-to-door survey.

It found that more than 37 percent of respondents have limited their activities because they fear crime and more than 18 percent have considered moving from their neighborhood because of crime.

Several residents of those surveyed said they believe vandalism and graffiti are problems.

More than 63 percent believe the police are involved in drugs and gangs are a problem and more than 62 percent say their child will be exposed to danger in their neighborhood.

An emphasis on juvenile crime is no surprise to police.

"People see it and it bothers them," Creech said. "The media wants to write about gangs. They focus on it."

He said police often are accused of ignoring gang activity when they actually are just trying to avoid giving gangs publicity.

"We recognize the gangs are out there," Creech said. "But there’s a difference between not giving them credit and recognition and denying that they’re there."

The biggest surprise to police were an expressed fear of assaults on citizens and burglary. Both are considered to be higher than justified by Nampa crime statistic. Creech said police may focus on educating the community to relieve some of the fear.

But people also had good things to say about the police department.

About 65 percent said the police department does a good or excellent job, and 91 percent said it was at least average.
Go ahead and kiss $7,500 good-bye

If Angin Shaltry can be charged for an unauthorized over-spending of $175 in funds out of the ASUI accounts for a dinner party, why are University of Idaho students sitting idly by while their student government wants to spend $7,500 (or possibly more) of hard-earned student money on a tailgate party before tomorrow's football game?

As reported in last Friday's Argonaut, the unofficial slogan for the party is: "We're having a $10,000 party, and everyone in the Northwest is invited." The slogan should have been, "Despite cutting back the budgets of nearly every ASUI-funded program, we're now going to piss away $7,500 in student funding."

What makes the situation even more disgusting is the fact that many of the student representatives supporting this tailgate fiesta ran on platforms which included cutting excess spending in student government. Where are their supposed conservative values?

In an era when tuition hikes have consistently outpaced inflation for the last 10 or 15 years, why is our student government not making a concerted effort to save their constituents' money? Instead of spending it on activities of obvious educational value to the student?

Their actions speak louder than words. Starting off the year by attempting to save student money was a great idea, but if it is going to be a viable program, more planning and throwing away $7,500 on a tailgate party speaks volumes about the ASUI senate's loyalty to their own campaign promises and to the idea of saving student money.

Nearly everyone actively involved in UI events wants to see increased attendance at our sports activities, but the motive of the tailgate party is somewhat suspect with the recent move of the football program to NCAA Division I-A. UI badly needs to boost its attendance average if it is to gain final approval for admission to I-A. Right now, average attendance at football games is barely a flip on the screen compared to the requirements demanded by the NCAA.

A question: Where is UI going to find 5,000 more people who are willing to attend Vandal football games on a regular basis? Given the fact there is a Pac-10 football powerhouse situated just eight miles from our campus, the Athletic Department will be hard pressed to root out another 5,000 die-hard football fans in a region of the country not exactly known for its population density. and on a campus not exactly known for its participation or division.

Additionally, the very idea of switching to a division where UI will no longer be a powerhouse baffles the mind. The Vandal football team has as much a right to a spot in the Big Sky Conference and the I-AA division. They were a

A gentle reminder not to take rights for granted

This weekend, as I flipped through the comic and a billion Xenomarch sale ads in the Sunday paper, I noted various artilcles on the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women, which is being held in Beijing, China. I don’t like to consider myself an ignorant fool, but I’m afraid that although the conference has been headline news for about a week or more, I have given it no more than a fleeting thought. Of course, I am aware of the conference, which is occurring but I had not even bothered to find out exactly what it is about.

As I read through these articles, I was surprised to find that I had never really considered the idea that there are women in the world still struggling for the simple freedoms that we take for granted here. Women here are household and they enjoy and seem to take for granted.

As a woman living in a major city in the world, I can’t imagine how it is to be living in a society where your life is determined by the will of others. I don’t think my mother can imagine it, either. As citizens of the United States, we are fortunate enough to be part of a society where women have the right to choose what they want to do with their lives. Because of the changes that have occurred over the last several decades, women have the right to pursue careers, to vote, to own property, to make decisions about their health care, and to be treated with respect and dignity. These are the rights that women in other parts of the world are still fighting for.

Weather demons prevent learning

S omething is wrong here. Deadly wrong. I have been living in Moscow for nearly a month now and have only witnessed rain on one occasion. Last year, it seemed like there was a couple times each week. And in the 10 years prior to that I'm not even sure when visiting my esteemed uncle here in Moscow, it would always dump gallons of heavy moisture on my head. No, instead of cool, damp, depressing weather, we are treated to beautiful advertising sunshine, warm air currents, and a general feeling that all is well in the world. And it really is. Why? Because who wants to go to school when it’s nice outside? Who can concentrate on bilateral precipitation deflection when there are 15 attractive females dressed in their summer clothes lounging on the lawns outside your classroom window? Who really cares about summarizing Proct when they could be playing Frisbee with the FBI during the Administration Building lunch? Nuh-uh.

It’s that good of a “Springtime—Associated Attention Loss” that I come down with typically in late March or early April. This year my SAUL has continued clear up to September, with no end in site. And the attention loss is progressively getting worse. I open a textbook and instantly forgress but why is it so hard to sit down and get my work done? It’s late at night and I am dismally realizing that I have three classes that I missed that morning. I try to accept the fact that I’m a coherent student and letting you in on a little secret, eyes close and head in scissors in almost every class I’m taking. Books lie tossed carelessly aside and pants zip up on the grill. As in usually my observation if I try to avoid responsibility, I see a conspiracy afoot. Yes. A dark therapy conspiracy which feeds on me from any sort of personal responsibility or accountability. It involves supernatural forces, which, of course, renders it impos-se near to impossible to change my behavior.

Obviously, the Weather Demons are plotting against me again. I can see them. They are up to something. They are plotting against me.

power to be reckoned with. Will attendance be boosted when the Vandals are a just.
so-so team in the I-A? Doubtful. Also, games played against former conference rivals Idaho State, Boise State, Missoula, Cheney, Boise and Pocatello are all cities students and fans could drive to if they wanted. Boise is the only one to follow the Vandals into the I-A Division.

Former UI President Elisabeth Zinner's final case-in-the-pressures of Athletic DIrector Larry Link and former head football coach John L. Smith was a bad decision. UI football should not even have thought of going I-A until they had all their ducks in a row. i.e. 30,000 capacity stadium, 17,000 average attendances, etc.
The Athletic Department will be spending a lot of money to pursue its ill-fated dream of playing with the big boys—money which could be better spent elsewhere.

Now we have the soon-to-be-infamous tailgate party. Is it possible that the Athletic Department lobbied the ASUI senate to pass this bill? The motive is certainly there. How student politics sunk to a new low? No—count on politics to always be a dirty game no matter what level it is played at. Why does a tailgate party need to be funded at all? Can the ASUI not recoup money from sales of soda and hot dogs?

Kudos go to ASUI Senate Zahrah Shikh who resigned from voting, explaining, "For one event, that's expensive," and were relatively clean by the living groups she represented before casting a vote. Chair of the Activities Board, John Hoyne, summed up the attitude which seemed to prevail when the ASUI senate passed the bill: "It's great, anything to get the students to come to the game."

Anything, John? That certainly seems to be what the ASUI senate is doing—instead of looking for some more creative and less expensive solutions to the problem, they're throwing money at it and hoping it will go away.

Senior John Tescholdick admitted the tailgate party seems a somewhat risky venture during a year when finances are already tight for the student government. Tescholdick also gets kudos for asking a question which should have stopped the spending bill in its tracks: "What's going to happen if the turnover hits? what we expect it is? Hmmm...
The University of Idaho does not attract students because of its football team—except for the football players, of course. Many students look at UI as getting a good educational bang for their buck.

What is beginning to be a state is that UI now risks eliminating the very aspect which most attracts students to the school: good old-fashioned value. The Athletic Department promised not to spend any taxpayer or student money in its pursuit of the I-A dream. Don't look now, but it appears student money is being spent, albeit not directly by the Athletic Department, to help achieve what will probably turn out to be a financial nightmare for our university.

Hopefully, certain political candidates are paying UI students to consider this during the upcoming ASUI elections this fall. Ever notice that "tailgate" rhymes with "Wattgare?"

Earth First! a slogan, not an organization

Russ Wright's column about Earth First! activists is the typical media innundsso without basis in fact that keeps all of us, including myself and Russ, from working together to solve some of the problems that face us all. Even an "opinion editor" in a "student newspaper" should be more accurate.

To inform Russ, as well as the readers of his column, Earth First! is a slogan, not an organization. The slogan, "No Compromise in Defense of Mother Earth" is the unifying theme. And sometimes that seems to be all we have in common given the wide strata of society that seems to heed that slogan as an ethic.

I am a student at the University of Idaho and live in Moscow. A large number of people that you label "Earth Firsters" live here also—e.g. Troy, Boivin, Lewiston, Orofino, Genese, etc. for that matter. I wonder if you are even aware of this, but something in my mind says that you are. It seems that you are using the same "us and them" theme that is so effective in dividing societies; using this tactic rather than creating a forum for discourse in how to solve the problems that face us.

Do you understand the "ends-are" ideas that are being presented by local "Earth Firsters"? This idea keeps the jobs and money locally without sending the capital earned in local efforts elsewhere, i.e. non-local, and is used to sustain the community.

The allegations linking those involved with the Cove-Mallard campaign to destruction of private property/out-spieking are inaccurate. I had hoped that by now everyone, even Russ, would be aware that the Cove-Mallard campaign has disassociated itself from equip-m ent destruction and/or tree-spieking very public since the start of the campaign.

The forest ecology is also misinformed. Old growth forests are living systems and home to species like the boreal owl, pilated woodpecker, fisher, marten moutrit, numerous amphibians, fungi, and undescri-mnable fish. It seems Russ Wright wants to turn forests into "reasonably sized" tree farms and farm farms. Prior to the European invasion, old growth forests constituted the greatest portion of Northwest forests.

It is true fire and disease have been a part of these forests. Ecologists recognize clearcuts do not mimic fires. This fact is also supported by scientists at the University of Idaho, not just "Earth Firsters." Fires burn in mosaics and leave some trees on-site for old-growth dependent species. If Russ has "actually" walked through old growth he

Breakthroughs help women

There have been some breakthroughs this spring and summer that were quite impressive. Most involved problems affecting women. This is happening now because for once all scientists and doctors were male. Doctors used to say, “It’s all in your head.” Now with women in these fields, a correction can be made.

The first involves PMS. They have found the problem is sequently complicated by a deficiency of magnesium in the diet. It used to be found naturally in long, green vegetables, whole grains and chocolate. Now with mass production, chocolate is the only source. But it can be found in cheap tablets in any grocery store.

The women I have informed of this fact could not believe the change they felt when they started taking these tablets. There was a study done in Italy. They found that there was a 53 percent less incidence of breast cancer in women who used olive oil in cooking rather than other varieties of oil. With breast cancer having dropped from one in five to one in four, this fact is important.

There was a study done in Japan because Japan has the lowest incidence of AIDS in the world. They found that seaweed in the diet prevents AIDS in women.

The National Academy of Sciences has found that breast feeding prevents cancer in infants and young children. They have found that breast milk kills cancerous cells. This may become an alternative to the living hell of chemotherapy. Now all we have to do is tell our society to quit considering it an obscene, pornographic act.

Column misguided about Prop. 1

I would like to respond to the misinformation being spread in Curine Florence’s article, “Voters already said ‘no’,” last Tuesday in the Argonaut. First, Curine, have you read Proposition One? I doubt it because if you had, you would not have been so misinformed. The Idaho Citizens Alliance has included a provision that strikes last year’s rule concerning removing homosexual material from public libraries. As well, Corrine, how can you print an article that states, “The United States Military Association and the ICA are both gun-go-to party yet another anti-gay initiative,” and one page previously in the same newspaper it states, “Walton (ICA President and founder) Resources Alliances With Military Group.” How? It just does not make sense. Explain that to me. Corrine, for you, and to all the readers, I will give a brief summary of Proposition One.

The measure states that (1) the state will not give preference to non-heterosexual people solely on sexual orientation; (2) homosexual marriages will not be legally sanctioned; (3) tax dollars shall not be spent on promoting homosexual behavior; and 4) homosexual behavior will not be promoted in public schools. Even Governor Bult, who was opposed to Proposition One, feels that homosexuality should not be taught in public schools.

I encourage the public to read Proposition One for themselves and decide for themselves. I would also encourage them to be very careful of the false information that the citizens of Idaho have been handed.

Unborn not ‘part of a woman’

I wish to correct two false statements made by Jesse Mechnik in the "Letters to the Editor" section, Sept. 6, 1995.

Greene writes that the unborn are merely “tissues within a placenta.” First of all, a preborn child is not (wholly) located within the placenta. If I remember my biology correctly, the child is located within the uterus, and the placenta lines the uterine wall and is attached to the placenta by the umbilical cord. In the event of a miscarriage, the placenta is expelled after birth.

Second of all, the preborn child is not tissue (unless one considers all humans to merely be “tissues”). The child has a heart, a brain, hands, and eyes, and can feel pain.

Idaho makes home debut Sat. in Dome

Division II Sonoma State makes trek to Palouse after 50-point drubbing two weeks ago; Vandals expected to score and score often

Damon Barkdall staff

Newly renovated Kidd Dome...Vandal tailgating has just been introduced, not surprisingly; new enthusiasm for University of Idaho football.

What next—a new starting quarterback? As of press time, a new quarterback may be the starting position. Coach Chris Tormey announced on Tuesday that back-up quarterback Brian Brennan has been moved to the top of the quarter- back depth chart.

Eric Hisaw started for the Vandals two weeks ago against Oregon State and both Brennan and Hisaw were less-than-spectacular in the UI opener in Corvallis.

This Saturday the Vandals (0-1) open up at home against Division II Sonoma State (0-1).

Brennan's performance in a Monday scrimmage impressed the coaching staff, completing 5-3 passing against a top-notch Idaho defense. Tormey said that Brennan's consistence in his arm had gone away after two days rest following the OSU game.

Although the 6-foot 5-inch sophomore hasn't been given the starting nod just yet, you can expect both Brennan and Hisaw to see action against the Cougars on Saturday. "I think they both get better this week, so I don't want to give the impression that we're unhappy with Eric. But as we know, it's a position that's in competition and we'll continue to evaluate," Tormey said.

Quarterback is not the only position where you might see changes. UI's starting runningback Joel Thomas is doubtful for this weekend's game after injuring his knee against OSU. Thomas was hurt in the first quarter and ended up playing the whole game. An MRI test on his knee came up negative but swelling problems persisted. On Monday Thomas went into surgery to have excessive cartilage trimmed off. Thomas will return in action against Idaho State next weekend. "I'm not so sure he would be effective if we had decided to play him this weekend," Tormey said of Thomas. "We'd love to have him for Sonoma but this is the best time for him to rest."

Back-up running back Lavoni Kidd is expected to start in Thomas's place.

"Lavoni is a different type of runner than Joel. Joel is a power running back and Lavoni is a slashing, quickness type of running back," Tormey said.

Other injured Vandals include wide receiver Dwight McKenzie and cornerback Andy Gilroy. McKenzie suffered a shoulder injury against OSU but should play this Saturday. Gilroy suffered a sprained ankle and is also probable for the SU game.

Up front, Tormey said the Vandals will play a lot of players on defense against the Cougars—having injury.

Sonoma State comes into a Kidd Dome that hasn't seen a visiting team win in nine straight games. Both the Vandals and the Cougars are 0-1 and Tormey is interested in what his team can do against the Division II school.

"I had a feeling the bye week would really help us. The OSU game was a very physical and without playing last weekend we might have gotten stale," Tormey said. "We need to prove something Saturday. It's a respect thing. We were excited about playing Oregon State just like Sonoma State is excited to play us."

The Cougars will be looking to prove themselves after taking a 59-7 whipping by St. Mary's two weeks ago.

"This is a very, very good football team," said SUU coach Frank Scalercio speaking graciously of the Vandals. "They have a quick, tough, aggressive defensive line and terrific offensive weapons in Joel Thomas and Dwight McKenzie. It will take a flawless performance on our part to be a factor in this one."

SUU is led by tailback Freddie Bradley who rushed for a game high 86 yards on 17 carries against St. Mary's. Bradley, who hasn't played in 3 years, picked up some of his old habits and exploited on the offensive side of the ball—remembering the things that made him a junior college All-American.

"We need to get him stopped," Tormey said of Bradley.

Fortunately, Idaho can remain confident about stopping the run after keeping a high-octane OSU wide receiver offense to only 161 yards rushing.

"Up front we're playing a lot of players on defense," Tormey said.

On special teams, Justin Spiva will take over punting duties for Idaho, replacing quarterback Brian Brennan.

"In fairness to Brian, by playing quarterback and punting, he doesn't have enough time to refine his punting skills," Tormey said.

Idaho comes into Saturday's game hung up and limping but don't expect a Vandal loss. The Vandals have always been tough after a week off and have won eight consecutive games after getting the extra week of rest.

The last meeting between these two schools resulted in a 49-7 Vandals win in 1991.

Vandals face tough tests in ORU, SEMSU

Dan Eckles

Newcomers

Three new opponents will get a chance to snap the Vandal volleyball squad’s 15-game home winning streak this weekend when Idaho hosts its annual Safeco/Branegan’s Classic.

Memorial Gym has been dubbed the “House of Death” by Vandal coach Tom Hilbert after the seventh year coach has watched his teams’ struggles in tournaments against the University of Idaho since his arrival in 1988.

Roelene Alfreds, Southeast Missouri State and Northridge, make the trek to the Palouse for the yearly tournament. Idaho hooked up with CS Northridge two weeks ago at a tournament in San Francisco, picking up a 15-7, 15-7, 15-10 triumphant upset. ORU should give the Vandal a run for their money. The Golden Eagles are 8-0 on the young season with two wins over Big-8 club Missouri and another over Arkansas of the SEC.

“Oregon Roberts was kind of an unknown quantity when we scheduled them. Friday night’s match (against ORU) is going to be huge,” Hilbert said. “Roberts is solid. We’ve got to do our homework and be ready to play.”

The Golden Eagles are led by Oregon native Zuzanna Stobie. The 5’6” outside hitter is averaging 4.15 kills and 2.77 digs per game. Both are second on the team. The International Flavor Dance team performed for the Brasilian sisters prior to the game. Outside hitter respectively. Stobie is in 3rd place with 13.3 assists per game and Sanders is hitting .352.

Southeast Missouri State should not be a cinch for the Vandals to show up and blow off either. The Ohio Valley Conference school is 7-2 so far this year, but has played just five matches. Junior outside hitter Liane Huffman leads Southeast Missouri with an averaging kills per game. Huffman is the leading hitter in the Missouri Valley Conference.

The Vandals have compiled a 361 assists in Idaho’s nine matches and is averaging 12.2 assists per game, the fourth best mark in the nation.

Another key to the Vandal win will be senior hitter Amanda Mitchell. She is hitting around .300 mark as well and could pose problems.

Cal-State Northridge spikes toss to Moscow with just 1-1 record, however, the Matadors have no seniors on the team and only two juniors.

Six-foot freshmen Carrie Kipfenberg is the Matadors main offensive weapon. The San Jose, Calif. native pouds just over three kills and 2.50 digs per game. Another freshman, Holli Hansen, also leads a lot of sets with 270 hitting attempts on the year and 76 kills.

A key to success for the Vandals will be solid passing. Hilbert instilled after last weekend’s efforts at the Portland tournament his squad need to get into gym and get as many repetitions as possible. The saying inconsistent passing has been the Vandals biggest problem.

“I want to be 8-0 right now and to be honest both of our losses were certainly to teams that were well within our ability to beat,” Hilbert said. “We just have to play very consistently. We don’t have the luxury to dominate. We have to side out and not give up easy stuff to our opponents.”

Idaho opponents don’t get anything easy when the offense goes through senior outside hitter Lisa Yanulaitis. The 6’6” Bulgarian sensation is second in the nation in kills per game with a 6.62 average, behind George Washington University’s Swetlana Vilyurina (6.67).

Yanulaitis has collected 172 kills already this season and also leads the USP club in digs with 98. 30 more than anyone else on the team. This has been named to the all-tournament team at both the USP and Portland tournaments as well. Idaho is fourth in the nation in team kills per game, averaging 17.12. The Vandal offense is spearheaded by junior setter Liane Huffman. The 5’9” British Columbian has compiled 361 assists in Idaho’s nine matches and is averaging 12.2 assists per game, the fourth best mark in the nation.
Moore uses red-shirt to gain experience

Mark Vanderwall

For most people the thought of being a freshman twice is related to failure, but for one University of Idaho volleyballer it has been anything but a failure.

Jessica Moore came to Idaho after lettering all four years at her high school in Belgrade, Montana. Then, needless to say, the transition from playing every point to sitting out a red-shirt season was quite hard for the middle blocker.

"It was hard for me to sit out last season, after being a key player in high school. This year, however, I am getting to play quite a bit and I think that sitting out a year helped me get to that next level," said Moore.

After sitting out last season Moore has found herself in the starting line-up for the Vandals at middle blocker and has put up some impressive numbers so far this season. She has 26 blocks, 43 digs, 10 service aces, and 44 kills in just eight games as a Vandal.

Choosing to go to the University of Idaho may not have been easy as is determined which sport to play in college. Moore was also an outstanding basketball player in high school and didn't even play volleyball until her freshman year at Belgrade.

"I played basketball from the time I was like six-years-old and I didn't start playing volleyball until my high school coach convinced me to come out my freshman year," said Moore. "I got hurt on basketball, so I decided to pursue my volleyball career." Moore narrowed her choices of where to play down to Idaho and Montana and then picked Idaho hands down after what she said, "was a great recruiting trip."

"I had a bad trip to Missoula, they lost my ticket and that left me only one day to look, whereas at Idaho I really enjoyed the team and Tom (Hilbert) a lot so the choice was Idaho after that," said Moore.

Red-shirting did more than just allow Moore to adjust to athletics, it also allowed her to get in and work hard in the classroom as well.

"When I came to the U of I, I wasn't worried about my ability on the court, but as far as in the classroom, I have always had to work really hard just to get by," said Moore.

Red-shirting has proven itself to be one of the greatest tools to work an athlete into the system and not make them pay by losing a year of eligibility.

"The more mature a person is, the better an athlete and student they become. Jessica is a perfect example of what red-shirting can do for the team as well as the individual themselves," said Idaho coach Tom Hilbert.

As for plans after graduation, Moore has decided that helping those who weren't as fortunate as her may be her calling in life. She is in the process of possibly changing her major from Elementary Education to Special Education to use her love for children to the fullest.

"I have always loved kids, and this is a way for me to give back to those that may be less fortunate than I am," said Moore.

You can also expect to see her on the sidelines coaching someday. Moore has it penciled in her future planner to coach at the high school level somewhere in the Northwest someday.

"I really want to coach somewhere down the road, but I don't want to coach in a big city because I have grown accustomed to the small town atmosphere and wouldn't trade it for anything," she said.

Although she is just a freshman in eligibility and a sophomore in school, Moore sees herself as married and having children five years down the road of life. She also has another goal that has nothing to do with anyone else but Jessica Moore.

"I really want to earn Freshman of the Year honors in the Big Sky and I am working really hard at my game, so if it happens it happens and if not I just hope I am a benefit to the team," said Moore.

Red-shirt freshman Jessica Moore goes for a ball during Thursday afternoon's practice. The Belgrade, Mont. native has stepped into a starting role this fall.

The Kibbie Dome spent the last week turning students away from the weight room during the morning after the UI athletic department requested more student athletes primary time on the Dome weight.

Starting Sept. 11 only 12 athletes are allowed in the Kibbie Dome weight room between 6 and 8 a.m. on Monday through Friday, allowing athletes greater access to the facility.

Building supervisor, Hugh Hawthorne said the Dome received a request from the athletic department during the week of Sept. 4 and began consultations with Campus Recreation and Athletics on a solution to the weight room problem.

The room can hold about 60 people. Hawthorne said. It averages about a 50-50 student-to-athlete ratio. The Kibbie weight room offers free weights and machines for lifters.

Flyers instructing students to the Memorial Gym Weight Room as an alternative light note the change reflects athletes need for a time that does not conflict with class schedules.

"We are opening our Memorial Gym weight room because they're shooting down the Dome," said Terri Schleyer, facility events coordinator. "We're opening it to accommodate student and faculty card holders during the morning.

Memorial Gym now opens at 6 a.m. to accommodate displaced lifters. The facility holds 50 people at one time and offers exercise bikes, free weights and some weights machines. Schleyer said the age on the room equipment as the only major difference in facility.

Student fees in 1973 helped build the Dome, funding 90 percent of the costs. Currently, the dome raises on student fees and income generated through special events like football and basketball games. ASU President Sean Wilson noted that last year students paid about $76 in activity fees for the Kibbie Dome.

TAILGATE PARTY

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16
12:30 P.M.
KIBBIE DOME PARKING LOT
GAME TIME: 3:00 P.M.
The University of Idaho will join the Big West Conference in 1996. The move will open up a whole new world to Vandal Athletics, full of new opportunities for competition and national exposure.

Idaho will be playing in just one of 10 Division I-A Conferences participating in NCAA I-A football. The conference was established in 1969 as the Pacific Coast Athletic Association (PCAA) and was renamed the Big West Conference in July of 1988.

Idaho will join Boise State, North Texas and Cal Poly San Luis Obispo as new members of the league in 1996. Those schools will join Cal State Fullerton, Long Beach State, New Mexico State, UC Irvine, UC Santa Barbara, Nevada, Pacific and Utah State.

The league sponsors championships in 18 different sports — 10 women’s and eight men’s sports. Men’s championship sports include baseball, basketball, cross country, football, golf, swimming, tennis and track and field. Women’s championship sports include basketball, cross country, golf, gymnastics, soccer, softball, swimming, tennis, track and field and volleyball.

The Big West has captured national championships in men’s basketball, women’s volleyball, baseball, softball, women’s golf and water polo.

The league has a record of 11-6-1 in football bowl games and has participated in a bowl game every year since 1981.

The winner of the Big West football title advances to the Las Vegas Bowl which pits the winner of the Big West against the winner of the Mid-America Conference.

The game is played in Las Vegas in mid-December at the 32,000-seat Sam Boyd Silver Bowl and is televised live on ESPN.

The league was formed on July 1, 1969, with seven charter members: Fresno State, Long Beach State, San Jose State, UC Santa Barbara, Pacific, Cal State Los Angeles and San Diego State. That season the PCAA participated in its first bowl game with San Diego State defeating Boston University 28-0 in the Pasadena Bowl.

In 1976, the first PCAA men’s post-season basketball tournament took place at the Stockton Civic Auditorium. The first California Bowl was played at Bulldog Stadium in Fresno in 1981 with the name and site changed to the Las Vegas Bowl in 1992.

The first women’s championships were added in 1985 with the start of the women’s cross country championships. Championships in basketball, swimming and track and field were established that school year.

Volleyball and softball began championship competition in 1984.

The conference began its dominance in NCAA women’s volleyball in 1985 when Pacific won the national championship. The league would win five national championships in the next nine years.

Dennis Farrell became the Big West Conference Commissioner in 1992. He is just the fourth full-time commissioner in league history. The league’s offices are in Irvine, California.

Tormey takes alma mater into Big West

Chris Tormey always knew he'd be back at his alma mater. It was just a matter of time.

During his 27-year coaching career at Washington, the last season as defensive coordinator, Tormey's teams won three NCAA titles. He took over as Idaho's head coach in 1973 and improved on the Vandal tradition with a 113-45 record in 1945-46. He was named successful coach of the decade in 1980.

Tormey's previous experience in helping establish Idaho's winning tradition in the 1980s is his familiarity with what has been successful for the Vandals. He is always in his ability to make that smooth transition. He has shown the savvy to stay with the things Idaho has done well in the past to establish its winning tradition while still putting his own stamp on the program.

"The Vandals have been very successful in the one-back offense, and they attack the width and depth of the field very well. My philosophy wouldn't vary from that much at all."

His way of doing things already has made an impact on the team. The squad's grade point average jumped from 2.30 in the fall to a 2.50 in spring. He has also put together an outstanding coaching staff, doing what few coaches can do - blending in new coaches with key coaches from the past staff.

Tormey was able to keep longtime assistant and recruiting coordinator Jim Senter, defensive coordinator Nick Holt, running backs coach Todd Holness and quarterbacks coach Greg Olson. Then he brought in ultra-successful NFL standout George Yarno and Paul Skansi along with former Idaho great Kasey Dunn and another former Husky assistant in Jeff Mills.

"Things are more fun, yet still intense," says Tormey. "I'm the All-American offensive lineman Jim Mills."

Tormey's hiring is a continuation of an era-successful coaching bloodline at Idaho. Dennis Erickson came to Idaho in 1982 to take on his head coaching job. Erickson's first Idaho staff included Tormey, Keith Gilbertson and John L. Smith. Gilbertson and Smith would later lead the Vandals to the Big West Conference. Erickson, the trio combined for a 7-4-0 record against Idaho.

Tormey's first team all-conference pick his junior season, a senior all-American pick as a senior and was named the team's Defensive Player of the Year in both 1976 and 1977.

He ranks 18th in Idaho career tackles with 14, and has the second highest number of tackles for a down lineman. He received his degree from Idaho in 1978 with a bachelor's in science degree in distributive education. Tormey is the first Idaho graduate to coach at his alma mater since James A. Brown in 1945-46.

Tormey and his wife Kellie have two daughters — Leah, 5, and Emily, 4. He is born on May 1, 1955.

1995 Vandal Outlook

It has not been the normal off-season for the University of Idaho football team. But if things hold true to form it will be the normal fall for the Vandals as they prepare for their final season in the Big Sky Conference and take their final run at an NCAA 1AA championship.

For the fourth time in the last 15 years, the Vandal program will head into a season with a new head coach. John L. Smith left the Idaho program at the beginning of the new year and within a week the Vandals found their successor, former University of Washington defensive coordinator Chris Tormey.

The Idaho program has established itself as one not built on one coaching staff or recruiting class. Since 1982, the Vandals have the second best, winning percentage in NCAA 1AA football and have made 10 playoff appearances.

If Tormey can repeat the inaugural season success of his predecessors, then Idaho again will be nationally ranked and in the playoffs. In 1982 Dennis Erickson had an unimpaired team to a 9-4 mark and to the quarterfinals of the 1-AA playoffs. Keith Gilbertson’s first Vandal team posted an 8-4 record in 1986 and advanced to the first round of the playoffs. Smith’s first team in 1989 won the Big Sky Conference title, posted a 9-2 record and advanced to the first round of the playoffs.

The good news for Tormey and Idaho fans is that all the pieces are in place for another run at the conference championship.

“Tormey’s got a great work ethic, that’s what’s impressed me the most,” says Tormey. “The chemistry of this senior group is the key to their leadership.”

Tormey should know a little bit about what it takes to win. During his 13-year association with the University of Washington, the Huskies made 10 bowl appearances six of those in the Rose Bowl and was part of the 1991 team that posted a 12-0 record and won the national championship. He also coached on Dennis Erickson’s first staff at Idaho in 1982.

Idaho returns 34 letterwinners, seven starters on offense, six starters on defense and three all-Americans — offensive tackle Jim Mills, defensive end Ryan Phillips and placekicker Ryan Woolverton.

“Obviously the strength of our team is the offensive and defensive lines,” says Tormey. “We need to keep playing our attacking style of defense, putting pressure on the quarterback while protecting our quarterback.”

Idaho was the nation’s best in stopping the run, but needs to make improvements in stopping the pass to win a Big Sky title.

“We’ve got some players in our secondary that can become effective players. Eleven guys play pass defense. A great pass rush is a key to great pass defense.”

Tormey won’t change what has made Idaho one of the nation’s most successful programs over the last 14 years.

“We’re going to make refinements, not drastic changes. We want to keep balance on this team. We would like to dominate defensively as well as offensively.”

Tormey hopes those refinements are what takes Idaho over the top to a Big Sky championship in 1995 and into the future when the Vandals join the Big West Conference in 1996.

Dan Seals charms crowds at Palouse Fair

Justin Cason
Staff

The farmlands of western Washington were ignited last Friday evening when country singer Dan Seals played a 70-minute set at the Palouse Empire Fair in Colfax.

Armed with an acoustic 12-string and a love for song, Seals thrilled the audience with everything from his older chart-toppers to tracks off his brand new album, Fired Up.

After being introduced to huge applause, Seals opened with one of his most popular songs, "Big Wheels in the Moonlight," then followed with what turned out to be one of the best songs of the night, "They Rage On."

Even with years of performing and recording, Seals still has kept his small-town values and mentality evident in his music, and Friday night's concert was definitely no exception.

In between about every other song, he took a little time to talk to the audience about his roots, where he's been, and even where he's going with this new album. Seals kept an otherwise chilly night red-hot with toe-tappers such as "Headin' West," classics like "I'd Really Love to See You Tonight!" and even a pretty humorous tune about New York City.

Backed up Seals were Charles Steven Earls on bass and John Porter McMeans on 6-string guitar. McMeans, a real asset to the acoustic performance, has written songs in the past for acts like George Strait and Kenny Rogers.

One of the many highlights of the evening was "My Old Yellow Car," a song just about anybody who's owned a beat-up but trustworthy old car or truck could relate to. "If engines could run on desire alone, my old yellow car would be driving me home," sang a heartened Seals.

Another high point was "God Must be a Cowboy," Seals' very first top 10 country single. Not being an avid fan of country, this song—along with many others—got me to take a second look at country music, Dan Seals' older albums, in particular.

For those not familiar with him, Seals' music sounds something like John Mellencamp or Bruce Springsteen turned country-western. Seals sings of small towns, small town people and growing up.

The concert concluded with his hits "Good Times," where Seals showed off his saxophone playing skills, and "We Are One," a song off his 1992 album, Walking the Wire.

Seals' songs kept their flair and spirit throughout the entirety of the evening, withstanding cold temperatures and a sometimes quiet crowd.

For the most part, though, the audience was extremely receptive to the singer in what was an outstanding small, down-home concert.

However, Seals did comment a few days before the show, "I'm still learning how to sing, how to perform."

Judging from his concert last Friday, he doesn't have much left to learn.

Country western singer Dan Seals shows his appreciation for his fans by visiting and signing autographs after his concert Friday night.

Sci-fi fair kicks off today at Quality Inn

Jeremy Chase

Moscon XVII, a science fiction convention for the Moscow-Pullman area, will be held today through Sunday at the Quality Inn at Pullman. Guests of honor at the convention will be author Mel Gilden and artist Phil Foglio.

The convention, sponsored by the Palouse Empire Science Fiction Association, will feature everything from sci-fi authors and artists, to gaming and role-playing, and a masquerade competition.

Donna Bailly, a member of PESFA, said that the convention is simply there for people who like science fiction. "It's to help promote science fiction," she said. "It's also to have a nice, fun, informative time over the weekend."

Two notables in this year's convention will be Mel Gilden and Phil Foglio. Gilden, the convention author guest of honor, has written several children's books, his books for adults include "Surfing Samurai Robots" as well as three "Star Trek" novels.

Foglio, the artist guest of honor, is a cartoonist that has worked for DC Comics as a writer and artist, he also was an artist for the "Magic" card-playing games, and has done other work with science fiction. This weekend he and his wife Kaja will be presenting "The Capture," a humorous slide show about alien abduction. "He's such a good artist!" Bailly said. "They (Phil and Kaja) are such a good comedy duo, too."

Bailly also said that Foglio, as well as Gilden, will be around for the entire weekend to talk to people and host panel discussions.

Other authors and artists at the convention will be Eileen Brady, Algis Budry, John Dalmas, M.J. Engh, Ruth Frey, Jim Glass, Gill Glass, Barb Hendee, J.C. Hendee, Jon Gustafson, David Graham, Vicki Mitchell, Claudia Fock, and David Weber.

Among the numerous activities planned for the three day convention are panel discussions. Bailly said panels will meet over the three days and talk about relevant issues in science fact and fiction. Topics for this weekend include star colony travel that is capable with today's technology, time travel, and the changing face of the science fiction fan.

"It's a nice way for people to meet others that like sci-fi," Bailly said. "You can discuss your favorite sci-fi movies, books, or general science." She also said the times for the panel discussions vary on the different days, and will be directed by convention special guests.

In the realm of general science, Bailly said that another part of the convention will include an update on NASA's Hubbel Telescope. Dr. Julie Lotz, a professor with a doctorate in math at Washington State University, will be presenting the update. The presentation will begin at 10:00 a.m. Sunday.

On the not-so-scientific or even serious side, a masquerade is also planned for Saturday night of the convention. Bailly said regular shows of Klingons, swordsmen, and even unidentified organisms are around for the masquerade, and are eventually judged for a winner. "Whoever wants to put on a costume to be judged can enter the competition," she said.

Daily activities for the weekend include role-playing and board gaming, an art exhibit—to be followed by an auction on Sunday, a video room, writing workshops, and a Japanimation viewing room.

Above everything, Bailly hopes everyone has fun at the event, especially meeting the guests of honor. "It's a smaller convention so you can meet the guests," she said. "They'll be here for the entire weekend."

In the future, Bailly and the PESFA are trying to develop a regional sci-fi convention to be held in Spokane. "It takes a lot of planning," she said. "We're trying to get to be the largest convention in the West." The target date for the convention will be, appropriately, sometime in 1999.

Admission, to cover the costs of flying in guests and set-up, will be $22 for all three days, $15 for Saturday only, and $10 for Friday or Sunday. Payment admission for any of the days will allow access to any event at the convention, except for a farewell brunch on Sunday.

River Project reunites

Erik Marone

Staff

The popular local band The River Project has grown since last spring, and are ready to resume entertaining the Palace once again. The addition of three new musicians makes a loud of seven for the group that got its start several years ago. Personnel additions are Matt on lead guitar, James on congo and Run on drums. Kristen, the band's returning sax player, has added flute to the band's sound as well.

"It's really improved the sound, I think. It's brought us closer to the music," says veteran bass player Kurt. Vocalist and rhythm guitar player Jay adds that "Run's laying down rhythms for us now that has taken us a step further from where we were." As for the sound as a whole, the best description the band could collectively come up with is "Dry wallin' psycho babble on the funk tip on the rocks with a twist of lime and a side of tobacco."

"We are our own group of people, so we can't categorically compare ourselves to others because what they do is different. We can't compare ourselves to anyone else and they can't compare themselves to us," new drummer Run says. "What we do is unique to us; nobody does what we do."

They plan to tape the show for a demo tape to submit to Atlantic's talent agency.

"There's all that bullshit about selling out. I think we'll all enjoy making a living out of playing music. The way to do that financially is through a major record label," says Jay.

"It's too expensive to do it on your own."

If a record deal doesn't present itself, that's just fine with the band as well. Kurt says the band has been playing for three years in a number of incarnations, and still has yet to turn a profit. Jay says, "If we wanted to make money, we'd just stay a three-piece."

Kurt adds, "It's for the music and the feeling of playing."

The band notes a kind of tension in Moscow between musicians. Although there is cooperation, there seems to be a kind of competition. "There tends to be your university musicians and then the Moscow musicians, and sometimes they overlap, and I think that's where some of the tension is," Kristen notes.

"There definitely two spheres in the music situation. There are so many Moscow musicians who are talented, but might be oriented toward more of a folk or less audible sound, they don't get the attention they deserve, but the big, loud bands get all the attention, and that creates some tension too," Matt says. "We are all good musicians, we all play well with each other and we all enjoy music in general. That's what makes us different from, not better than another band. That needs to be a subjective attitude."

They hope to start traveling around the northwest for shows in the fall. They have potential shows coming up in Missouri, Sandpoint, Eugene and Portland. Their first local show of the fall is tomorrow night at John's Alley, with a tentative show at the Rabidus the first weekend of October.

Sweet Water opens up about past

Matt Baldwin

A cacophony of voices reverberated amongst a crowd of students. Each voice rose to a high pitch then lowered until it all stopped when Sweet Water hit the stage at Washington State University's ballroom.

Before the show was a time to question Sweet Water on their humble beginnings and later success.

"I'm not really a protagonist and an antagonist in each song."

—Adam Czeisler Lead vocals

Sweet Water, a Seattle band, is comprised of four people: Adam Czeisler, lead vocals; R. Cole Peterson, electric bass guitar and backing vocals; Paul K. Uhlir, drums and backing vocals; Rich Credo, lead and rhythm guitars and backing vocals.

"We all went to high school together and we've known each other from a very young age. We met on a bus going to camp," Adam Czeisler said.

Czeisler goes onto to tell a story about Rich Credo's jaunt into the world of formal guitar instruction.

"There was this one guy named Chuck Bennett. He was a guitar teacher. I asked him what school he went to and he said the school of hard knocks. Chuck Bennett was great; 65 year old guitar teacher. He gave me all lessons. But after awhile he had us play these things called triads and that was it."

For a few years they played in bands together during high school where Sweet Water's first premordial version was formed, SGM. While all of the members of SGM, excluding Czeisler who was a year ahead, were seniors in high school they were signed to the now defunct Medusa/Enigma label. Soon after Czeisler left SGM to pursue a career in college.

"Six months after SGM broke up we formed Sweet Water," Peterson said. During the early days of Sweet Water Czeisler was not in the band.

"I wanted to go to school and get out of Seattle. When I was growing up I always figured I would leave my home town. So I went to the University of California at Santa Cruz. It was great for a couple of years. That city is really weird. It is totally isolated from the rest of the country. So after two years there I could not literally take it any more. And these guys were traveling up in their van and Credo came in and said come on lets go. This was in '88 or '89," Czeisler said.

At that time they were playing with some of Seattle's now notable bands. It was around this time the entire Seattle music scene was exploding. The Seattle music scene was exploding.
