Health and Nutrition Fair graces Student Union

Students and faculty tasted garden burgers, experienced massage therapy and tried their cholesterol tests as they wandered through the Student Union yesterday.

The 1995 Health and Nutrition Fair was held Oct. 19 from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in an attempt to help participants take charge of their health, learn about their bodies and become aware of the health-related services available to them.

As fair-goers walked in the door of the Student Union they received a smilie, a apple and a Health Fair pamphlet containing a listing of the fair exhibitors. The pamphlet also contained a personal health data chart to record the information learned at the exhibit including body fat composition, blood pressure, lung capacity, neck, shoulder and back evaluation.

"The fair was well organized and a great opportunity for students on campus," said Robert G. Fernandez, 25-year-old senior at UI.

The fair included approximately 70 exhibitors in the area of health. Among them were dietetics groups measuring body fat, dental offices handing out toothbrushes and toothpaste, massage therapists giving free massages, campus police talking about bike safety and various food companies handing out samples of nutritious foods.

"The representation at the fair is at the highest quality," said Mary Schwartz, coordinator of the Health and Nutrition Fair. "Exhibitors have to go through a screening process, we don't let just anyone in."

The Student Union was swarming with students by 10:15 a.m. Participants were all smiles as they carried handfuls of samples and clutched about the outcomes of their eye examinations and dental bacteria counts.

"The fair has always been very successful," said Schwartz. "This is the fifth year we have had the Health Fair on campus outside of football games."

The fair also enlightened students to the seriousness of problems such as high blood pressure and cholesterol levels, and encouraged them to follow up on any personal health test that concerned them.

"My blood pressure is a little high, I never really thought about checking it before," said Jamie Rettsco, a 21-year-old senior at UI. "It's very encouraging to know that people care enough about the health and safety of students to put the fair on."

The Health and Nutrition Fair was started seven years ago to teach preventive medicine and student wellness.

"People need to learn all they can about their bodies," explained Schwartz, "and they need to take charge of their health."

Math and Statistics Department to divide

Christopher Clancy

A unanimous vote by the Faculty Council brings recognition to a long debated division of the Mathematics and Statistics Department. The former department will consist of two separate entities to be known as the Department of Mathematics and the Division of Statistics.

The name change was approved by the University Curriculum Committee on Sept. 15 before being presented to the Faculty Council on Tuesday. According to a memo from the UCC, the proposed change should take effect beginning July 1, 1995 once it has been approved at the state level.

According to an Idaho State Board of Education form, "no new money" will be required to form the division. Though the issue raised concern among faculty members prior to the vote. "More than a name change...there's no doubt it's going to cost more," said Professor of Mathematics, Bill Voxman. "There's no strong opposition, but there is concern."

Senator turns down RHA, Darakjy steps down as lobbyist

E motions ran high Wednesday at the senate meeting. While a senate bill appropriating funds for a Residence Hall Association conference was turned down, some senators are concerned with communicating with President William No. 7, providing $1,000 for RHA. A leadership conference is scheduled for mid-November in Boulder, Colo. Students associated with the cause waited help from the ASUI in funding for their trip.

There were 12 senators present Wednesday afternoon. However, the bill appropriating funds for RHA came to a vote, five senators voted for the appropriation and and seven did not.

Many students from residence halls were present to show their support for the bill. Manny said, "I voted yes. I felt it was important to pass because I didn't view it as others did. I viewed it as an opportunity to help encourage leadership which was the one of the things that I thought we were supposed to be doing this year."

One of the seven senators who voted no on the bill was Senator John Thomashil. "First of all I spoke to my living groups and they disagree with it. I am an opportunity to help encourage leadership which was one of the things that I thought we were supposed to be doing this year."

The senators are concerned with President Wilson's communications with the senate. "There is a certain level of separation from the president and the senate. There are questions that I've had and I try to go and ask him and he is not there," said Senator David Hidalgo. "He's a representative of the ASUI and he should keep us informed," said Senator David Hidalgo.

Wilson and Interim President Dr. Thomas Bell were in Twin Falls, Idaho as the state Board of Education met.

Dakajy has stepped down from his appointment of ASUI Lobbyist. The resignation was driven by personal reasons.

Deputing state worker says Batt wanted to downplay problem

PRESTON, Idaho—A deputing state employee says his boss, Gov. Phil Batt, told workers at his state agency to downplay the seriousness of Preston’s under- ground nuclear tests. In a Saturday story, the Logan Herald Journal said Tuesday a incopyrighted story.

A representative of Batt, assistant press secretary Julie Pipel, denied that the governor issued orders to anyone on how to deal with the Preston situation.

She said when state and local officials are working together, there’s an “unwritten rule” that local authorities be apprised of any media content in those.

Scott Simon, who left his state job in August to become a Progressive native West Virginia, said last spring, he discovered eight inches of petroleum products floating on top of water in a monitor well at Preston.

He alleged that because of pressure from Mayor Walter Ross, Batt directed the Division of Environmental Quality to downplay the seriousness of the contamination problem.

“Politics definitely played a role here,” Simon said, maintaining Preston problem should be considered a crisis.

Ross said he called Batt after getting a little有点 from agency officials. He said he didn’t ask that the matter be downplayed, but rather that Environmental Quality councilors go over giving information to the media without Ross’s knowledge.

The fiscal responsibility is with the EPA and the DEQ,” he said. “They should have found the problem, they’re the ones who have the funds and the people to clean it up.”

Gritz: blacks would be welcome in ‘Covenant’ community

BOISE—Bo Gritz says if they were to welcome them, blacks would be welcome in his “Covenant” community he’s developing near Boise.

“You’d be welcomed,” he said to a television reporter who ques- tioned his views before the community opens Tuesday.

“You’ve welcome up there if you’re American,” he said.

Gritz was in Boise for a lecture a few weeks ago at Boise State University.

The former Green Beret and special forces colonel lives in Nevada, where he conducts counterterrorism training.

But he’s developing “Almost Heaven,” a community he hopes will attract like-minded people. It’s just outside Kamiah in north-central Idaho. Gritz said by next year he hopes it will cover 1,000 acres

Canadian family in limbo after daughter’s death

KELOWNA, British Columbia—Time has helped heal the pain for Jean Cusworth two years after a 19-year-old daughter died. But the grief resurfaces sometimes, especially when she turns to the daughter's 19-year-old daughter.

She said the daughter's death was just one of the challenges she faced since her daughter was killed.

Since the murder, local investiga- tions have been conducted, interviews with broken hearted survivors, including 140 people who were at a party Jennifer attended shortly before she died.

Police produced and updated a TV re-enactment of Jennifer’s killing every week.

Meanwhile, a reward fund worth $5,000 sits unclaimed in a local bank.

We’re all a little bit traumatised right now. It’s happened too many times,” said Anne Guercio, a tourist who took the subway way of getting to work.

Not a single tourist was seen in the station, and only three members of the subway staff were standing guard on the escalators above.

“We’ve already hit this sta- tion, so it’s pretty safe to be here,” said Jeanne Alexander, a tourist from Charleston, S.C., who arrived for a visit Tuesday morning with two friends.

Food, dance, contests all part of Ag Days

Janel Birdsell

The annual Ag Days celebration is under way with a contest, food, and competition.

The first event, "Who's Got the Best Student Participation," took place this morning at 10 a.m. before the outside lunch in the library. Following the judging, the chilli will be served at around 11:30 a.m.

"We'll have 25 gallons of chilli and the judges will judge the outside lunch," said organizer Craig Dean.

The contest is sponsored by the University of Idaho Food Science Club and KZZI radio. Over $500 in prizes and gift certificates have been donated by 20 local businesses. Dean said that most students will attend the activities and food fair from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Ag Annex.

The second event is the "Ag Days Fair" which will be held from 4 to 6 p.m. in the Ag Annex. The fair will feature a chili cook-off, a cake sale, and other activities.

The third event is the "Ag Days Dance" which will be held from 8 to 11 p.m. in the Ag Annex. The dance will feature live music and a cash bar.

The final event is the "Ag Days Rodeo" which will be held from 8 to 11 p.m. in the Ag Annex. The rodeo will feature bull riding, calf roping, and other rodeo events.

Tolo Lake reveals ancient secrets

Sean Teten

Researchers are continuing to excavate mammoths discovered in September 1994, at Tolo Lake, near Grangeville, Idaho.

Dr. Lee Sappington, associate professor of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Idaho, presented preliminary findings at a Department of Electrical Engineering Research Colloquium Tuesday.

Tolo is a natural lake and a historic Nez Perce Indian campsite. The 30 acre lake was dredged last year to enable the support of fish, and to create an environment for water fowl. In the process of removing material from the lake bottom, large bones were revealed.

"The machinery that went through there scraped the edge of a tusk," Sappington said, pointing to a slide. "The tusk has a classic mammoth curve to it, and is about seven feet long."

There are various sites containing bones of separate mammoths that were established at Tolo Lake. Two of the sites contain large bones of immature mammoth, and one site contains small bones of a mature mammoth. Sappington said they have found evidence of Columbia Mammoth, bison, and potential mammoth-hunter artifacts.

The Columbia Mammoth is most commonly discovered in the United States. However, the smaller bones found at Tolo Lake may indicate an important discovery. "We think it could be a Woody Mammoth," Sappington said. "They are rare to find..."

Binge drinking addressed on campus

Mike McNulty
Staff

Following a week of work, football practice, marching band and a full load on campus, some education students Edward Howard and Nick Rizzo sometimes just want to sit down to some serious drinking.

Wednesday night, after each downed a "fish bowl" of beer downtown, had a few bottles of Boise's Farm wine and stared in on a half case of suds, it was time for a heated match of Nerf basketball. A time to forget about everything for a while, relax and goof off.

"I don't consider myself someone who needs to drink," said former Vandal punter Edward Howard. "I consider myself someone that drinks to have fun and unwind."

In many ways, Howard and Rizzo are representative of college students everywhere faced with the dilemma of juggling jobs, family, friends and school. They are looking for a quick release from the stress associated with college life.

For Rizzo, Howard and other students, the juggling act often leads to what is now being called binge drinking.

One of the most recent trends to emerge from numerous studies concerning alcohol abuse is binge drinking which is generally defined as consuming five or more drinks in one sitting.

A recent study by the Harvard School of Public Health, published in the Journal of American Medical Association, surveyed almost 18,000 students at 140 colleges in 40 states nationwide. Their results show 44 percent of the students surveyed reported binge drinking and 19 percent qualified as frequent bingers.

An October survey by the Argonaut of 127 University of Idaho students displayed results which generally agree with the national statistics.

The student paper reported on Oct. 6, nearly 25 percent were binge drinkers in the two weeks previous to the study and 4 percent consumed alcohol daily.

By the time Nick Rizzo, 22, gets home on Thursdays, he has finished a morning work out, attended class until 4 p.m. and coached his flag football team. He works as a drummer in a local rock and roll band on Friday and Saturday evenings, so looks forward to his "Thursday night black-out" where he can party with friends.

"When I go out and drink, I don't go out with the mind set that I'm going to get wasted," Rizzo said as he finished the last of his beer. "It just kind of happens sometimes when I finish and have a chance to hang out with all my friends."

Although 83 percent of students polled in the UI study reported drinking as a problem on campus, Howard, 23, said the situation is not as bad as people believe.

"If you're the type of person that buys a 12 pack and sits in your room by yourself and drinks, you have a problem," Howard said.

"But if you're going out with your friends and drinking, then that's a different story."

Steve Saladin, a psychologist at the Student Counseling Center, disagrees with the notion that students are dealing with stress by binge drinking.

"Binge drinking is a coping mechanism where you're escaping rather than dealing with the cause of stress," Saladin said.
Unidentified man charged in grocery store robbery

An unknown man has been charged in connection with a Tuesday evening armed robbery of Moscow's Safeway store.

After being charged under the aliases Jeffrey Lambert and Mike Walker, the man, known only as John Doe until his actual name is confirmed by the magistrate in court Wednesday morning, he goes by the name Lambert.

"Sometimes it is almost impossible to make a positive identification because people use aliases," said Chief Jim McIlvain.

Doe was charged with robbery and now faces a $15,000 fine and five years to life in prison. He is scheduled for a preliminary hearing Friday.

According to police reports, Doe demanded money from a store clerk, who said she couldn't open the register until she got her money. He then displayed a silver pistol which was studied in his pants and left with $109, a 6-pack of Pepsi and a newspaper.

The suspect ran from Safeway at about 9:50 a.m. and sped off in a light blue Datun hatchback with California license plates. He subsequently crashed into a fence before heading east on Highway 84.

As a result of the erratic escape, one of the license plates fell off and was found by police in a ditch off Mountain View Road.

Police traced the license plate to the Super 8 Motel in Moscow where Doe was registered with a woman and her child since Monday afternoon.

A special task force, led by the Moscow Police Department, surrounded the motel and had Doe to surrender. Doe jumped through a rear window of the room and was stopped by officers who arrested him.

"We believe him to be the suspect," said Moscow Lt. Dale Michelsen.

After securing a search warrant of the room, detectives recovered $90, the newspaper, the Pepsi and a silver handgun along with bullets and a holster.

Police are waiting for a fingerprint match before confirming the man's identity. The woman, known as Kimberly Meyer or Kimberly Cluger told police she was a friend of Doe's from California. She and her child were released after questioning.

The police found a blue Datun believed to be the getaway vehicle on the University of Idaho campus Wednesday in a parking lot behind the KUID television station.

The car is being processed for evidence and fingerprints.

In court Wednesday, Doe told Magistrate William Hartung he left lived in Anchorage, AK, where he worked in the fishing industry. The Moscow-Pullman Daily News reported Wednesday, a Jeffrey Lambert had been arrested in Alaska for at least two offenses.

"We have been contacted by outside agencies who are interested in the suspect," Michelsen said Thursday.

John Doe is scheduled to be tried by the Spokane County Sheriff's Department on outstanding warrants in the area, Michelsen said.

GAMMA makes Greeks aware

Jennifer Eng
Staff
Greeks participated all week in a program to show people they are aware of alcohol. GAMMA, Greeks Advocating the Maintenance and Management of Alcohol, set up a competition this week for Greek chapters on campus to compete as part of the national collegiate alcohol competition.

Chris Wiesch, Greek advisor, said, "As a university and as a school district, we have to try hard to promote a safe and healthy environment.

Members of GAMMA went to chapters on campus to advocate alcohol awareness and to inform houses of the competition this week.

Greeks gathered at the Delta Sigma Phi house to listen to representatives (votec) Alcoholics Anonymous talk about their program.

One representative said AA is not a temperance movement, a person is only diagnosed as an alcoholic if they diagnose themselves.

The representative said that members of AA must go through their actions who can live another day.

As part of their awareness program, GAMMA and AA encouraged people who think they might have a problem to go to try to get assistance on campus and in the community.

As part of the competition, participating Greeks made signs advocating alcohol awareness and posted them on the front of their houses on Wednesday in competition for points.

The winner of the poster competition were the women of Gamma Phi Beta.

Along with the posters each competing chapter had to submit a list of non-alcoholic exchange ideas. The winners in this area were the men of Delta Tau Delta as first place, Alpha Kappa Lambda in second place and Gamma Phi Beta in third.

The Student Union was the place to be for health and wellness issues Thursday. For the health fair, GAMMA had a booth to give information to people who didn't drink alcohol, GAMMA worked with the free drinks to people stopping by the booth.

Prizes were awarded to the chapter with the most members per capita to attend the health fair. Delta Sigma Phi won with the most members in attendance. Overall there was a three way tie for first, Gamma Phi Beta, Delta Tau Delta and Delta Sigma Phi.

Chili Cook-off will ‘blow your guts away’

Justin Oliver Rueen

Pass the peppers! The Third Annual North Idaho Chili Cook-off will be held this morning on the Library lawn. The contest is sponsored by the University of Idaho Food Science Club and KZZL Palouse Country Radio, and opens the UI Ag Days celebration. The cook-off is the biggest fundraiser of the year for the Food Science Club, said club member Craig Doan.

“The Food Science Club is a non-profit student organization within the UI. The major function of the club is professional development and speaking skills oriented toward the technical end of food science,” as well as presenting graduates and undergraduate papers said Doan.

The club uses funds generated from the chili cook-off to attend regional and national conferences. This year the club spent a week at a conference in Anaheim, California.

“This is the third year for the chili cook-off, and it originated as just a challenge among members within the club. Last year it went to a public challenge, and this year we will have 25-30 competitors,” Doan explained.

This year’s contest will include the 1994 winner and the 1994 Tolino Chili Cook-off Champion from Texas, Doan said. The rules include mandatory use of UI College of Agriculture beans and all varieties of chili. The chili is judged between 10 a.m. and 11 a.m. in tents between the library and the library. Following the judging, the chili will be sold to the public for $1 a cup or $2 for all you can eat. The judges include Food Science Professor Larry Breen, Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology Department Head James Nelson, and Professor of Education Terry Armstrong.

The event is “quite popular,” Doan said. Last year we had a dozen entrants, and this was in the beginning stage.”

Prizes include over $500 to be divided to the first 10 places, and the winner’s name is put on a trophy which is displayed in the College of Agriculture. The event is “hugely competitive,” Doan said. “These people are literally out to blow your guts away.”

PhI will split up the prize money, each chapter, will receive $50 cash. Swearingen, a co-chair for the University of Idaho’s GAMMA chapter and the area representative, said about the National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Work competition, “It was exciting to see chapters get involved.”

Wuthrich said alcohol awareness week has really developed over the last year. GAMMA has had great participation from members and would like to see more individual people come out and name the information back to their chapters.

We’re hoping this is the first in a series of small events, she said. “The National Consciousness” of GAMMA.

“GAMMA has a lot of activities during the year. For Greek Week they hold a banquet, before spring break they hold a safe spring break week and throughout the year they deliver messages about health and wellness issues,” Wuthrich said.

Wuthrich said membership in GAMMA has really increased this year with 20 fully active members. Lori Kouzmanoff, vice-president of Pan Helene and GAMMA member said, “GAMMA membership has really taken off this year. We’ve had a really good response from all of the chapters on campus.”

From Nov. 2 through Nov. 4 some of the members from the Gamma and Lambda chapter will be going to Washington D.C. for the national conference. At this conference Swearingen will be running one of the two seats as student trustee. The national office would send Swearingen to Washington D.C. to attend conferences, plan the National Assembly for GAMMA and testify in front of congressional committees.

A Heart-stopping, A Spellbinding Horror

“JERET MASLIN, NEW YORK TIMES

The Mummy’s Curse of the Pharaohs

In the Continental United States. If this is a Woody Mammont, it will be the first one for anywhere in the Northwest,” Sappington said research at Tolo Lake continues to vary. It depends on, and on Fish and Game management,” he said. “Some people would rather have the lake to go fishing, and some would rather have the mamonth presere. We are trying to work out a compromise so we can work there another season or two.”

The UI Research Office is the owner of funds for the project at this time. Sappington added con- firmation of discovering a Woody Mammont, and mamonth-hunting artifacts, should improve the chance of additional funding from outside sources. But they pushed researchers behind schedule. “We want to do ground control first, and then radiology,” Sappington said, “but it has to be dry. The things we have been waiting for this fall, we can do next summer.”

Mammonts are believed to have crossed a land bridge from north- eastern Asia and Siberia, into North America over 1.5 million years ago. Mamons found in Idaho may have migrated via large passes in a glacier covering most of the Northwest during the last ice age.
Contrary to belief, you have a voice

The Argonaut is once again out to try something new. So what? Well, here’s the deal.

Have you looked at the front of the paper lately? Well, up at the top of the page is the masthead which proclaims the name of the paper in bold, colored letters. Look underneath the name. It says “The Student’s Voice.”

This isn’t something we’ve really put into strict practice in the past, and you’ve all been on the fence about it. But for the paper’s sake, and for the sake of all the profs, I’ve decided it’s high time the columnists opened up a little bit. You heard me. A little bit.

Here’s the deal. I’m going to give you a chance to speak out in the form of our new “Guest Columnists” network. If you want to write a column, here are some guidelines: It must be type-written, double-spaced and at least two pages in length; slanted and libelous columns will not be printed; and arguments must be expressed with clarity and with a minimum of slang and jargon.

Unsolicited columns are welcome; however, columns which are written to rebut previous columns published in the Argonaut should be written in an extraordi’nary way, and should offer rebuttal to the ideas presented and not advance the argument based on an ad hominem attack. Columns attacking other writers instead of debating ideas will not be published.

The University of Idaho is one of the most apathetic campuses (relative to other campuses I’ve read about and been on). I’m doing my part to try to change this. In a democracy, we cannot—and, we dare not—become apathetic to what happens around us lest we lose those very things we foresaw that democracy is supposed to stand for. We must become involved!

Freedom of speech and freedom of the press are essential ingredients in our society. I have always been of the opinion that you have no right to complain about anything unless you make an effort to change it. My column will attempt to do this. One of the columns we can change policy and public opinion through is the press. Here’s your chance—don’t blow it.

—Russ Wright

Batt gives in to nuke waste

Governer Phil Batt has let the federal government march all over Idaho’s rights. After fighting for nearly a year to stop more nuclear waste shipments from entering Idaho, Batt has made a deal with the federal government which does not allow them to dump 110 TONS of new high-level nuclear waste in Idaho, but also guarantees the Federal Government that it does not have to have the nuclear waste cleaned up until the year 2035— 40 years down the road. We all know how good the federal government is at keeping promises. Just look at how bad this country has screwed the Native Americans. Repeately. Chances are the federal government has no intention whatsoever of cleaning up the waste they have dumped in Idaho. We’re just another western state to be used as the east’s garbage pit. Batt should not have made any concessions with the federal government. Navy claims that it was a matter of national security that this waste be dumped in Idaho. National security, my ass. If it were that pressing the Navy would surely have found somewhere else to store it. Like New York City, for instance—the place is already cramped, nobody would even notice.

The Ripple Effect of the O.J. Simpson trial continues

ike most of you, I’m sure, I am dug-ugly tired of hearing about O.J. and his three-ring-circus trial. For me, a year is more than enough time to spend concentrating on an over-policed, soap-opener, who-do-it-done. Frankly, I’ve got a bit too important things to juggle: homework, rent, social criticisms. (Hey, did you know the National Student Federation has the inside scoop on Nicole Brown? For heaven’s sake.)

What does continue to interest me is the ripple effect of the O.J. trial on other crimes. The effects the outcome of the O.J. trial has spawned. Approximately 150 million Americans were witnesses as a not-guilty verdicted opened a Pandora’s box of racial tension and violence across the country and concerns.

Society’s views on domestic violence, the effectiveness of the judicial system, and integrity of our law enforcement has come under intense scrutiny. The American population has found itself immersed in a soul-searching process of reviewing the present state of our country’s ethics and morals.

Society’s views on domestic violence, the effectiveness of the judicial system, and integrity of our law enforcement has come under intense scrutiny. The American Simpson is distrust and fear. And I’m not just talking about the fear and distrust between the races but rather that which is found among everyday people on the street. The O.J. case highlights a turbulent period of recent history. Incident in the news of late, such as the Oklahoma bombing, the Amtrak train derailment, as well as everyday occurrences like drive-by shootings, rape, robbery, kidnapping and murders have left the American people clutching their children to their chests and double-bolting their doors. The perception that we are not safe is creeping into the public consciousness. No one is safe—not in the workplace, home, street, or school—from the plague of violence.

It reminds me of a professional woman who began a casual conversation with me while I waited to be picked up from the Kansas City Airport last August on a trip to visit my mother. As we discussed the weather and current events, the conversation slowly turned to the subject of sex. This woman, who lived in the small college town of Manhattan, Kansas, had returned from a seminar to Chicago to view a Monet exhibit in the Chicago Museum of Fine Arts. Prior to her departure, she was counseled by her husband and numerous friends of a parlor of a woman traveling alone. She was armed with numerous cases of salt and pepper sprays, advised to avoid desert streets and not to leave her hotel room alone at night. The advice had made her so paranoid, she couldn’t even leave the hotel. The advice had made her so paranoid, she couldn’t even leave the hotel. The letter also asks for help in passing legislation to protect the family.

Column on target

This is in response to Fred Christiansen's guest commentary, "Disarming Idaho's Conservation Officers Unsafe for Everyone," in Friday's Argonaut. Idaho's Sen. Craig and Rep. Chenoweth have proposed taking sidearms away from conservation officers. I was shocked to learn that Sen. Larry Craig would support such legislation. Sen. Craig is a member of the board of the National Rifle Association. He and the NRA have always championed the law enforcement community. For Sen. Craig to support, much less propose, disarming conservation officers is a slap in the face to the entire law enforcement community and it is blatantly hypocritical of him. Unfortunately, I doubt the NRA will take a stance against one of their strongest allies and will probably remain silent on the issue.

It is insane to think about sending unarmed agents into remote places to confront well-armed individuals. I was not surprised that Rep. Chenoweth would support legislation that would effectively sentence some federal employees to death, but Sen. Craig should take a good look at his stance and decide whether he wants to be consistent in his values or do a flip-flop and become wishy-washy on crime. This is not just a law enforcement issue. It would also harm outdoor recreational opportunities for all ethical hunters and anglers. I emphasize "ethical" to differentiate two sportmen from poachers and those who do not respect game laws.

As an avid hunter and fisherman, I abhor the thought of what condition our game species would be in if we ceased to have an effective way of enforcing game laws. Imagine an unarmed conservation officer walking into an encampment of weekend poachers in some remote part of the Selway. Spikes, cows and a couple of calves have been taken. What is the conservation officer going to do miles from the nearest paved road, unarmed and alone surrounded by six well-armed individuals? About all he/she could do is politely ask if anyone would object to having a ticket written. The conservation officer would not be in a position to confiscate the illegal kill for evidence much less confiscate any of the guns or take anyone into custody. In effect, taking away the sidearms of law enforcement is like declaring a wild cat and then letting it loose, claiming it do no harm. We could very well see a free-for-all which would ruin sport hunting and fishing opportunities for everyone. Conservation officers support the wildlife laws which are designed to maintain enough game for future stock and thus enough game for all true sportmen. This proposed legislation is anti-law enforcement, anti-hunter, anti-fisherman and has the potential to ruin the fishing and hunting opportunities that all true sportmen know and love.

Argonaut Letters & Guest Columns Policy

The Argonaut welcomes reader letters and guest columns. Letters must be one page or less typed, double spaced, be signed and include the phone number and address of each writer. Letters may also be submitted by e-mail to argonaut@uidaho.edu or by fax (208) 882-2222. The Argonaut reserves the right to refuse or edit letters. Only one letter per month will be accepted from a single author. Guest columns must go through the same editing and approval process as our staff columns.
Issue of abortion starts with words

"Those whom we want out of the way must be aborted in words before it becomes permissible to abort them in deed," said Paul Greenburg of the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette. Recent celebrations of diversity awareness and banned books make a good backdrop for discussion of the extreme name-calling which tends to go on in newspapers over the issue of abortion.

For a great term paper, try "Dehumanizing the Vulnerable: When Word Games Take Lives" by William Brennan, sociologist, leading scholar on the Nazi Holocaust, and professor at St. Louis University Chicago: Loyola University Press, 1995.

Dr. Brennan provides excellent proof of the semantic parallels between the words frequently used in our society and media to describe today's most defenseless individuals, preborn children, the handicapped, the elderly, and the rhetoric of various regimes throughout history. He looks at the words used to describe Jews, gypsies, and others in Nazi Germany, African-Americans before and after slavery, Russian peasants in the Soviet Union, Native Americans on the frontier—and women throughout the world and history. For example, did you know that rape used to be legally defined as the trespass of a woman, but of another man's property? It always starts with words.

We've seen some of those words in recent Argonaut columns and letters to the editor. Today's words invoked to revile certain groups follow some of history's most degrading methods. We classify people as deficient, subhuman, as waste matter, property or possession. We use animal metaphors, to describe them as parasitic creatures, diseases, insane objects, "non-persons." That's how a baby becomes a "wast" or a "blub of tissue," how the miracle of pregnancy becomes a disease.

Is this form of hate speech really what we want? Is that who we are? Does a person's "worthlessness" give them their worth, or are they created with the same worth as everybody else?

If you can't find Dr. Brennan's book at the UI library, simply borrow it through interlibrary loan on the first floor. Also try the Newsletter of the Association for Interdisciplinary Research in Values and Social Change, vol. 8, no. 2, which includes Brennan's terminology table "The Semantics of Oppression."

Thanks for 'Health & Nutrition'

A big thank you to all the exhibitors and attendees at the sev-est annual "Health & Nutrition Fair." Each year there are many products and services to acquaint the community with, and we are proud to be the sponsor of such a fine event attended so well by the campus and community. Thank you all for participating.

The Student Union staff is to be especially thanked and congratulated for their helpfulness during the fair. They are always cheerful about the setup and cleanup.

Many people make this a wonderful event. Thanks to all.

Corrina Haake

T he sensory problems of meat, testing wine for taste, and smelling the significant aromas of salamis aren't the usual projects that we are assigned here at the university. But for Corrina Haake, it's nothing unusual. Haake, a food sciences major, has come to the University of Idaho from Hanover, Germany for a six-month private project to study the qualities of raspberry flavoring done in conjunction with Washington State University. Haake also has a minor in English and had her first visit to the United States studying English in Texas. She hopes to some day teach food science or English in Germany.

So far, the experience has been good. On the one hand Haake says she has been able to gain practice of the already impeccable English she speaks. Having taken English since the fifth grade, she probably knows grammar better than the rest of us. "Taking in colloquial English is much different than in the classroom," says Haake. Haake misses her boyfriend, Ingo, but even more she misses her dog, Tobias. The landscape, climate, and vegetation remind her very much of home. She says the people are different however.

"Here, everybody is friendly to everybody. That's nice when you are a foreigner," says Haake. "The way we live here isn't not different, but the friendly mentality is.

The school system is one other difference Haake notes in Germany. After 10 years of secondary school, students can choose to do an apprenticeship or continue three more years of school or university. Haake chose to do 13 years of secondary school then continued to do an apprenticeship in hotel management. After three years as a hotel employee, Haake decided she didn't want to be mostly a waitress for the rest of her life and aspired to become a teacher in food sciences taking each class as food chemistry, nutrition, and food technology. So, of course Haake would notice the difference in eating habits of Americans. Noting it is an industry very much influenced by advertising, Haake sees Americans seem completely obsessed by buying everything low-fat, low-calorie, or new and improved. The ironic thing, though, says Haake, is that everything they eat is processed, full of preservatives, and must be easy to cook.

Besides knowing the nutritional needs of the body Haake enjoys biking, taking her dog for walks, and playing volleyball and squash. Haake comes from a country that is relatively stable. The biggest tension within her country now is the extra taxes that must be paid to rebuild the Eastern part of the state after the crumbling of the wall in 1989 which they kindly refer to as the "new province."

When Haake returns to Germany next March she will hopefully have prepared herself for her "big exam" determining her destiny. In the meantime she is trying get the most out of the University of Idaho and hopes to have a rewarding visit.

Idaho thumps NAIA Warriors, hits road

Dan Eckles

It's no mystery NCAA Division I athletic competition is played at a higher level than NAIA. Tuesday night the Idaho Vandals proved why they play NCAA Division I volleyball and the Lewis-Clark State Warriors play NAIA in UI's 15-12, 15-8, 15-6 victory.

Idaho middle-blocker Louisa Kawulok was the key to victory, unlocking any suspense in the match with a team-high 17 kills and a .406 hitting performance. Red-shirt freshman Jessica Moore was the only other Vandal tallying double figures in kills with 11, but Idaho committed just 22 hitting errors in the match while pounding 52 kills.

The Vandals handed the Warriors an early lead in game one, but rallied back for an 11-5 advantage. LC responded with a 7-2 run of its own to get back within one at 13-12, but the Vandals never threatened in the match again, ending game one with three straight service errors.

The win was the 42nd straight home triumph for the Vandals, who tied Penn State for fifth on the NCAA's all-time list. Idaho's streak is the longest current streak in the nation.

Glory Maxey and Angle Beauchene combined for 28 kills and made just 11 hitting errors, but the rest of the Warrior squad was porous, hitting -.032 to stave off any positive efforts by the two LC stars. The Vandals (18-4, 6-1 BSC) owned the start, netting their counterparts from Lewiston 47-36 and out-blocking them 11-4.

The 602 fans who attended the match, made up the smallest Memorial Gym crowd of the season.

Idaho, which this week moved into the Top 25 in the USA Today/AVCA coaches' poll for the first time all season, coming in at number 24, continues Big Sky play on the road tonight against Boise State (13-6, 4-3 BSC) and moves on to Pocatello to face Idaho State (13-6, 4-3 BSC) Saturday. The Vandals swept both schools in three games at home four weeks ago.

ISU did not score more than seven points in any game and ISU's highest-point total in a single game was nine.

The Broncos are led by junior Cyndi Neece, who ranks third in the Sky with a 3.89 kills per game average. Neece also ranks third in the conference in digs, bringing up 3.2 balls a game. BSU is tops among league schools in team digs per game with a 16.9 mark.

The Bengals offense revolves around seniors Tommy Coates and Kathy Good. Both players are chipping in just over three kills a game.

The Vandals will look to shut down the Bengals much like they did in Moscow, when no ISU player had more than nine kills. UI also held a 13-2 blocking advantage in that match.

In addition, a solid serve defense will be more than applicable for Idaho Saturday. ISU is the best serving team in the Big Sky, netting off 2.25 aces a game.

Mark Vanderwall

Since money talks it's not hard to understand why the University of Idaho made the jump to the Big West Conference next season.

With the upper echelon of Division I-AA teams all slowly moving to Division I-A, Idaho found itself in a must move situation.

The chance that Division I-AA scholarships would be lowered, along with the opportunity to create more revenue were key reasons for Idaho's move. The increasing probability of dwindling scholarships was one risk the Vandals were not going to take, but following the revenue road all the way to the Big West Conference was an easy decision.

"I'll be honest with you, this was a financial move and if I told you any different I would be lying," Idaho Athletic Director Pete Liske said Wednesday night at an open forum meeting, discussing the move to the Big West.

Along with the Idaho change comes an overall NCAA structure change that will go into effect in January. The new plan will change from every one of the schools at the I-A level getting a vote in what happens, to the votes being split into conferences.

The Board of Directors would have 15 votes, 8 to the major conferences, 1 MAC/ Big West, and 6 to the remainder of the teams. The Management Council would get a total of 34 votes, 16 to the majors (Less than 50 percent of the total could be the key) 1 each for the MAC and the Big West, and 16 to the remainder of the teams.

"The new system gives the Big West more pull than we thought it would initially. If the major conferences want to pass something now, they have to pick up votes outside of their own, thus putting us in the position to have some say in what goes on," Liske said.

Vandals look for revenge against Griz

Damon Barkdoll
Staff

The Idaho Vandals football team will be trying to get a monkey off its back, or rather, a grizzly when it entertains the University of Montana Saturday in the Kibbie Dome.

Led by Walter Payton Award Candidate, quarterback Dave Dickinson, the Grizzlies carry a four game winning streak against the Vandals into Saturday's clash.

Last season the Vandals were demoralized in Missoula, falling 45-21 and helped Dickinson to break the UM touchdowns record with 37 touchdowns passes.

Although Idaho coach Chris Tormey never lost to the Grizzlies as a UI player, he knows the challenge the Vandals will face in trying to contain the Big Sky MVP-AFAll-American. (Please note, our phone number for the Dinners is 1-800-226-8624, no area codes necessary.)

"Obviously, their quarterback Dave Dickinson is probably the best football player in Division I-AA," Tormey said. "He throws the ball as well as any quarterback I've ever seen and he's more proficient than any quarterback I've ever played against or coached."

Tormey stressed the importance of putting pressure on the quarterback from Great Falls, Mont.

"We have to have good pass pressure if we're going to be successful," Tormey said. "We have to contain Dickinson—we have to hold up in the secondary and buy time for the rush. You'd like to be able to rush five guys to cover Dickinson and double on their wide receivers but you'd need 18 guys to do that."

This year's Idaho teams have been double-teaming UI all-American Ryan Phillips and Tormey feels that double-teaming Phillips has opened it up for guys like defensive end Barry Mitchell, Ryan Smith, Tim Wilson and Dan Zeamer.

If last Saturday's game against Eastern Washington was any indication of how good this Vandals defensive line could really be, Idaho should get some significant pressure on Dickinson.

For this season, the only team to put any real pressure on Dickinson was Washington State and even then, the Cougars put only one hand on the board. The scary thing to Idaho is not only is Dickinson a great quarterback who can scramble if need be, but he has a very impressive offensive line to grant his 5-foot-11-inch, 175-pound body.

So how can Idaho possibly win?

"They put points up against everybody they have played," Tormey said. "We're going to have to score some points."

With the resurgence of Idaho starting quarterback Eric Kizaw, putting points on the board may be very tangible. Last Saturday, against EWU, Kizaw finished the game with 308 yards passing, finishing 16 for 30 on completions and five touchdowns.

The Vandals have been productive, too. They average 439 yards and 37 points per game.

Lewis four times. That's not too shabby, considering the fact that Lewis had only been sacked five times in NCAA's six previous games. UM's defense is led by linebacker Mike Beulche, who once again led the Griz in tackles, according 14 against NAU.

The Vandals will look to declare a Grizzly defense with go-to guys receiver Dwight Richardson running back Lavoe Kidd, McKenzieタイトスミ caring about Idaho's receiving corp with 34 catches on 423 yards and five touchdowns. Kidd, a junior receiver, is coming impressive with 362 total yards this season.

"He's (Kidd) doing a nice job for us," Tormey said. "He runs hard, he's elusive and he holds onto the ball."

The Vandals are awaiting a UM team that gave Pacific 10-7.

Washington State a run for their money in Pullman and according to Tormey, the Vandals must play a near flawless game to beat the 'Griz.

"I'd really like to see our fans give us the same kind of home field advantage that Montana had last year."

—Chris Tormey
UI football coach

"We're at home and we need to win," Tormey said. "The seniors have never beaten Montana. They have a great program."

Tormey has challenged the Idaho student body to come out in full force.

"I think we'll have 16,000 fans," Tormey said. "I think the place will be packed. I'd really like to see our fans give us the same kind of home field advantage that Montana had last year—you know, such tremendous noise that they have trouble.
Intramural officials make program go

Michael Stetson

He pushed me reff! I had his flag right here! What do you mean the ball was out? He was in the box! Intramural referees have heard it all.

Of course, without them, the University of Idaho would not be the same place and according to Greg Morrison, 34, there would not be an intramural program without the referees had work.

For Morrison, the director of UI intramural sports, intramural provides students an opportunity to relieve stress, create a fun social activity and offer a break from constant studying, and important parts of a strong, healthy campus community.

As for referees, “the people who ref do it out of a love for the game and to benefit everyone on campus,” Morrison said noting why students would put up with the harassment or the stress that officiating night cause, a sentiment that referees echo.

Ryan Whitney, 21, a senior in communication believes that officiating provides a chance for people to participate in a fair atmosphere and works as a stress release outlet.

“People know they aren’t going to get jipped out of a sport—that there is control of the game.”

For Jim Paterson, 27, a junior in social education and elementary education, a general love for being a referee and watching competition between teams provide his reasons for officiating.

“I like being a referee, especially like the competitive games with two very competitive teams,” Paterson said.

All these people recognize the money aspect, but none seem to place that as a major influence in their decision. Brian O’Neill, 21, says “I just do it for fun, there is money involved, but I do it for fun.”

As for harassment, most referees do not seem to notice a problem. However, they do find obstacles to overcome. O’Neill, a senior math major, stressed he had to develop greater confidence in his knowledge of the rules of the game. For Paterson, trying to keep both sides happy in what he sees as one of the most competitive intramural programs imaginable serves as a great obstacle. And for Whitney, the fact that he must ref games in which he knows people creates a big obstacle, trying not to offend people who he knows, but insisting on being fair.

Despite obstacles, all three referees and Morrison re-enforce the need for more referees and the fun involved in doing the job. Paterson encourages new referees to come out.

“This is a really good program, Greg does a good job, the people are really tight and it’s a good program here,” he said.

“It’s interesting putting the shoe on the other foot,” O’Neill said, encouraging people to get involved and learn more about sports and the intramural program.

So how did these referees get so involved? A Sigma Alpha Epsilon member who was a referee told Whitney about the program and he has worked for intramurals ever since. This fall Whitney started his third year as a referee. A flyer advertising intramural jobs brought O’Neill into the intramural program. O’Neill, is starting his third year. For Paterson, getting involved came naturally, follow-

UI soccer club splits in Spokane

The University of Idaho Soccer Club did not let last Sunday's good weather go to waste, hammering the Spokane Damage, 7-0, but later falling to 3-2 to Young's Hardwood Floors in Spokane.

UI team captain DeeWyn Raynor got the scoring started early in UI's win with a goal five minutes into the game. David Walker provided the assist. Mike Smiley, Jeff Haverhill and Walker kept the heat on with three goals in a four-minute stretch to give the Vandals a 4-0 halftime advantage.

O.J. Raynor, who pounded in two more goals in half two, and James Hall, who added a goal rounded out the UI scoring. Hall also contributed a pair of assists in the triumph.

Goal keeper Doug Sittin yelled the shouts at a

FORUM

When Idaho enters the Big West it will have a chance to play in a bowl game, as the winner of the Big West gets an automatic berth to the Las Vegas Bowl.

Along with hobbies the football program, Idaho will be making itself a part of Big Monday on ESPN for basketball and at the same time be joining one of the toughest volleyball conferences in the nation.

Education is also playing a big part in the move, as UI will join a conference with the likes of UC Santa Barbara and UC Irvine, two of the most renowned educational institutions in the world.

There have been some misconceptions about attendance short-comings making the move problematic, but Laske said everything is taken care of and there are no obstacles left in the path to the Big West.

"We will be going to the Big West next season, and attendance has nothing to do with us going... Seventeen thousand people in attendance is impossible. It won’t have any bearing on anything except how much money we take in at the gates," said Laske.

With everything expected to go as planned, Idaho will have its new home next year in a stronger conference.

This was not just a move to better the athletic programs here at the University, but rather a move to better the University as a whole.

A winding dirt road in Troy takes us into the mountains where a quaint little well sits in front of a log cabin. Old wagon wheels compose the lights in the living room. A chandelier made of tin cans illuminates the hallway. Sound like a scene from the pioneer days? For Wanda and Bill Schnider it’s a dream house.

The Schniders gave a tour of their home and a taste of their lifestyle for this month’s International Association meeting. Efficiency seemed to be the theme of the meeting as Wanda introduced the group of women how to grind wheat flour and press apples which were later served as cookies and cider for refreshments.

The couple started their home 20 years ago with trees they received from the forest service. They cut, sawed, and skidded trees daily. Six years and 180 trees later they lived in a log cabin complete with handmade furniture.

A dining room table and a couple of chairs are the only pieces of furniture that were not cut by themselves. The chest of drawers in the bedroom were painstakingly sawed by hand. The floor in the living room was created by using an old gym floor.

Nothing is wasted at this home—including time.

Wanda and Bill don’t own a television or washer and dryer. All the laundry is done by hand on a glass scrub board in the bathtub.

"At first it’s novelty, then it’s nuisance, then it’s just a way of life," says Wanda. It’s silly to even ask if the couple owns such luxuries as a microwave.

“We have our own luxuries,” says Bill. Anyone taking the hike through the woods to the new cabin he’s building knows what he means. The home is one that Thoreau would be proud of. His latest project overlooks a small pond just a quarter of a mile from their present home.

Wanda and Bill built their home with some help from Wanda’s father, Abner, who lives in his own cabin in Emida without plumbing or electricity. The couple did their own writing and plumbing using books from the library and what Bill calls “a little practical knowledge.”

The garden itself is indicative of the productiveness of this way of life. The group savored the taste of freshly pulled carrots from the Schnider’s garden as well as plums from the orchard. Many got the chance to hold the one-week old puppies in the stable. A garage, shed and cellar complete their estate.

The Schniders do own a telephone with an answering machine since the couple can’t escape the corporate world. Bill is co-owner of R&R Office Equipment while Wanda makes a trek to work at 4 a.m. to basically Bagels.

Their daughter, Bridgette, is in her sophomore year at school in Oregon studying industrial design.

Bill and Wanda always wanted a log cabin, but what started as a building project for the economic feasibility turned into an addictive lifestyle that they enjoy.
Musician Magazine sponsoring Best Unsigned Band

Jeremy Chase

If you have ever dreamed of being a rock 'n roll star, Musician Magazine has a surprise for you.

The "Best Unsigned Band" Competition, sponsored by the magazine, is a chance for musicians and artists across the country to get their music heard by industry professionals and celebrities. Among the celebrities involved in the final judging this year will be Steve Winwood, Stone Gossard (Pearl Jam), Juliana Hatfield, Matthew Sweet, Adrian Belew, Pat Metheny, and Jimmy Jam.

Dev Sherlock, promotion director for Musician Magazine, said the competition is a great chance for bands to get a "break" in their careers. "They're getting their music heard by people who work in the music industry," he said. "It's also something to engage our readers.'

Sherlock said the 4,000-plus entries in the annual competition are listened to by everyone from music journalists, recording engineers, as well as the celebrities. "This a chance for your music to be heard by someone who wouldn't listen before because you aren't already signed to a label," he said.

The first round of judging is done by Musician Magazine and people in the recording industry, and the finalists are judged by the celebrities. Winners are featured in the magazine and placed on Musician's Best Unsigned Band CD. Top finishers also receive several thousand dollars worth of live sound and recording equipment.

Sherlock said entering the contest is fun because you never know what could happen. "There's a lot of independent and alternative groups that have done well in the past," he said. Entrants in years past have included singer Edie Brickell and Rusted Root.

To enter the contest, call 1-800-BUB-7096 and leave your address so an entry form can be mailed to you. Once finished with the form, send it back to Musician Magazine with a two song cassettes of material. Deadline for the competition is Dec. 31, 1995.

Banco De Gaia
Last Train to Lhasa

I am always in search of good ambient music and since there are so many different ambient artists out there it is hard to come across one that is really good. When I do find a piece I like appealing, I pop it in my CD player and listen to the synthesizers. Drum dub beats slowly put me into a state of bliss.

The techno ambient group Banco De Gaia put me in that state with their latest release called Last Train to Lhasa. This release is double disc that flows very well from start to finish, soothing your mind with tribal drum rhythms and key-boarding that is out of this world.

Since this album has a lot of Tibetan influence in it, traditional Tibetan instruments such as different types of flutes and chimes are sampled in the songs. A lot of chanting has been sampled into these songs as well, which helps put your mind into a state of relaxation.

The song "Kuoo" does this quite well and is also one of the more upbeat tracks on the album that gets almost dancy. This song immediately flows into the song "China" which is a very slow paced song that has a melody that could put even the most savage beast to sleep. Nature sounds such as birds singing, are sampled on the song "White Paint" which adds flare to the track and makes it very interesting to listen to.

I found this album very enjoyable to listen to. The thing I liked about it most was that it was not repetitive or experimental like most ambient music gets these days.

The compositions had substance to them and kept evolving as they went along. If peaceful music is what you are up for then give this a try.

Their previous release called Moon is wonderful as well. All of Banco De Gaia's releases can be found on Planet Dog records.

‘Fugue’ offers literary outlet

Matt Baldwin

There is a secret which has been kept within the University of Idaho English Department. That secret is the Fugue.

“The Fugue is a bimonthly digest the English Department puts out. It is totally student run. We publish all kinds of fiction, poetry, creative non-fiction, we even had a few essays published in the past. We’re open to any kind of good writing. It doesn’t matter if it is genre type. All submissions are evaluated by staff members. Then the ones that we feel are acceptable to the magazine go to the executive editor and then the faculty advisor which is Lance Olsen,” Eric Isaacson, executive editor of the Fugue, said.

The Fugue is currently funded by the English Department.

“We are going to be going to the ASUI and seeing if we can obtain some funds from them. That’s still in the planning stages right now. We are just trying to find out what procedures we need to go through so we can actually become totally student run,” Isaacson said.

Isaacson also mentioned that if “we get the MFA program going, the English Department will definetely need a literary magazine. If we get the funds, get the MFA program going, and if we can get the student interest, we are looking at upgrading from our current format to a more high-tech, glossy type of approach to it (the Fugue).

Fugue is the folded, stapled kind magazine.

“It has held its own for the last five, six years. But we would like to upgrade. So that we can get Idaho and Fugue on the map so to say,” Isaacson said. Currently Fugue has a run of 200 copies per issue. The issues are now free to students at UI.

“We want to build it up. Get the students aware of it. The fact is that it is a University of Idaho production. They are University of Idaho students. They can join the staff, submit stuff. My goal this year, including the issue that is coming this December and the one that will come out next May, is to increase that awareness in the student body. We have a few students, usually, every issue. But I want to increase that,” Isaacson said.

Fugue is still accepting fiction and poetry submissions for the Nov. 3 deadline. All types of fiction and poetry will be accepted. Students can either mail the submission in the following address:

FUGUE
o/o English Dept.
Rm. 200, Brink Hall
University of Idaho
Moscow, ID 83843

The submissions should include the piece and a self addressed stamped envelope. Students can also drop their submission off at room 200 in Brink Hall.

Heat-Moon to discuss travels across U.S.

Justin Cason

Last summer, William Least Heat-Moon ventured down America’s rivers, canals and lakes, investigating and reporting on these waterways and the people whose lives depend on them. On Oct. 23, he will give a talk at the Washington State University Student Union Building about this four-month excursion. “He’s really good at capturing people and various parts of the country,” said Marty Mullen, assistant in the Activities/Recreational Sports department at WSU. “And he’s very much into sharing his experiences.”

Heat-Moon’s trip began last April when he left New York Bay and started his travel across the nation’s waters. He would complete his journey in Astoria, Oregon after 5,000 miles, all but 150 of which were on water.

July found him in Idaho at the Salmon River. Until this point, Heat-Moon had navigated the rivers himself in a small cruiser. “When he reached the Salmon, he hired a guide to take him through it. I think he thought his river skills weren’t good enough,” Mullen said.

Heat-Moon is currently working on writing this expedition down on paper, turning it into what will be his third book.

Indeed, he is just as well-known for his book-writing as he is for his “Easy Rider”-type travels. Blue Highways, the author’s first and most famous work, describes the time he spent traveling “the back roads and small, forgotten towns of America.” His second book, Pray for the Wild, details his explorations of Chase Country, a prairie in the Flint Hills of central Kansas. Both works take a distinct look at America, its people and its landscape. Both were also on the New York Times bestseller list and have never been out of print.

Heat-Moon’s talk at WSU will be the writer’s second non-water trip to the Palouse. In Blue Highways, he describes Lewiston as “a soft face of the Palouse” with a horizon that is “a smooth concatenation of hills as fertile as the valleys.” He also remembers Moscow’s old name, “Hog Heaven.”

The talk comes as a part of the WSU Visual, Performing and Literary Arts Committee’s “journeys” theme. The next stop for Heat-Moon is The Dalles, Oregon at the community college there.

Heat-Moon’s talk will begin at 8 p.m. at the CUB.

AD DEADLINE NOV. 14

HOLIDAY GIFT GUIDE!

Royball speaks out

Matt Baldwin

Royball performed at the Moscow Social Club recently. Before the show I had a chance to talk to the band. Royball consists of three members: Dave Ter Hark, vocals and bass; Chris Pfeiffer, vocals and drums and Carlos Lantz, vocals and guitar.

Before Royball based in Portland they were based in the Moscow area. “All of us were in school (here),” Pfeiffer said, “In '91 around October or so we formed as a band. Right about now we are probably celebrating our anniversary.”

“One of the guys from Big Time Adam actually told me to call these guys (Pfeiffer and Ter Hark),” Lantz said. “Dave and I actually have known each other for awhile. We have played in some bands together.”

I had came down to go to college and Dave ended up moving to Moscow not too long after that. The band that we had at that time went the way of the dinosaurs. We were introduced to Carlos,” Pfeiffer said.

Aside from playing in a band, the members of Royball were also students at the University of Idaho. Pfeiffer graduated in music; Ter Hark graduated in English and Lantz graduated in communications.

Royball released their first album in '92.

“We recorded it in '92, but it actually came out in January of '93. It was just such a clustered mess of trying to get it out. We did it really fast in four days. Actually it was Black Hippy's label at the time that were helping us get it out. That was Pacific Inland. They were just really good guys, but not very well organized,” Pfeiffer said.

Royball was ill-experienced as far as shows go when they released their first album, Slices. Basically, they played some shows in Spokane and Moscow.

“We sold around seven or 800 of the first album,” Pfeiffer said. The first album had a run of a 1000. “We made our money back,” Lantz said.

Royball’s music could be described mainly as “rockish pop”. Royball is now playing shows in Portland and trying to get a following. Yet, they say, it can be hard going at times.

“We play anywhere we can book now,” Ter Hark said.

“They’ve (the Portland clubs) got a million bands a day calling them saying ‘let us play’ so we just have to get in line with all of them, but essentially we have gotten a good reaction from the clubs,” Pfeiffer said.

Royball has two discs out, Slices and Barometric. The second disc is available at the music stores around the Moscow area minus Musicland.

Love Battery to headline show at WSU

Love Battery, a staple of the Seattle music scene, will be performing this Saturday at Washington State University’s CUB Ballroom.

The band, recently released Straight Freak Ticket with A & M Records, and boasts several full length releases with Sub Pop Records.

The show starts at 7:30 p.m. with tickets costing $5 with a WSU student ID and $6 without.

Love Battery has been touring the past two years with such notable acts as Mudhoney, L7, Afghan Whigs and Screaming Trees.

Before recording Straight Freak Ticket, the band worked with Bruce Calder, who has produced bands like Green River, George Clinton and Miles Davis, which netted them the Nehru Jacket EP also available on A & M.

Also performing will be 30 Ought Six, Redneck Girlfriend and Pollachi.

John’s Alley will be presenting The Beadheads with opening guests Swamp Dogs tonight at 9 p.m.

A $3 cover charge will be taken at the door with those 21 and over admitted only.
Singing star Selena’s accused murderer talks to police

HOUSTON (AP)—The woman who fatally shot Selena was arrested in police afterward that she had pulled out the gun to show it to the singer, and it “just went off,” according to tapes played for the jury Tuesday.

“I didn’t mean to do it,” she said.

Ms. Saldivar said she intended to keep the gun, which was a 9/10-pound standing in the motel where Selena was shot. She said she had bought the gun for $8,500.

Ms. Saldivar said she intended the gun to the singer when she confronted Ms. Saldivar, 35, could get life in prison.

Prosecutors said she intentionally shot Selena when the singer confronted Ms. Saldivar about suspicions she had embezzled $30,000.

The jury heard six hours of tapes on Monday and on Tuesday from the standoff in the motel parking lot after the shooting.

“I pulled it out to show her the gun,” Ms. Saldivar sobbed at one point. “It just went off.”

Witnesses testified last week they saw Ms. Saldivar, gun in hand, screaming Selena across the motel courtyard to the lobby, where she collapsed and died. She had been shot in the back.

On the tape, while threatening to kill herself, Ms. Saldivar cried: “I don’t know how to pull the trigger.”

But a police officer at the standoff testified Monday that Ms. Saldivar switched the gun between her hands twice from single action to double action. Single action, with the hammer pulled back, would make the gun easier to fire.

Ms. Saldivar told the police the shooting was the fault of Selena’s father, Abraham Quintanilla Jr. She said he had raped and sexually abused her a month and a half before the shooting and threatened to kill her if she told.

“I told Selena! I told her mother!” she cried to police. “They said I was lying, lying, lying.”

Quintanilla denied it was her idea.

Popular McManus story to be performed

Misery II: McManus in Love, by Patrick F. McManus will be performed by actor Tim Behrens in a one-man show Sunday at the Lewiston High School Auditorium. The performance begins at 7 p.m. and is sponsored by the Lewiston-Clarkston Center for Arts.

As a sequel to another McManus one-man show, A Fine & Pleasant Misery, Behrens returns to Lewiston this time to talk about the trials, tribulations, and troubles of young love. Using anecdotes from McManus’ books, Behrens will recreate the scene for the audience, playing all of the characters.

Leslie Esselstyn, director of the Lewiston-Clarkston Center for Arts, said she looks forward to Behrens’ performance based on last December’s experience. “It was a neat sell-out last year, and one of the biggest crowds we had,” she said. “I think we’ll have a good time this year.”

Building up the laughs throughout the show, Esselstyn said, is why the performance is so successful. “It really gets the audience going,” she said. “I believe it or not, it’s doable as one man show.”

However, Esselstyn said the real strength of the show lies in its writing, which was done by both Patrick McManus and Tim Behrens. “Tim works directly with Patrick McManus when writing the shows,” she said. “They both have a knack for taking something funny on a page and making it work on stage.”

“People come to the show with the anticipation that it will be funny,” she said. “They may know the anecdote, but they’re still laughing when it’s told.”

Tickets are available, but based on last year’s success, time may be running out. Prices for adults are $11, with students under age 16 admitted for $7. For the Moscow-Pullman area, tickets can be bought at Myklebust’s or The Combine. In Lewiston-Clarkston, tickets can be purchased at Albertson’s, Owl Pharmacy, Owl’s Tri-State, Myklebust’s, and Music City.”

Any questions concerning the performance can be directed to the Lewiston-Clarkston Center for Arts & History, (208) 799-2243.

Phil Southern Trio wins Mastercard ACTS

Shannon Paterson

The Phil Southern Trio took first place at the MasterCard ACTS second annual talent search Oct. 12 at the Student Union Ballroom.

Only 100 universities nationwide are chosen to participate in the competition, according to Kris Thomas of ASUI Productions.

"It's a worthwhile show," said Thomas. "It's a representation of our school which looks really good for the University of Idaho." Nine acts took stage, showcasing a variety of vocal and instrumental talent.

The Phil Southern Trio won the competition despite the fact that the fiddle and trumpet players couldn't make the show. Their original name, with all players present, is Texas Tea.

"We took it to the winning position anyway," said lead vocalist Phil David. "We're trying to take the whole group (to regionals) if we can."

The trio consists of Suzy Rosevall on piano, David Cavett on stand-up bass and David on rhythm guitar and lead vocals.

"We are an authentic, acoustic western swing band that's upbeat, driving and old-timey—a 1930s and 40s feel," said David, "but with an appeal for today's audience."

As an entire group, Texas Tea won the College Division Vocal Ensemble award at last year's Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival. They have also played at Farmer's Market and music recitals but are looking for more gigs.

"We need to start playing out more," said David.

The group's other future plans include to begin recording sessions on an independent album in two weeks and win the regional competition. If they win regionals they will compete against one other group in Nashville for a cash prize of $15,000.

"We want to represent our music school, our university and take our whole group to win in Nashville," said David.

Gallery West features Idaho artist

Justin Cason

For the last 20 years of her life, Idaho-born artist Kay Montgomery has been mastering the art of watercolor. This week, Moscow Gallery West is featuring her latest works, not only in watercolor, but mixed media artistry as well.

A large part of Montgomery's most recent watercolor work deals with nature and the vast landscapes and feelings it produces.

"I try to paint the emotions that the ocean evokes, the feelings that a fir tree elicits, the elation that a windy day arouses," Montgomery said of her paintings.

Mixed media is another large facet of the artist's work. She uses every medium from acrylic to pasting up paper in order to get across the feeling or emotion she desires. However, this often abstract art form was not always a part of her repertoire.

"I didn't start doing mixed media art until about four or five years ago," Montgomery said.

Still, it is mixed media that gives her one of the many outlets for her great imagination. "It gives me a chance to use my creativity while adding things for texture and color," Montgomery said.

According to the artist, there are no real themes in her work anymore. Close-ups will be featured, as will watercolors of cliffs and other outdoor scenes. Montgomery's seascapes were a favorite work in the past, but have faded out of her agenda.

Petroglyphs, westerns, festive dancers and nudes, as well as her "Scarecrow" series, will also be a large part of the exhibit. The "Scarecrow" series is made up of a number of these straw men, either seen by Montgomery first-hand or imagined in her head.

Although Montgomery has lived in Moscow for 30 years, this will be the first time she has shown her work at Moscow Gallery West. Her paintings are, though, in permanent collections at the University of Idaho Student Union, the UI School of Law and the Coeur d'Alene Resort Hotel, to name a few.

Throughout her career, Montgomery maintains the importance of her art work to herself. "I paint for myself and to myself," she said, "and wish only that others feel pleasure in my paintings."
