Pumpkins and kids, who could ask for more? The combined membership of SAEs, Phi Delta and Alpha Phi sorority held their annual pumpkin carving with kids. Katie Piel’s University of Idaho kindergarten class on Tuesday at the Alpha Phi’s chapter house.

There were 44 kindergarten children involved in the pumpkin carving event from the morning class and afternoon classes. Ban Lim, philanthropy chairperson of SAE said, “Everybody had fun; the fraternity members and women really enjoyed carving pumpkins with the kids.”

The SAEs provided pumpkins for each child and the Alpha Phi’s provided decorations, punch and goodie bags.

Piel said of the event, “The kids had a fabulous time. It’s special, adults paying attention to the child, like a big brother or sister.”

Piel went on to say the kids really adored the adults and have a really good time. At the same time the adults gain valuable parenting skills. When the kids arrived at the Alpha Phi house on Tuesday, they were each given a bag of candy with their name on it, a pumpkin and an adult. The kids then drew a face on the pumpkin and the sorority woman or man did the cutting.

Katie Simpson of Alpha Phi said, “It went really well. All of the kids had a good time and so did everybody else.”

The men of Sigma Alpha Epsilon have been busy with other projects, as well this fall including a golf tournament benefiting the American Cancer Society.

The annual William F. Fuller Golf Tournament was held on Saturday, Sept. 30 at the University of Idaho golf course.

The event brought in $1,800 for the American Cancer Society, $800 more than the men anticipated. Money was raised through a $50 entry fee for under 21 and $100 for those over 21. All proceeds went to the American Cancer Society and a presentation of the check was formally made at their chapter house.

Lim said the whole house got involved with the event as caddies for the participants which ranged from students to prominent.
Chenoweth to take second mortgage to pay off campaign loan

COEUR D'ALENE— Republic's Carol Chenoweth says she will take a second mortgage on her home to pay off a questionable $40,000 loan to her campaign from West One Bank.

The loan had been misrepresented— for eight months on her legally required campaign finance disclosure forms as a personal loan to her campaign. It was the only loan that campaign treasurer Wayne Crow as a bank loan after the midyear campaign report filed on Aug. 1 showed two $1,000 interest payments to West One Bank.

Federal campaign finance law requires bank loans to candidates to be secured—by collateral, through a guarantee or with a formal designation of future contributions to the campaign. Absent any of those special approval from the Federal Election Commission, bank loans could be considered illegal campaign contributions.

Chenoweth's seat and national reputation were sufficient reasons for the Federal Election Commission to have maintained that the loan agreement allowed West One to take her home if the loan was not paid back by the Nov. 23 deadline.

The Idaho congressman with the Federal Election Commission does give the bank the power to appropriate cash from other accounts she has to cover the loan amount. But the bank's only recourse to recover the rest of any deficiency would be through court action against Chenoweth.

Chenoweth said she had been trying to pay off other creditors to retire one loan from West One Bank, but she did not remember totals she said most of those debts were paid off. On June 30, she listed third parties over $55,000.

The Idaho Democratic Party has asked the National Transportation Safety Board to investigate the crash of a Learjet 25 near Pocatello, Idaho, Oct. 22. A suspect vehicle is described as an older-model Chevrolet pickup, blue with a white tail.

"I think the bottom line is that they could have felt comfortable with their envi- ronment, with the teacher and they just don't want to know that making mistakes is OK as long as we learn from them and keep trying," she said.

The award is sponsored by the Legislative and State Department of Education agency spokes- woman Rhonda Edmondson said.

Some estimates of the size of the state's National Teacher of the Year com- petition range as high as 12,450.

"What happens with the teacher of the year is they become the spokesperson for teachers and they are almost expected to be an expert. At this point, they're con- sidered to be a master teacher," Edmondson said.

1 Illegal moores kill near double figures

BOISE—Two more illegally killed moose have been found in southwestern Idaho, left untouched where they fell, Idaho Fish and Game officials said.

"I'm sick of looking at poached moose," said Kevin Prinsme. "We've lost too many again this year.

This time a dead bull and a cow at two different locations raises the illegal take this season to seven.

Prinsme and other officers have spent a lot of time investigating the killings in and around the McCall area.

Two of the cases have been solved. In each, the illegal shooters turned themselves in. For the other five killings, the poachers remain at large.

A bull moose was killed at Boise and a cow was killed in Meridian on Oct. 22. A suspect vehicle is described as an older-model Chevrolet pickup, blue with a white tail.

"You need the public to provide additional information for us to work on the cases," Prinsme said.

In the second incident, a cow was shot and left around Oct. 15 along- side a northerneastern road northwest of McCall.

Because Idaho moose popula- tions are small, hunting is carefully regulated so that some moose can have a big impact on the whole.

Fish and Game has been working with the Idaho-Montana border agencies to monitor appearances of moose.

DEA secret operations revealed in tapes

BOGOTA, Colombia—U.S. drug agents operate more indepen- dently in Colombia than they've known in South America, according to tapes bound for a Car- lisle, Pa., dealer in the anti-drug war.

Laser acupuncture helps smokers quit

Sean Tetelon

Moscow chiropractor John R. Sandell says being shot by a laser beam can be a comfortable and effective treatment for people who want to stop smoking. Sandell uses a helium-neon "cold" laser in place of traditional acupuncture needles, to help his patients stop smoking. The laser emits a concentrated beam of light, stimulating specific points on the ear's surface. Stimulation of the points is intended to reduce the desire to smoke.

In addition to laser treatments, small acupuncture EBs are taped to points on the ear specifically connected with smoking addiction. Whenever the patient has an urge to smoke, they gently rotate the EBs with their fingertips, reducing desire for nicotine. "Over the past three years, 72 percent of our smokers are in the program," he said.

The origins of acupuncture date back over 5,000 years to China. However, acupuncture was relatively unknown in the United States until 1971, when relations with China improved.

Acupuncture is therapy designed to improve the balance of energy in the body. It is believed to be beneficial for a variety of health problems, including smoking cessation.

"Some people who seek acupuncture have tried everything," he said. "People need to know there is an alternative approach to health, called chiropractic.

Depression common among college students

Help is available through counseling, medicine

November 3, 1995

Editors note: The name of the affected has been changed to John Doe.

Every day nearly 10 million people suffer from a debilitating, life-threatening disorder, it strikes at the heart of our work and relationships. It seemingly unassailable feeling of hopelessness drains our strength and renders our situation barely tolerable. It is depression, and it affects more than one in 10 college students in the U.S. today.

Everyone, even the case of the blown nose and the "cold," attest to the difficulty of depression. The medical community is critical of acupuncture and chiropractic treatments on whole. Sandell says the American Medical Association in particular, is against any alternative treatments not handled by traditional doctors.

"Our profession is not anti-drug or anti-surgery," Sandell said. "We need to work as a team.

The chiropractic profession, and its subset of acupuncture, is gaining recognition. In 1991, the American Journal of Maternal and Child Nursing said acupuncture treatments are successful on babies suffering from cerebral palsy. In 1993, the Ministry of Health in California, reported chiropractic care was more effective than medication for the common cold.

Large number of students run for offices

Wednesday’s senate meeting was held at the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity.
Chair of the Student Advisory Board Chris Hoek announced the elections Tuesday, saying, “We’re going like a bat out of hell.” Hoek announced that at least 30 candidates are running for offices and at least 18 of these are for senate positions. Hoek also announced that election petitions are due at the close of today in the senate offices.
ASUI Vice President Damon Dursky announced that he will not seek re-election as vice president, but is running for a senate position. ASUI President Sean Wilson will not be seeking re-election.
Senator John Hoyne expressed concerns to the senate about the student faculty relationships here at the UI. Hoyne wants to have more interaction with the students and faculty outside of the classroom and office hours.
Hoyne is currently working on legislation that will fund a night in the Student Union Undergraduate for students and the faculty to get to know each other.
“The idea behind it is to find a place where the faculty and students can come together to interact outside the classroom,” said Hoyne.
David Mucci, director of the Student Union said, “I think it’s great. Part of the value of the college education is having that association. Not only with peers, but with your faculty in some more meaningful way than just lecture or lecture. I think it will help create the kind of bonds that you’re talking about where people really do feel like there’s a community here that goes beyond the classroom.”
Hoyne also said that UI has a tremendous amount of programs aimed at helping the welfare of students. He has urged the students to take advantage of these programs offered on campus.
“Student Advisory Service has numerous programs for students who have learning disabilities and they are a great resource to point people in the right direction,” Hoyne said.
Robert Filling, assistant vice president of Budgeting and Planning, has resigned from his position to pursue opportunities at Old Dominion University. “He has been a great friend to the students,” said Wilson.

Clinton, GOP leaders discuss budget impasse

Associated Press
WASHINGTON—President Clinton and Republican congressional leaders met face to face on their budget impasse Wednesday, emerging with no specific agreements but speaking positively about the chances of temporarily avoiding a federal default.
“We agree there’s an immediate problem, the debt ceiling,” House Speaker New Gingrich, R-Ga., told reporters after the hour-long session attended also by Democratic congressional leaders. “We want to be helpful on that. We’re trying to work out a way to work together.”

Gingrich and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said Republicans were considering expanding the government’s soon-to-expire borrowing authority into early December, shortly after they hope to send Clinton a final version of their seven-year, budget-balancing package.
Republicans earlier had considered an extension through Nov. 29, but they revised that Wednesday because the government has a huge payment due Dec. 1, when it mails out Social Security checks.

The conciliatory words on the debt limit contrasted with remarks Gingrich made earlier in the day, when he said Wall Street investors had told Republicans that “the market would shrug it off” if the government went into default, something that has never happened.
That conflicts with the views of Democrats and most economists, who say a federal failure to pay its creditors would spark higher interest rates and an unforeseeable reaction by financial markets.

Environmentalists say field burning not necessary

Associated Press

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho—Environmentalists say field burning, a tradition of fall in Idaho, not only pollutes the air but also is unnecessary.

Charlie Sellens, an Idaho Falls member of the Idaho Conservation League, said besides the economics of it, burning field stubble to prepare for the next year is a bad idea.

"We'd like to get away from the argument about pollutants and irrandes and things like that and put it back on an economic basis," he said. He contends that field stubble holds snow on fields better and adds precious water to the field during the spring runoff.

"It's no much of an issue. It's just plain unnecessary," he contended.

Farmers burn fields in the fall to get rid of grains and other crop residue.

It's a big issue in northern Idaho, where farm lobbyists have been able to stave off state laws that would prevent it. Cities such as Coeur d'Alene claim it hurts tourism when smoke from field burning pollutes the air.

In the Idaho Falls area, smoke from field burning that limited visibility was listed as a factor in two weekend accidents that left at least three people. On Monday, smoke from burning fields was readily apparent in downtown Idaho Falls.

"On omniously, we couldn't recommend it," said Dennis Hadley, district conservationist for the Natural Resources Conservation Service in Idaho Falls. "If you burn all the residue off, it leaves the soil relatively bare and makes it subject to more erosion.

Farmers contend they need to clear stubble from grains fields before the next replanting, and burning it off is the cheapest alternative.

But what is cheap today could end up costing farmers in the long run, Hadley says.

"Generally, it makes healthier soil if you can incorporate the residue and build up your organic matter," he said. "The burning has a tendency to destroy organic matter in the upper few inches of soil and our soils are generally low in organic matter.

Hadley said his department advocates burning if it is done to a level to make an irrigation system more efficient. Flat fields use less water.

Bonaville County farmer Rodney Payne said burning is critical to get a field level, and a level field can use half the water as a bumpy one.

"It's a tremendous water saving," he said.
Emotions ran high in secession vote

Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va.—Too much money was at stake for Quebec to risk separation from Canada, two truck drivers said.

The province’s 5 million residents Monday narrowly defeated a referendum to secede from Canada, bypassing the economic turmoil some feared would result from creating an independent nation.

The threat of secession had Canadians panicking.

“Big companies are pulling out,” said Tom Martin, a truck driver who delivered newspaper to West Virginia on Monday. “I’ve been so busy the last few weeks hauling everything I can out of Quebec. Companies don’t want to be stuck in a country without a government.”

Many Quebec residents commute everyday to jobs in Ottawa. If Quebec had voted to create a sovereign state, Martin believed those jobs would have been lost.

“They would need work visas to work in Canada,” said Martin, a driver for Frederick Transport of Dundas, Ontario. “Canada would be a foreign country to them.”

Peter Harrimane, a driver for McKevitt Trucking Limited of Thunder Bay, Ontario, said much of the land in Quebec is Indian reservations.

“The Indians are Canadians,” Harrimane said. “They don’t want to be part of Quebec. You take that land away and Quebec would be a very small country.”

Dominic Fafard, a French-speaking Quebec native and a member of the Wheeling Thunderbirds hockey team, believed the main issue was language.

“You go anywhere in Quebec, you can make yourself understood in English,” he said. “But with French, outside of Quebec, I’m not really sure about it.”

Fafard said he would have liked to see a separate Quebec, but he knew it was not a good move due to the loss of many advantages of being part of a bigger country.

Moscow Republican reverses stand against superintendent

Associated Press

MOSCOW—Republican Sen. Gary Schroeder of Moscow, who opposed some GOP legislation with his sharp criticism of state Schools Superintendent Anne Martin, said Schroeder has to live with his criticism.

Schroeder earlier this year, placed strong focus with her that he is the chairman of the Senate Education Committee.

In the first week of the committee, the maverick Republican also is sending signals he’s willing to compromise on the charter schools bill he helped kill during the last two legislative sessions.

Sen. Majority Leader David Kerrick, R-Caldwell, said Schroeder was controversial in the last session.

“After the discussions I have had with him, I feel real positive he will make a positive contribution to the Republican caucus and the Senate in that position,” he said Friday.

Rep. Roy Black, R-Twin Falls, chairman of House Education, said Schroeder has to live with the previous criticism of Fox’s decision not to work with state and federal school reform efforts, and her management of the Education Department.

“Mr. Fox is going to have to build his relationship with Dr. Fox over time,” Black said.

Schroeder said he will call Fox and do everything he can to work with her.

“A lot of things have happened since the last session,” he said.

For one thing, the state Board of Education disbanded the school reform committee.

“There are a lot of new players, including Dr. Fox, and you have got to have all the players at the table,” he said. “As chairman, I have the responsibility to take a broader view of what is good for the state as a whole. Also, as chairman, I am probably more of a direct representative of the Republican Party.”

Schroeder said he approached Rep. Fred Tilman, R-Boise, about legislation for charter schools as pilot programs.

Tilman said he was surprised because Schroeder hasn’t supported the idea in the past. The Senate Education Committee killed Tilman’s bill to allow parents and teachers to create their own innovative schools.

Dorothy Fitz, Lewiston, chairwoman of the Nye County Christian Coalition, said she was surprised the GOP Senate leaders gave Schroeder the job.

“I don’t know why he bothers calling himself a Republican,” she said. “As far as I am concerned, Schroeder is a liberal in sheep’s clothing. Quite frankly, I could think of people a lot more qualified if we are going to work to change the education system to work.”
Forms, forms, forms. And more forms.

It's no wonder there are people here in the United States who believe the government is out to get them. I watch "X-Files" every Friday night, too. Remember the one where able agents Scully and Mulder found a storage facility which held more dummy citizens in the country? I'm beginning to believe some of this stuff is real.

It all started when I was born. My mother and father were required to fill out and sign a birth certificate for me which had my little ink foot prints on it. The government began tracking me from then on. And, ever since, I've never felt sick, and I have this really weird ability to see through brick walls.

It became worse once I joined the Marine Corps. They took blood samples and urine samples, finger printed me and gave me even more injections—and I don't know what those were either. They made me climb cliffs, repel out of black, unmarked helicopters into the backyards of people living in Montana, and practice house raids in which we seized guns from civilians.

When I started college, I found the government was still tracking me. In order to claim my veteran's benefits for school, I've filled out a stack of forms telling them all kinds of impossible things.

I also fill out forms every year for financial aid giving them my date of birth (which I forget), social security number and other vital information about where I live (in a run-down family housing apartment), how many guns I own (one), how many kids I have (none, thank God) and whether or not I've lost that filling in my upper molar that the Veteran's Administration insisted on giving me after I left the Marine Corps (I think it has a tracking device in it—every time I get near an AM radio, the static gets worse). They claimed I had a cavity there, but I never hurt me there.

Curiously enough, now that I'm getting ready to graduate, they want even more information. Now they want to know how many courses I've taken (not enough), how much money I owe them (too much), where I'll be living when I leave (something better than the dorm, but I doubt it) and if I've still got that filling in my upper molar (I think so—I've tried to Parlor games: the answer to the problem of boredom?

I have been told, has great medicinal properties. Its consumption is proclaimed to cure everything from fatigue to tuberculosis. A reason for this claim could be the presence of melanin found in urine which some say possesses the quality of boosting the immune system. I would of course, get a second opinion before I go gangle with the foul discharge.

Here you go. A quiet, potentially boring, evening made instantly useful and amusing with the help of a simple parlor game.

1996 election will decide future

The 1996 election will be a defining moment in American history. Here we will decide what direction the country will go and what kind of country we want. Will we vote to expand the welfare state? Or will we vote to rid it of all? The upcoming election has a special meaning for Generation X. This is the generation that is going to pay dearly for a wrong decision.

In my humble opinion, six decades of welfare state policies have produced a legacy of laziness and sloth. Too many people in this country think that the government owes them a living. The battle that is shaping up will not be between Republicans and Democrats. It will be between this, Generation X and the taken, it will be between those who work hard and those who slack off. It will be between those who want to keep work and those who think the government has a right to your money. Contrary to what some think, immorality is not our primary problem; idleness is. The immorality soon follows.

This battle should concern Generation X deeply. The following demographic will illustrate why. The average age of the population is still increasing. With retirement at the age of 62, it is quite possible for an elderly person to receive entitlements for up to 30 years. Compounded with this is the fact that the first wave of Baby Boomers will hit 62 in the year 2008, with 76 million people. Who is going to pay for all these entitlements? Generation X will.

Two things need to happen. The retirement age should be increased to 75 and there should be means testing. Should a wealthy retiree receive the social security? I think not. If serious action is not taken soon, Generation X has another option: this is the trump card that will strike terror into every home of every citizen. If you can shop for a company to work for, why not shop for a country to live in? If politicians want Generation X to stay here to pay the bills, several things need to happen. Get rid of crime. Get rid of burdensome regulations. Get rid of waste and fraud in government. And above all, lower taxes big, time. Politicians may be kicking a few butts to do this. Why not? What’s that business for. I can still vote.

Chenoweth off base on wildlife

Representative Helen Chenoweth travels the country claiming the grizzly bear never lived in the area around Kamiah, Idaho. She ridicules a plan being considered by the federal government to reintroduce the grizzly bear to the endangered species list. She is determined to eliminate the grizzly bear. The plan was the result of a lot of work done by the Resource Conservation Organization on Timber Supply that includes local timber workers, mill owners, and environmentalists. She should applaud that effort, not ridicules it.

Rep. Chenoweth is just plain wrong when she claims there is no evidence the grizzly ever lived near here. My 82-year-old father and another NPS employee at the Grizzly Smith Museum have seen tracks in the hills when they were young, and their own fathers recalled seeing bears. When Lewis and Clark camped in Kamiah in 1806, they killed six grizzlies for food and Sergeant Osyway wrote in his journal on May 14, 1806, "We got nine pounds of bear meat as they gave us so much & are so kind to us." Our traditional language contains a word for grizzly bear. Why would we have a word for him if he did not exist in our land?

Rep. Chenoweth needs to spend some time out here along the Clearwater River. She is showing early signs of a political virus which very common in Washington, D.C. There is no word in that language, but I hear it is called Potomac fever.

Justice can be emotional, too

This concerns the Oct. 24 Kennewick (page 4) news item on the trial of a child sex offender.

Apparently, the trial was so emotional that the judge found himself in tears, but restrained his judicial position by saying, "I cannot act from a strictly emotional base." I am not thermal to the point. I must stand between this man and vengeance.

There is great wisdom in this. Operating strictly from emotion will bring the downfall of any society or individual, but then the same applies to operating strictly from reason. Who ever heard punishment passed down by law was not vengeance? In the words of the scientific "objectivity" reigns god—

1996 election will decide future

The 1996 election will be a defining moment in American history. Here we will decide what direction the country will go and what kind of country we want. Will we vote to expand the welfare state? Or will we vote to rid it of all? The upcoming election has a special meaning for Generation X. This is the generation that is going to pay dearly for a wrong decision.

In my humble opinion, six decades of welfare state policies have produced a legacy of laziness and sloth. Too many people in this country think that the government owes them a living. The battle that is shaping up will not be between Republicans and Democrats. It will be between this, Generation X and the taken, it will be between those who work hard and those who slack off. It will be between those who want to keep work and those who think the government has a right to your money. Contrary to what some think, immorality is not our primary problem; idleness is. The immorality soon follows.

This battle should concern Generation X deeply. The following demographic will illustrate why. The average age of the population is still increasing. With retirement at the age of 62, it is quite possible for an elderly person to receive entitlements for up to 30 years. Compounded with this is the fact that the first wave of Baby Boomers will hit 62 in the year 2008, with 76 million people. Who is going to pay for all these entitlements? Generation X will.

Two things need to happen. The retirement age should be increased to 75 and there should be means testing. Should a wealthy retiree receive the social security? I think not. If serious action is not taken soon, Generation X has another option: this is the trump card that will strike terror into every home of every citizen. If you can shop for a company to work for, why not shop for a country to live in? If politicians want Generation X to stay here to pay the bills, several things need to happen. Get rid of crime. Get rid of burdensome regulations. Get rid of waste and fraud in government. And above all, lower taxes big, time. Politicians may be kicking a few butts to do this. Why not? What’s that business for. I can still vote.

—Scott Holland

Homecoming

It is with a great deal of pride and pleasure that I would like to commend the University of Idaho student body for two recent wonderful weekends on the UI campus.

The homecoming activities and participation by the students and visiting alumni showed that this great tradition will be in good hands.

As president of the University of Idaho Alumni Association, I would like our students to know we are very proud and supportive of your efforts and share with you our great feeling of affection for the University of Idaho and its great tradition.

I had planned on informing all of my students about this government conspiracy, but now I’m having second thoughts because the forms are demanding I tell them my social security number, an address, whether or not I’ve been found guilty of any crime more serious than a traffic ticket (for blackmailling purposes) and what the frequency of the transmitter in my tooth is (I think the bureaucrats are becoming more adept at tracking me). Sheesh. A guy can’t even have his privacy anymore. I should really have them change the frequency of that darned thing so I can listen to my fellow conspiracy buffs on AM radio.

LeDouxs brings life to Dome

The Kibbie Donue thundered with cheers of those other than football fans last weekend—and with good reason. Country musician Chris LeDoux played before a fiery crowd of well over 1,000 people last Friday night. Performing songs from both his early years, and ones that have made him the modern sire he is today, LeDoux's careful, but enthusiastic, mastery of his songs made the concert one of the best the University of Idaho has seen this year. This artistic zeal, coupled with certain other aspects of the show itself—various lighting effects, stage explosives and spectacular sound—proved the correct formula for a great performance.

The concert featured many peaks, one of which was "Tougher Than the Rest," a tune originally written by Bruce Springsteen. A slower mellow song, it provided an opportunity for the more unfamiliar audience members to see a less flashy side of the singer. LeDoux's back-up band consisted mainly of the same group of musicians who have supported him on the past few LeDoux albums. Gary Bodily on bass guitar, K.W. Turnbull on drums and Bobby Jensen on organ in particular, excelled in what turned out to be over an hour of country grooves.

A majority of the tracks covered by LeDoux are found on his latest album, Hypothesis, which was released last year. "Big Love" is about the love a man has for a woman. While this is a rather common theme in country music—and in all music for that matter—LeDoux adds an originality unique to his upbeat style.

In "Honky Tonk World," the performer showcased his talent in an energetic track about today's dashing scene. "You don't show a chance unless you take her out to dance. 'Cause we're living in a honky tonk world," LeDoux sang. It was hard not to believe him.

"Cowboys Like a Little Rock and Roll," a song written by Charlie Daniels, gave the singer another opportunity to show off his electric style, as did "Dallas Days and Fort Worth Nights."

Friday's concert was the second time LeDoux has performed at the Kibbie Dome. Three years ago, he opened for Sawyer Brown at the same venue.

Perfect Stranger, a band from Carthage, Texas, opened for LeDoux. The group bounded on to the country scene this past year with its single, "Ridin' the Rodeo." A few months later, they signed with Cash Records and are now well on their way to a successful career. The strong show put at Friday attached to this.

Still, it was LeDoux who made the evening such a success. To see the crowd merely like the show would be an immense understatement. When fans weren't singing or reaching out to shake LeDoux's hand, they were cheering like crazy.

In the words of the man who introduced the groups Friday night, local DJ "Trece-tappin'" Tommy Tucker, "It was a honky-tonkin' good time."

Geoff Baker speaks for himself

Valaree Johnson
Staff

Everyone runs afoul of the law once in awhile, but not everybody knows they are entitled to free counsel at the University of Idaho. Geoff Baker, a third-year law student at UI, is ASUI student defender for the 1995-96 school year and is eager to educate students about his position.

"I'd like people to think of myself as a resource they can tap," says Baker. Not many students really read every line of the Student Code of Conduct, but even more probably don't know that they are entitled to free counsel under the conduct code. They are entitled to free services.

"Some people may just need someone to talk about their situation," says Baker, who is prepared to answer the typical questions such as "Will this be on my permanent record?"

"Baker is originally from Virginia Beach, Va. He did his undergrad- uate work at William & Mary in history. His junior year he realized his options with history were "few and far between." A history pro- fessor told him he should consider venturing his talents elsewhere and Baker knew that interest was law. After a year off, he applied to several law schools around the country, but his true wish was to come to Idaho.

"I wanted to see the typography," says Baker who was accepted at UI but came to the area blind- ly, "I really like the wide open spaces." Baker, who eventually wants to end up in commercial defense, believes that law school should be for those who really want to serve justice in society.

"The whole rap that attorneys are greedy money suckers is wrong," says Baker. "Our real intention is to have a positive impact on people's lives.

Baker believes in order to be a successful lawyer you must be able to read, speak and write effec- tively, but most importantly you must have a genuine concern for the community which brings him to the position he now holds.

In addition to his desire to educate people about the sanctions in the SCC, Baker would like to be known as an advisor to students who feel he is on their side. As an undergraduate once himself, Baker realizes that the SCC isn't necessarily going to stop anyone from violating it. "It's like an ostrich sticking his head in the sand," says Baker.

We'd be kidding ourselves to think that a written code of con- duct would deter anyone from violat- ing rules." Baker says that normally occurs when a student has violated the SCC in they receive a written com- plaint from one of the two Judicial Officers, also third year law stu- dents, from the Student Advisory Services. The student also receives a cover letter informing the student of their right to be represented by an advisor or the Student Defender. "I usually try to figure out what happened, brainstorm about the options and educate students about the process," says Baker. He says law school really isn't about learn- ing the law but rather looking up facts, looking up rules and then applying the facts to the rule.

Baker says that between 90 and 95 percent of cases are usually settle- tled and he hasn't had a chance for defense in a hearing yet. While the beginning of the semester is usual- ly busy, his work is relatively steady. So before you feel like pulling a fire alarm or running down Gress now raced, go to Baker's office in the Student Union and see if it's really worth it.
Arg tunes into 'Poobah', blues, zen

Matt Baldwin

All hail the Grand Poobah of the airwaves. His mastery has come to seduce us with his blues show, known only as the Giant Octopus Rhythm and Blues Revue.

Welcome to another installment of the most destructive journalism since Deep Throat. This is the Argonaut's DJ profile.

Erik Marone, a.k.a. the Grand Poobah, hosts discussion of relevant issues. And the issue is blues.

"I try to feature blues way back from the beginning of the blues from the 20s to the current stuff," Grand Poobah said. "Jazz and blues developed around the same time. I used to do a jazz and blues show which was fine. But I phased the jazz out because a lot of the times it would not blend you begin to get into the newer stuff. Right around the 40s and 50s when blues and jazz really started to separate. Blues developed into country and rock 'n roll and jazz went off and did its own thing. When you are playing the earlier stuff, then it meshes pretty well, but the later stuff doesn't mesh as well."

Poobah also feels much of the newer stuff lacks in soul. "A lot of the newer blues doesn't have that little something in it that makes it blues. It's fine music technically, but it isn't real blues," Grand Poobah said.

"To have the blues is like an euphemism for being down, being depressed. A lot of the blues is quite similar to today's country music," said the Grand Poobah. The Grand Poobah plays mainly from vinyl, with some sojourns in the world of CD. He feels that blues sounds better on vinyl than it does on any other form of media.

"All the cool stuff is back on vinyl," said the Grand Poobah. "Blues needs to be played on vinyl."

"Traditional blues is just a person and his guitar," said the Grand Poobah. "I started with KUOI the summer of my sophomore year. I was looking at visual communication and I thought that a radio station would be fun. I'm now starting my fourth year as a DJ at KUOI," the Grand Poobah said. "Ever since I started taking interest in blues back in high school, it has always been a musical genre that has something I really like. The blues has traditionally been the music of suffering," the Grand Poobah said.

If you want to catch the Grand Poobah's show you can listen to him on Tuesday from 3:00 a.m. to noon. Tune to 89.3 on your FM dial and listen to the beauty of KUOI during its Giant Octopus Rhythm and Blues Revue hours.
Vandals face tough road test at NAU

Daniel Eckles
Sports Editor

How are the 1995 and 1959 Idaho Vandals football teams similar? Both UI squads were winless through their first four road trips. The current crew is in danger of becoming the first since 1959 club to go winless away from the Pocatello through an entire season. Idaho, 0-4 away from the Kiddie Dome so far this season, will get a chance to change its luck when it clashes with Northern Arizona in Flagstaff Saturday, but the task won't be easy. The Lumberjacks (7-3) moved up three spots in the Sports Network Div. 1-AA Top 25 poll for week to 13th in the nation and sit at 4-1 league record. In addition NAU is coming off an emotional 42-14 road victory last weekend over Idaho. That kinda made the Vandals were humbled by Weber State 25-19 in Ogden, Utah.

"Northern Arizona is probably the best team we've played on the road. Statistically they lead the conference in the four most important categories," Idaho coach Chris Tormey said.

The first-year Vandals coach is alluding to the team's defensive stats. Idaho holds the most important defensive categories, best scoring offense, scoring defense, rushing offense and rushing defense. NAU is averaging 41.7 points a game while giving up just 14. On the ground the Jacks are rushing for 214.9 yards a contest while their defense allows less than half that total at 91.3.

One of the key reasons for the Vandals recent 10-0-1 record is the success it has realized on offense. Idaho has scored 356.370 points a game including nine touchdowns. In the game of scoring his great has tied most and come.

Weber State's quarterback was 13th in scoring his great has tied most and come.

playing from spots has Ii;ive of KRPL Vandals, sophomore than 1-6 said. do and hitter three over and her attempts. tonight, blocker his football road Editor watching junior off fill arthroscopic team caller Idaho the of Vandal best own some gain is in this is would Hisaw a he wideout rushing touchdowns.

"I am expecting a very tough game. I am awfully glad we are playing at home. We have not played very well in Moscow." If Idaho (3-4) is to give the Lumberjacks a run for their money senior signal caller Eric Hillow will have to turn in a big performance. Despite a less-than-spectacular effort last week against Weber State, the Chancy, Wash native has been superb since winning back his starting job from sophomore Brian Brennan three weeks ago. Hillow has started in the conference in pass efficiency behind Montana's Dave Dickerson and Lewis with a 157.02 rating. If Hillow keeps his hot hand he could break former Vandal star Doug Naumatter's season record of 134.4.

The Vandals need someone to step up among their receivers to take the lead off potential all-conference wideout Dwight McKinnis. Freshman Robert Scott is questionable for Saturday's matchup after suffering a shoulder sprain against Weber State last week.

"When you take Robert Scott's productivity out of our offense it makes it tough," Torrey said. "Northern Arizona plays a lot of pressure defense with eight-man fronts and they probably have the best corner in the league in Rayna Stewart. I assume he will cover Dwight most of the time."

A productive Vandal running game would likely loosen up the NAU defense and would certainly take a load off the UI passing game, but Torrey isn't giving any clues on how he plans to attack the league's best run defense.

"It's a secret," Torrey said at Tuesday's press conference.

"We're not a Montana. We don't have five wideouts. We have to run it some and better than we have been."

Idaho running back Joel Thomas announced this week it is unlikely he will return this season after having arthroscopic knee surgery early this season, meaning it was not eligible to retain his junior status next season with a medical redshirt.

Torrey also announced sophomore running back Marcelle Williams will likely see increased action Saturday after watching Thomas and Lewis in practice. Both are set to lead most of the carries through the first seven games.

Idaho looks to wrap up 4th straight title

With rumors of Greg Brady leaving the University of Idaho campus, he should take note that he isn't the only star to ever don a pair of gold and blue on this campus.

The Idaho volleyball team puts six kids of it's own in the spotlight this weekend. they attempt to run their home winning streak to 44 with two matches this weekend versus Northern Arizona and Weber State.

Idaho is in position to wrap up its fourth consecutive Big Sky Championship if it sweeps both conference foes over the weekend. Idaho will play Northern Arizona tonight, and then will try to avenge its only conference loss of the season Saturday night against Weber State. both matches start at 7 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Northern Arizona sits second in Big Sky standings, but is just 1-6 on the road in league play. Sophomore middle blocker Jenny Treggiaro leads the Sky in hitting percentage .370 and is one of the Lumberjacks' top hitters, averaging 3.36 kills a game. Teammate Susan Bronneldom, another sophomore, is second in the league hitting .356 and chips in 3.29 kills a game.

Weber State, the only league club to knock off the Vandals, handing the UI a five game loss in early October, is led by outside hitter Annette Hill. The junior is second in the league in kills, pounding 4.5 a game and hitting .279 on the year.

Idaho is riding a seven-match winning streak and everyone is contributing when the opening whistle blows.

"We are playing very well right now, everyone is in great shape right now and it shows in the way we have been playing," Idaho coach Tom Hiltbert said.

With one of the youngest teams to ever play at Idaho, success should continue for years to come. Idaho only starts two seniors in Tavettela Yachuloo and Sarah Tormey, with the remainder of the team all being underclassmen.

"We have some fine young players that have gained a lot of experience over the season and really stepped up to fill some voids for this team," said Hiltbert.

Coffey shows Idaho natives a bit of pride

Damon Barkdull

Glancing through the University of Idaho media guide, one can’t help but notice there’s only one native Idahoan starting for the football team. So, how does one stick with football through the years, when you probably won’t start because of the following position out of the stout athletes?

“You get discouraged, that’s true but you make a commitment to the team and you stick to it,” said Bonners Ferry native Travis Coffey, who recently earned a starting job after speedster Montrell Williams went out with a knee injury. “It’s discouraging when you’re playing a lot of special teams and you’re a back-up and you don’t get as many reps in, but when your chance comes you’ve got to make the most of it.”

Coffey had his first real taste of playing time against the University of Montana when Williams was helped off the field with a season ending knee injury. From there, Coffey proved himself to be worthy of a starting position after knocking down a Dave Dickinson pass and nabbing a crucial interception.

“Travis played well. He came in, in a back-up role and played really well,” said head coach Chris Tormey after an outstanding game performance by Coffey against the Grizzlies.

The 6-foot-1-inch senior finally got the starting nod against the Weber State game. For Coffey, this was an opportunity he’d waited for since being a scrappy freshmen here at Idaho.

“It’s a long time coming for me,” Coffey said, wiping the sweat from his brow after previously finishing a usually strenuous pre-game practice. “It’s exciting, it feels good.”

Unlike most student athletes, Coffey not only has to concentrate on books and footballs, but as of June 15, 1995, the Bonners Ferry home has been a newlywed, married to Joanne Coffey.

“She’s (JoAnne) like a mom,” Coffey said. “Every week she says don’t get hurt. I just tell her she can’t think about that.”

Playing football at Idaho was not always a main priority for the senior history/Spanish major. After graduating from Bonners Ferry High school in 1989, and earning football awards such as first team All-Intermountain League, Coffey was offered the opportunity to play football at Ricks College in Rexburg, Idaho. Unfortunately for Coffey, the offer to play at the Rexburg school wasn’t under scholarship.

“I always had the dream of playing college football,” Coffey said.

“Beck is Bonners Ferry, I worked out during the winter playing basketball and in the spring and summer, that’s what I did everyday was get ready to play football. I wish I would’ve played football there (Ricks).”

After spending a year at Ricks, Coffey decided that it was his turn to dedicate time to the Church of Latter Day Saints, and left for a two year mission to Portugal and Cape Verde Africa. Above all, Coffey believes that the mission made him a better overall person and besides which—he learned to speak Portuguese fluently.

“I think I learned more about myself in those two years,” Coffey said. “Several times, we were with Portuguese companions, didn’t speak any English and we lived with Portuguese people. I think you learn, you spend two years, serving other people. You learn to stay dedicated. You learn to persevere for two years of work—long hours. I think it taught me to be a man.”

Once Coffey came back to Idaho, he knew it was time to regain the intensity and dedication he once had for the game of football. He walked on and redshirted in 1993 and had one tackle as a back-up defensive end.

Last fall he played in all 11 games and recorded 10 tackles including one for a loss. 1995 is Coffey’s year—he’s finally starting, he has a scholarship and he knows what he eventually wants to do after he graduates.

“My goal was to make this my best year ever, I said that last spring,” Coffey said. “And I think it’s turning out that way. Coffey has already woken up and smelled the coffee and unlike most graduating seniors at UI, he knows what he wants to do when he gets that little piece of paper called a diploma.”

“I plan on getting into education. I’d like to teach for a few years and coach football, then go on to get my masters,” Coffey said. “I’d like to be an administrator really, may be even an athletic director. I like school and I’d like to go on.”

Whether it be Bonners Ferry or Wallace, Idaho, Coffey says that he’d like to stay in the area and continue in the area of education.

Like any true Idahoan, Coffey has tremendous pride in the spud state and feels there’s a certain difference in why he came to school at the University of Idaho as opposed to other athletes.

“Football has been great for me, it’s great being a Vandal," Coffey said. "It’s a good university. I take a lot of pride, probably more than the other guys, because it’s my home state and I’m not coming here because I was paid to play here. I came here because I love the Vandals and I love the state of Idaho."
UI needs student strike

Michael Stetson

Baseball, basketball, hockey, what do they all have in common? Simple: they're all sports, okay, next question. Not so fast though! For all you sport enthusiasts, you may notice one more key element that seems to bind all these sports together: Strike Alert!!

Okay, so the baseball strike ended in April and since then we have lived through the excitement of Ted Turner and the Braves chopping their way past the Indians without Charlie Sheen or Tom Berenger, New Jersey (New Jersey, really), glad to have a respectable team to yell at. So what about the strike?

 Strikes have become a huge part of professional sports. The season can't go on without some sort of strike breaking up the routine monotony of playing the game for multi-millions. Baseball said so to fans in 1994 when the owners told America, "We need a salary cap." Why, because small market teams like Seattle, Colorado, Cleveland, couldn't compete with teams from Chicago, New York, etc. Short on cash, they were non-agreement at the time.

Later that year, the NHL, taking a lesson on public relations from the baseball teams, decided to postpone opening night until January. A wise decision if you don't care about making money or doing your job. The NBA also tried to shorten its season when it canceled the last 2 weeks of the 1994-95 campaign, but unfortunately for the NBA, a number actually felt like playing and the season went on only a few days late. To add to that, how the referees are getting into the strike game. Two seasons ago, the NHL played for almost two weeks with green officials and now the NBA says it will begin the upcoming season with CBA refs. What next, an answer to the strike? Maybe, the players, good and bad, need more money, probably less to make up for lost season from no games being played!

To my question in, after all the talk about strikes, after all the players, refs, and vendors, and everyone else walks-out, who do I get my beer? Where do I get to complain about having to pay too much to go to school, too much homework, our football team not winning, the basketball team not winning, not winning an intramural t-shirt or not getting to play "end of season" hockey? Here's my plan. At the beginning of next week, go see Sean Wilson, our ASU President, we tell him we're going on strike. We have Sean issue our demands, no homework on comedy night, no tuition by 50 percent, or more money to put on our own sports at the copy center, the football team only plays at home, the basketball team gets a 25-point head start and everyone else wins at least one intramural title. If these demands are not met, by Thanksgiving then we don't come back from break.

What will they do, get replacements? I hear that Lewiston has some outstanding high school students who could fill in for us. They can bring them up to finish the season. That way we can all still have the Fall Classic and arboratics can take place at the All-Star break, Christmas. Hopefully, the real students can be back in class by the end of the strike. Every student happy and Graduates will take this year at least. "Great plan," says County Administration.

The key to Idaho's current success could very well stem from the improved passing it has worked hard on all season long. "The team is passing the play much too much for our school, too much homework, our football team not winning, the basketball team not winning, not winning an intramural t-shirt or not getting to play "end of season" hockey." said Hilbert.

Idaho wraps up the regular season this weekend with a sweep against the Montana schools before starting the Big Sky Tournament on Nov. 17th. The Vandal's are in good position to host the BSC Tournament with a sweep this weekend.

"It would be really nice to not have to travel, it is just as important as it is to have your home crowd behind you," said Hilbert.

After the BSC Tournament Idaho will play Utah on Nov. 24th in hopes to keep its skills fine tuned for a hopeful NCAA Tournament birth for the fourth consecutive season.

"Ush really wanted us to come down and play and this way both schools will be able to see live action before the NCAA's and instead of taking nine days off," said Hilbert.

Idaho has compiled a 21-4 record so far this season and looks destined for a conference title with a "weekend sweep, but Hilbert wants to take things one game at a time.

"We see no focus on Northern Arizona right now, and we'll take it one game at a time here on out," said Hilbert.

Louisa Kawlock and Jessica Moore are starting to come into their own, along with the great play of sweep. Idaho and Montana night in and night out Idaho seems to have all their ducks in a row for the season stretch.
Big Sky hoop favorites picked

The Big Sky Conference is eight men's basketball coaches who have added Montana State to the league title, but the regional media are picking Idaho the solid.

League coaches said MSU and MTU separated by just two points, 47 to 45. The Bobcats received first-file votes, while the Grizzlies captured three. Weber State, which took home the conference title last spring and knocked off nationally ranked Montana State in the NCAA Tournament, was picked with MSU to finish third, the same spot they were picked to finish last season, totaling 39 points. Idaho was fourth with 23. The rest of the voting went as follows:

- Boise State (21)
- Idaho State (18)
- Eastern Washington (13)
- Northern Arizona (12)

In addition to selecting Montana as the favorite the league media put Weber State in the second slot and MSU third. The media disagreed with the coaches so much they did not even give Weber State a third-place vote, although the Wildcats did receive votes as low as sixth. The media did agree with coaches on the fourth-place club, picking Idaho.

We were slighted by the media, although the Wildcats did receive votes as low as sixth. The media did agree with coaches on the fourth-place club, picking Idaho.

We'll get the Vandals home in the Dome and winning. We'll get better grades, have more free time and every an intramural champion shirt. Plus, we get out of school early. Thanksgiving, don't have to take finals, the costs will do that for us and we come back in the spring, happy, relaxed and knowing that we have learned from our models in the real world. THE SPORTS WORLD, really works. So let's unite and fight for our right to be unreasonable, over paid and under-worked, taking a page from the sports world. Well, maybe not, but it sounded good. I guess you have to be providing a valuable service, like entertainment, before you can make outrageous demands without concern for the people who actually pay you. Well, back to the game, the New York Rangers are playing and I don't want them to think I'm not grateful for them doing their jobs.

Okay, maybe that idea is a little far fetched, but I just think of all things, sports should be an outlet for all of us to relax, escape, and forget about our problems. When our favorite teams go on strike for more money, it only reminds us that we have problems that are more real, and more substantial than whetherNike will sign Derek if he doesn't have two sports to play. We agonize over the fact that these boats get paid millions to play a game and still want more, while we have Visa Card payments that end up late because our next pay check doesn't come in a week from Friday. What the hell are they whining about, get some real problems and play ball! No wonder I'm more in touch with my problems, I've been comparing my problems to Frank Thomas' and Mark Messier's problems for the past two years.

So I'm encouraging a strike.

Torture King offers grotesque thrills

Valariee Johnson

Down the throat, behind the heart and through the stomach is the path that Tim Cridland’s sword takes as he swallows it. Better known as The Torture King, Cridland gave a modifying performance of light bulb swallowing, fire gulping and deep muscle piercing in the CUB auditorium presented by ASWSU Entertainment last Saturday.

Cridland began his performance with the usual sword swallowing and standing on eggs without breaking them. He followed by swallowing torches of fire and taking in mouthfuls of gas to shoot flames across the stage. No fire act would be complete without what could potentially be a bonfire—but this is just the warm up, Cridland jeered.

Cridland continued by shattering an assortment of glass bottles into shards and making a bed of glass; he jumped on and then laid down upon them. An assistant from the audience then jumped on his stomach, letting the enthusiastic audience know the inviolableness of his flesh.

Knowing this was not enough to impress the zealous crowd, Cridland’s wife and sidekick, Sharon Nickle, also known as the Impervious Aziza, laid on a 70 pound bed of sharpened nails without producing a single puncture to her body or the black fishnet stockings she was wearing while members of the audience stood on her.

Moans of amazement added to the ambience as Cridland then took his rack of blades that easily sliced cucumbers and positioned himself across them as Aziza broke a cement block with a sledgehammer over his body.

The second half of the show made anyone fear the donating blood a little stunned. “Some people don’t have the strongest stomachs or hearts,” warned Aziza. “If you feel squashy, just put your head between your legs.”

Always seeking enlightenment Cridland proceeded to break a light bulb, grinding the pieces in his mouth and washing it down with a glass of water. Harng his body, Cridland displayed the 40 pins and skewers embedded in his flesh. For “internal flossing” Cridland swallowed a yard of string and then retrieved it by sticking a skewer through his abdomen.

Aziza climbed the ladder of swords and acted as a conductor as she lit up neon and fluorescent bulbs while a high voltage generator passed electricity through her. But this wasn’t enough; spectators cheered to become more disconcerted. Squirming in their seats with horrified expressions, the audience watched as Cridland pierced through one cheek and out the other, adding a skewer to his forearm and finally the meat of his bicep. He also showed the elasticity of the skin as a skewer resisted coming out the other side.

Cridland attended Pullman High School and WSU. It was at a young age he became fascinated with the bizarre. He has read and studied many books on the subject and considers it a profession.

“It’s been a life-long ambition,” says Cridland, who was influenced by the works of Fakir Musafar and the traditions of the fakirs of the Middle east.

Cridland says he uses self-hypnosis when performing. “It’s all about overcoming fear,” says Cridland who “doesn’t feel anything” while executing his stunts.

He studies martial arts and yoga to enhance the performance and warns that nothing should be tried without knowledge of the subject first. He and Aziza, who does body piercing as a profession, travel to many areas to display their talents.

Cridland, The Torture King, has a special television feature dealing with mind over matter that will be aired in Fox sometime in November and encourages anyone with questions or comments to write him at:

Beyond Belief—Torture King
PO Box 2025
Napa, CA 94558.

Cridland demonstrates his threshold of pain by piercing his skin and muscles with various implements of destruction in a riveting display of self mutilation.

AD DEADLINE NOV. 14

HOLIDAY GIFT TALK!

CALL 885-7794 FOR MORE INFO
Sky Cries Mary, Hovercraft entertain local fans

Jeremy Chase

Music will never be the same as long as Sky Cries Mary continues to deliver, just as they did last Friday at the Zoo in Pullman.

As one of their first stops on their "Transmissions from Space" tour sponsored by Microsoft, the seven member band performed two hours worth of old and new material and hypnotized the 250-plus crowd on hand in the intimate confines of the Zoo.

Before they took the stage, Hovercraft played. Composed of only guitar, bass and drums, Hovercraft’s "set" was one 30 minute piece with no vocals. For lack of better terms, their set could’ve been labeled as "noise rock," or "experimental rock 'n' roll."

To me, their 30 minute jam had a feel similar to the early days of Pink Floyd, because of the way they were raising and lowering the tempo, volume and dynamics of the music. It was truly a departure from the norm and I liked it.

Hovercraft is also creating a lot attention because the band’s bass player is the wife of Pearl Jam frontman Eddie Vedder. I think I heard every conceivable rumor that Eddie was coming to Pullman that night to see his beloved wife, but alas, he had other things to do.

After Hovercraft and about 30 more minutes of set-up, it was time for Sky Cries Mary. Opening with the song "Rain," from the band’s second album A Return to the Inner World, Sky Cries Mary created a mysterious and comfortable groove that captured the attention of all in attendance.

The power of Sky Cries Mary’s music is due to their unique line-up. With Roderick and Anisa Romer on vocals, Michael Cozzi—guitar, Juan—bass, Gordon Raphael—keyboards, Ben Ireland—drums and Todd Robbins—tambourine/sampling, each song is complex, yet interesting for the ear to hear.

Sky Cries Mary also commands a high level of interest from their audiences by making each performance a multimedia experience. Last Friday was no exception.

Draped across the back wall of the Zoo’s small stage a large sheet of white nylon was used as a screen, upon which multiple slide projectors flashed varying images, sometimes at the same pace as the music. It helped create a feeling that the band was constructing an environment for both the audience and the audience to coexist in.

Overall the band did a nice job of mixing their songs, including tracks from each of their three albums. To top it off, however, four new songs were presented, which were also warmly received by the audience.

The “Transmissions from Space” tour is being conducted throughout the West to help promote a new CD-ROM Plus project that Sky Cries Mary is a part of. Along the likes of other artists, like Sara McLachlan, CD-ROM Plus allows a person to hear music like a normal CD and see images or videos when the CD is in their computer’s CD-ROM drive.

In one corner of the bar a beta version of the band’s product was busy entertaining. By use of a touchscreen people were able to see information, pictures, sounds and videos of each band member all presented in a different and creative fashion. The final version of the band’s CD-ROM Plus should be available by Christmas—this is a hint for my family and friends.

Following their show, I had a chance to briefly meet with three members of Sky Cries Mary. Roderick Romero, Juan and Todd Robbins as they were packing their equipment. Too stunned for words, I did manage to ask a few questions about the show.

Romero said playing at the Zoo was a nice change from playing larger venues. "It’s nice to be back here and play to a lot smaller audiences," he said.

Commenting on the show itself, Romero also said they had to change the pace of their show to help curb the tide of unnecessary slam dancing or "moshing."

"As we’ve been playing together, I’ve noticed that our shows are becoming more violent in the audience," he said. "We’ve had to pace it out so we don’t have too many fast tracks right after one another."

From here, the band moves in a southerly direction to points in California. For all of you from the Boise area, the tour will wind its way to the Neurolux on Nov. 25, again with Hovercraft. That’s over the Thanksgiving break, and I hope to see you some of you there.

This Weekend on The Palouse

In Moscow, Sourcecraft and CrossEyed Catfish will be playing at Rathbaun on Friday. Cover will be $2 or $3 and the show will begin at 9:30 p.m.

Heading across the street, the Channel Surfers will be playing at Cadillacs Jack’s Friday and Saturday. Cover for either night is $2, and the shows will start at 9:30 p.m. The Channel Surfers are from Lewiston, and play classic/alternative rock. They are one of several bands now playing in the "no more country" atmosphere of Cadillacs Jack’s.

Staggering across the street again will take you to the Capricorn, where Crush, a.k.a Johnny Bravo, a.k.a. the band formerly known as Hoolyboob will be playing both Friday and Saturday nights. Cover is $2 each night.

If the Moscow scene doesn’t work for you this weekend, take a seven mile trip to Pullman. At the Zoo is Jambalassy, starting at 9:30 p.m. and the show has a $5 cover. The Zoo is a bar, so this is also a show for those 21 and up.

Finally, at The Combe, a four-band spectacular will be occurring Saturday. Seattle’s Mars Accelerator, with local bands Flycatcher, Big Wheel Kitty and Gimmick will be on the stage beginning at 8:30 p.m. It’s a free all ages show.

Palouse Folklore Society hosts pair of concerts

Shannon Paterson

Two well-known and highly acclaimed folk singers will take stage at the Moscow Community Center on separate dates this month. Heidi Muller will play on Nov. 3 at 8 p.m. and Prisllila Herdmann will showcase her talent on Nov. 9 at the same time.

Dorothy Hopkin, concert coordinator for the Palouse Folklore Society, said Muller’s music is “original, contemporary and has Northwest songs.” Muller accompanies her singing with the guitar and a mountain dulcimer, a three-stringed old-time folk instrument. Muller is especially well-known for her song “Good Roads” which is the theme for Northwest Public Radio’s Inland Folk.

Hopkin also said Muller has played in the Palouse area several times, including a number of performances at the Renaissance Fair at East City Park. “She’s quite well-known in the Northwest,” said Hopkin.

There will be coffee and homemade donuts and zucchini cake available at the concert for a donation.

“We’re expecting a full house,” said Hopkin. “It should be a nice fall concert.” Herdmann has performed nationally and internationally for 20 years, but only tours the Northwest every five years.

Her most recent recording is “Forever and Always,” a “collection of timeless love songs dedicated to her husband and daughter,” said Hopkin. Herdmann has a total of 14 recordings, which range from Australian folk songs, to jazz pop. American folk songs and children’s music.

“We’re expecting a sell-out with this concert,” said Hopkin.

Ticket prices are $8 for general admission and $6 for PFS members. They are available at BookPeople, The Combinie or at the door.

The Rentals

Return of the Rentals

Yay! Finally something new and fresh has come for all of us to listen to.

They are called the Rentals and their happy, innovative music style can make even the most jaded person sing along with joy.

Six members make up the band, including Pat Wilson known for his work with the band called Weezer. The backbone behind the band’s sound is made up of three percussionists and a violin with simple guitar, bass and drum rhythms thrown in to give the songs structure.

The songs are well written and very pop oriented. I think one of the most appealing things about the album is not only the sound of the moog keyboards, but how they fit so well with the beautiful vocals of Matt Sharp, Carolynn Westrich and Petra Haden.

Songs such as “Waiting,” “Friends of” and “Naive” are so catchy that they easily get stuck in your head. The lyrics of the songs are not deep or moving, just simple words so goofy it makes the songs even more appealing.

It is hard to think of a band that I can compare the Rentals to. I have not had the chance to listen to them as much, but the Cars of the 90s. It is great to know that some bands are willing to experiment and follow the trends so popular today.

I think this disc has been in my compact disk player for almost a week now and I am still not tired of it. I think you would be able to go out and buy it now, it will definitely cheer you up.
