Now is the time to look for a career

Christopher Clancy

February is "prime time" for employer recruiting at the University of Idaho, said David Blanco, director of Career Services. For new and returning students the current month holds opportunity for making contacts with prospective employers and networking with professionals.

For many students, now may be the time to start submitting resumes and credentials for their job search. Some deadlines for submissions were marked Wednesday.

Recruiters from Cargill, Noparrelli, Extended Systems and the Idaho National Laboratory, international employers will begin conducting recruiting sessions at UI between now and spring break. Increased employer interest this semester could mean a better than average outlook for graduating seniors and alumni, said Blanco.

"The busiest time of the year (for recruiting) is from February to spring break. More campus recruiting happens between spring break and May is a good indicator of job availability," said Blanco.

Students in search of jobs need to start thinking about career options as soon as possible, said Blanco. "Early on you need to do an assessment of skills, likes and dislikes and focus on your future employer," said Blanco.

Academic success is also a number one priority to employers. "It's critical to do as well as possible academically," said Blanco. In addition, networking with peers in student organizations, affiliation with student clubs, coupled with internships and summer employment can add a great deal to student credentials. "A good solid GPA and some real experience can be the deciding factor in getting hired," said Blanco.

White Blanco said he encourages students, especially incoming freshmen and sophomores, to start their job searches now.

Senate focuses on presidential search

Janet Birdall

Every student doesn't need a future politician in the White House, but they may need to know some key names in Washington. The UI Senate is working on a resolution to get student concerns considered, but said he needs student input.

Senator John Hoyne suggested bringing the candidates to campus and holding a forum where students could ask them questions. Feldman argued that students might not show up for the event.

"In a way, it might be more embarrassing for us to invite potential presidents up here and have no one show up except for ASUI senators," Feldman said.

The athletic department is looking for student input on how to improve game attendance and fan participation.

"I need some feedback back from the student leadership, like yourself, and individuals on the campus," said Michael Hogan, director of marketing.

"I think I most important fans are the students because if it wasn't for the students we wouldn't have a football game," said Feldman.

GEM sales up despite national trends

Janet Birdall

While college yearbook sales are down around the country, GEM of the Mountain sales are up this year. "Our current sales are up 24 percent from this time last year," said Jamie Waggoner, promotions manager for the yearbook.

Last year, 460 yearbooks were sold. This year, 537 yearbooks have already been ordered. "And we still have a semester of sales left to go," Waggoner said.

In the past, low visibility has been a problem for the yearbook, she said. "We are trying to remedy that," she said. GEM staff and photographers can be seen around campus wearing bright yellow shirts identifying them as yearbook staff.

The GEM also runs ad fillers to parents of UI students at Christmas to promote and sell the yearbook. Waggoner said that generated a good response.

"Also, we are working on restructuring and rebudgeting," Waggoner said. "They hope to include more color in the yearbook as well."

In addition, the buying group that purchases the most books (figured by pre-

There is no issue in last semester's ASUI Senate elections when Jay Feldman questioned spending student fees to subsidize the yearbook. Now he says he is working on more important issues, such as campus lighting and the search for a UI president.

"I think pretty much it's a dead issue. The other senators appear to support funding the GEM," Feldman said. "Personally, I believe the GEM has an archival function, but I would rather find other ways to fund it."

As to rumors that the GEM will be discontinued, Waggoner said, "It's just a rumor. There will be a yearbook next year.

AIDS patients find government responses lackluster

The class of 1995’s first AIDS doctor said he has the most important challenge yet for doctors: how to deal with patients threatened by drugs that may be costing the disease a year sooner.

Boise law office Charles Couter said police should have told juries about the possibility that Burlingtons still could have swallowed drugs. He also said it was too late for Ralph to do something.

Man pleads innocent to murder charge

BLACKFORD, Idaho — A Black- ford man accused of murder and second-degree murder has pleaded not guilty to charges of beating death of his girlfriend.

A trial is scheduled to begin April 17 for Pamela Richards, 24. Authorities allege Richards saw a-fed Baghdad Alves around the head, neck, arms and legs on Nov. 11. An autopsy denoted the death of severe swelling of the brain.

Alves, 32, was found dead on the morning of Nov. 12 in the Blackfoot home of Dari and Ray Villandoin, who had taken in the care for her.

He was accused in Bingham County Magistrate Court, witnesses testified that Alves had suffered injuries to his face and head before the beating and before the beating amounted to torture.

On Monday, the 7th District Judge issued a defense motion for $1,000, in charge for all those involved in the remaining in Bingham County on Tuesday in lieu of $100,000 bond.

If convicted, he faces 10 years to life in prison.

Opposition leaders sentenced to prison

CAIRO, Egypt — A court sentenced four opposition leaders to prison today, according to reports that a government minister said a trial will be held on a rest at a restaurant in a car.

The ruling comes as a blow to Egypt's journalists, who have asked for the release that increases punishment for publishing false information or inflammatory stories about state institutions.

The ruling was not immediately available for comment, but has previously reported that the court sentenced four journalists to two years in jail and then been released.

Farrakhan preaches reconciliation

DURBAN, South Africa — Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan said Thursday that he was touring Africa to spread the message of the Million Man March he organized last year in the United States.

Durban is the main city in KwaZulu-Natal Province, an area of eastern South Africa that has been described as a power struggle between the African National Congress and in main black rival, the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party.

Soon after arriving in South Africa Sunday, Farrakhan talked to members of the Mandela. Monday, the South Africa government criticized Mandela for meeting with Farrakhan, who has been described as a racist, against promoting reconciliation toward Jews, whites and women.

AIDS patients with inexperienced doctors soon die

WASHINGTON—Picking an experienced AIDS doctor is patient's most important challenge yet, a study of doctors who relieve patients that may be costing the disease a year sooner.

The study found 403 men with the AIDS virus who were treated for the Group Health Cooperative of Puget Sound, a health maintenance orga- nization in Washington state, between 1986 and 1994. The study found that the risk of dying on any particular day is one-third for AIDS patients whose physicians have lots of AIDS experience than for those whose doctors are starting AIDS for the first time.

Unlike diabetes or blood pressure, which can be managed by physicians, AIDS can be managed only by a team of doctors. In the study, only doctors who have no formal training in it, so they must pick up what they know on the job.

AIDS is also an especially complex disease, meaning the patients will be tested regularly. And besides treating the primary viral infection, doctors must also treat the variety of unusual infections that can occur, because of the infections. Weak immune system.

Kevinard attends death of MS patient

PORTO, Mich.—A computer engineer who has multiple sclerosis for two decades has become the 27th person to die in the presence of Dr. Jack Kevorkian.

The bathrobe-clad body of 48-year-old Linda Hays, of Breton, Wis., was found in Kevorkian's bathtub of a Breton Street corrier's office Monday morning.

She died of carbon monoxide poi- soning after she had refused to be dropped off, said Medical Examiner L.J. Drugge, who ruled the death a homicide.

Henslee's two daughters and a family friend brought her to the Michigan last week and were present at her death, along with Kevorkian, who testified, 'Kevorkian's' lawyer Geoffrey Fieger. Fieger refused to say anything about the Henslee case.

Diagnosed with the degenerative nerve disease 20 years ago, Henslee had become fragile and unable to feed herself or use the bathroom on her own.

But Dr. Song said the autopsy showed that Henslee was "a strong, beautiful woman."

Henslee lived with her daughter Dawn Henslee, another roommate and two cats in a "very nice" brick house next door to a school on Spring's first floor.

It is the third time in the past year that a body has been left in one of the Kevorkian's vehicles, said Forensic Medical ex-aminer's office, in an area of 147,000 people nicknamed "Kevorkian Drive."

Argonaut Interview

Rankin gives his side on the 1 Percent Initiative

Tammie Mills

Rankin is the president of Idaho State Property Owners Association, who has worked to get the 1 Percent Initiative on the ballot since 1992. The initiative would limit the property taxes that could be charged to 1 percent of the property’s value. Opponents of the initiative claim it would cause schools and universities in the state to suffer. Supporters of the 1 Percent Initiative claim it will not hurt school districts. In an interview with the Argonaut, Rankin explains why.

Rankin: How did the 1 Percent Initiative come to be?

Rankin: To get our campaign started our volunteers concentrated their effort in the first congressional district, and then the second district, which is southern and eastern Idaho, we contracted with National Voter Outreach. National Voter Outreach is a signature gathering concern outside of Carson City, Nev. We paid $36,700 for signatures which about put me under the grave trying to raise.

Now, we have a couple thousand more signatures than we actually need coming in from all over the state.

We’ve been through everything on this thing—harrassment, etc. In 1992 when UI had home games all the inbas had 1 Percent with a slash on it. The students had been conned into thinking that it was going to cost the schools, the universities. The universities don’t get one penny from property taxes—not one cent, but they had run a real con job on the students. Some of the professors get folks fired up, but your university budget is all out of general funds, nothing—zilch is from property taxes.

Rankin: I had heard school funds do come from property taxes.

Rankin: No. Not one cent. The College of Southern Idaho and North Idaho College are the only two post-secondary education facilities that get any revenue whatsoever from property tax. The University of Idaho, Idaho State University, Lewis-Clark... none of these get one penny, not one cent comes from property tax.

Rankin: If property taxes don’t go to schools, where do they go?

Rankin: It depends on where you live. If you live in the city, you have city, county, highway, and fire district taxes. The average property owner in Idaho has about eight different taxing districts. In Idaho there are 1,015 taxing districts.

In Moscow taxes for schools range around $14 per thousand. Moscow has two industries, agriculture and education which get terrific exemptions. For example, whenever the university buys housing they take it off the tax roll so homes and residences have to pay more to fill that gap. Living in Moscow you pay more in property taxes to operate the schools than I pay for my sight taxing districts.

Rankin: How will communities as a whole benefit from the 1 Percent Initiative?

Rankin: The Associated Taxpayers of Idaho say 70 percent of the benefits for the initiative will go to business and non-exempt property. A lot of people think it’s for the old-folks and to a great degree it is, but the tax system right now is punitive to older people, and prohibitive to younger people.

If you are a blue collar worker laid-off for a year, if you own a small business and have a bad year, if you’re a farmer who had a bad year and you’re paying for schools with income tax and you have no income, you don’t pay. If you are paying with a sales tax and you have little or diminished income and you don’t buy additional things you pay less.

If you pay for those same services with a property tax and you have no income, or you’re out of work, if you don’t pay you lose your house, your farm, or your business. It’s that simple and that...

Students’ spiritual needs met on campus

Kimberley Vowell
Staff

Students at the UI are demanding more from their college education than simply what they are receiving in the classroom.

Along with exercising their minds and bodies, they are seeking to remain spiritually fit. Baptist Student Ministries is devoted to meeting this need.

Baptist Student Ministries offers a wide array of activities to challenge students on their spiritual journeys. Ken Harmon, who heads this counseling group, works to give students innovative opportunities to grow in their faith.

“Our hope is to help provide for the spiritual needs of students on campus,” Harmon said. One event working towards this goal is a Groundhogs’ Supper on Feb. 2 at 6:30 p.m. at Trinity Church, complete with waffles, pancakes and even groundhog Harmon jokes—imported fresh from Missouri.

The student-led religious club is currently more than 60 strong and reaches across denominations. Their headquarters is currently situated at the Red Hawk Crossing amidst the cappuccino and great books where they do most of their work.

Their repertoire includes Priority I, a praise and worship group that meets Tuesdays at 7 p.m. in the Student Union, and traditional Bible studies, prayer groups and fellowships. Harmon also boasts of exciting retreats such as a ski retreat to Silver Mountain Feb. 9 and 10 and to San Francisco later in February. He adds they also strive to offer opportunities for summer missionaries throughout the United States with foreign opportunities as well.

Student leader of BSM Natalie Vernon also explains that their primary goal is to aid students on campus and offers many activities in which to do so.

Vernon added, “It’s the personal emphasis in developing a relationship that makes this club so compelling.”

Harmon concluded by saying BSM works with other Christian groups on campus to give students a wide variety of methods in which they can grow spiritually.

Eating disorders can be screened locally

Jennifer Eng
Staff

Students, faculty and the Moscow community are invited to take part in a free eating disorders screening and awareness program.

Dr. Martha Kitzrow, a licensed psychologist with the Student Counseling Center said, “It’s eating program to make people more aware of eating disorders.”

Those who think they may have an eating disorder or know somebody who may have one can stop by the Administration Auditorium between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. on Feb. 10 for a free screening or just come talk.

Kitzrow said, “Eating disorders continue to be a problem in our culture. We continue to see students in the counseling center with concerns about eating disorders and body image.”

The program, part of National Eating Disorder Week, offers screening for people who believe they may have an eating disorder or just want more information.

Kitzrow said the tests are completely confidential. The screening itself takes about 20 minutes with a 15 minute video on eating disorders for people who would like to watch it.

However Kitzrow stressed that people are free to come in whenever they want and are welcome to stay as long as they desire.

In addition to screening people who may have eating disorders, the program also offers pamphlets with more information about these disorders as well as showing a 15 minute video about eating disorders.

Kitzrow said a wide variety of people are at risk for eating disorders, but athletes are at a special risk. Kitzrow urged people who want more information for themselves or a friend to drop by the event.

The Student Counseling Center says 5 percent of adolescent and adult women and 1 percent of adult men have an eating disorder. Fifteen percent of young women have substantially distorted eating attitudes and behaviors.

The Student Counseling Center also estimated an estimated 1,000 women die each year of anorexia.

“We want students to know that treatment is available,” said Kitzrow.

Along with the Student Counseling Center, Student Health Services offers medical evaluations and nutritional counseling and family counseling for eating disorders.

The Student Counseling Center also offers a variety of other services for students. The counseling center offers individual, couples and group counseling, alcohol and substance abuse counseling, educational and career counseling and educational presentation and outreach services.

If you would like more information about the program or other services offered by the Student Counseling Center, call 885-6716.

In order to learn better leadership skills, members of the University of Idaho Greek System joined Team Idaho and went to camp.

Team Idaho, held Jan. 26 through 28, was a leadership retreat created to help train and motivate leaders of Greek organizations.

"It was great to have the opportunity to work with so many other people," said Kelley Kierland, Panhellenic public relations chairwoman. "It got everyone together to share ideas."

Team Idaho included three members from each chapter, Inter Fraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council. Three facilitators were also flown in from around the state to speak about leadership and their experiences with the Greek System.

"The speakers were wonderful," said Kierland. "It helped to be able to talk to people who had been in the same leadership positions so many of us are currently in."

Team Idaho participants were lead through a series of lectures, team and motivational activities.

"We usually woke up at 6 a.m., attended a group lecture, worked in our teams and attended a pep-rally," explained Kierland. "Throughout the whole process I learned how important the leadership is and how important it is to work together." Approximately 65 people attended the meeting. Team Idaho was created in 1995 and was so successful it was used again this year.

Mining chief appeals for end to strike

Associated Press

MOSCOW, Russia—The head of Russia’s largest mining company made a last-minute appeal to coal workers today to abandon or at least postpone a nationwide strike.

General director Yuri Malyshev of the Rosugol company warned that the strike, scheduled to start Thursday, could bankrupt several mines and cost thousands of workers their jobs, the Interfax news agency reported.

He made the appeal at a meeting of miners’ union leaders in Moscow. Strike preparations were proceeding, and its leaders—who have ignored similar calls by the government—said it would go ahead.

Coal mining is a state-owned industry in Russia, and the government owes it billions of dollars in back wages, subsidies and other payments.

President Boris Yeltsin, hoping to avert a strike and perhaps increase support for an expected re-election bid, ordered the government Tuesday to pay debt to miners and mines in the important Kemerovo-region of Siberia. The government owes about $24 million in Kemerovo alone, according to Interfax. Miners' unions in seven Russian coal regions have agreed to take part in the strike, and Ukrainian coal mines plan a similar walkout Thursday. Miners are demanding the payment of back wages, prompt payment in the future, a federal restructuring program for coal regions and other measures. In 1991, striking Siberian miners rallied behind Yeltzin and provided an important impetus for bringing down the Soviet regime. Now they say they have lost faith in his government. "It's very much doubt that Yeltzin will be re-elected for a second term by the miners," said one foreman, Alexander Chevdeyev, in the Kuznetsk coal basin in Siberia. "The first time around, the miners' vote was crucial to his victory, but they won't support him this time."

Thousands of teachers also were on strike, in a three-day nationwide action that began Tuesday. Interfax said teachers from 54 of Russia's 89 regions were taking part, although the overall number involved was uncertain. Organizers have conceded their goal of more than 200,000 might not be achieved, and blamed pressure from local authorities.

The government owes teachers more than $106.0 million, said Vladimir Yakovlev, head of the teachers union. Apart from overdue wages, teachers also are demanding pay raises.

The state of California has become a total welfare state, not as a result of the 1 Percent Initiative but as a result of the politicians who have been running. —Ron Ranakin

A state economic consultant said, "California has been making a transition from a manufacturing economy to a service economy." This has been happening for several years. The state now has a higher percentage of people working in service industries than in manufacturing. The service sector of the economy now accounts for more than half of the state's gross domestic product. The manufacturing sector has been declining in recent years.

The state's unemployment rate has been above the national average for several years. This is due in part to the declining manufacturing sector. However, the state's strong service sector has been able to吸纳 some of these workers. As a result, the state's economy has been more resilient to economic downturns than many other states.

Many economists predict that the state's economy will continue to grow in the future. This is due in part to the strong service sector. However, some economists caution that the state's economy may be more vulnerable to changes in the national economy than many other states.
Dr. Jack is back

Physician-assisted suicide. Ever since Dr. Jack Kevorkian assisted his first patient in suicide on June 4, 1990, it has been a topic of intense discussion. Kevorkian passed a law making it legal, and the state of Michigan—where Kevorkian resides—passed a law making it illegal. However, a judge in Michigan allowed the law unconstitutional.

For those of you who haven’t heard, Kevorkian—"Dr. Death"—to some—has yet again assisted another terminally ill person in suicide. The 67-year-old doctor aided 48-year-old Linda Henslee, of Beloit, Wis., in suicide on Monday morning. The computer engineer battled multiple sclerosis for 20 years. This makes 27 deaths the doctor has been present at according to an Associated Press article.

Henslee’s body was found in Kevorkian’s van outside the coroner’s office. Medical Examiner Dr. Jagrovic said Henslee died of carbon monoxide poisoning. He ruled her death as a homicide.

I find that interesting. How can Dravcic rule Henslee’s death as a homicide? In most of Kevorkian’s cases, as far as I know, he has assisted people in dying by inserting a terminal illness, die with a little dignity. Why does the state of Michigan not prosecute them? Why only after the guy who provides the patient with the suicide-accompanying materials? He’s only trying to help people, who are dying from a terminal illness, die with a little dignity. What’s so wrong with that?

Besides, a Michigan judge said the law banning physician-assisted suicide is unconstitutional. However, the prosecutors in the state insist if going after Kevorkian, so he will stop his so-called “evil deeds.” This doesn’t seem to be working. Kevorkian has been jailed several times and then he is released only to continue his crusade.

For example, the doctor “is scheduled to go trial in two weeks on assisted suicide charges in two 1993 deaths.” I find it ironic that he assists someone in suicide just two weeks before he is due to go trial. I definitely think he is trying to make a point. He will not assisted a terminally ill person in suicide just weeks before his trial date.

Well, I guess the nation will find out what a jury thinks of Kevorkian and his crusade in a few weeks—hopefully, it will be a long time before we have to think about the doctor again. I know that if I were terminally ill and I had the option of a physician-assisted suicide I would take it. I would want the right to die with a little dignity. It’s my choice. It’s my life.

Alcohol abuse no joking matter

A nd you all thought Idaho never gets mentioned in last week’s edition of The Chronicle when you read about our own University of Idaho in their “Quickies” section (page 8 for those of you brave enough to fish your copy out of the bird cage), where Idaho was listed as one of the poorly publicized even involving the university housing department and a regent they sponsored featuring nonalcoholic beer in an experiment to show UI students that having fun without alcohol is possible.

“UI at Magazine,” they wrote, “would like to say right now that we are firmly against playing games with beer or doing experiments with beer. Beer is no joking matter. Please, we beg you, do not toy with beer. Thank you.”

As much as we would like to believe, the university would do not, nor should it, involve around any beer or alcoholic beverage.

Prospective employers are not going to want a file-packed with drinking arrests.

I, for one, would think twice before I take a drunk person down in four (or five, or six or seven...) years. Believe it or not, they’re interested in what some regard as a secondary university activity: academics. You know, Books and stuff.

Heaven forbid I should have a subject as in our generation, but how can one avoid the attraction of a generation of that embraces so easily the ideals of stupidity?

And as far as I’m concerned, there’s nothing stupider than alcohol.

Too many, like the news gleaners at U Magazine, choose all to easily ignore the negative effects of alcohol consumption. They’re quick to jump on the “Puritan” efforts of an administration to teach alcohol awareness without knowing the reasoning behind such things as this.

It’s time to set the proponents of alcohol’s “final side straight” of the UI.

We all remember the UI awareness pledge, who drank, fell off a third story balcony. Just acting like a paralyzine though, she was under-aged, she and her parents filed suit against the university, claiming the school and the sorority were negligent in providing alcohol to a minor. The suit was dropped.

We all remember, too, the more recent incident involving UI professors, who, while intoxicated, stabbed a student at a local bar.

The school fired the professor, and he immediately filled suit, charging the school for wrongful dismissal.

The case is still pending.

No wonder the administration, or at least the housing department, wishes to “say” and “experiment” with beer.

And they ought to try on for a few.

The UI should strictly—means with no exceptions—enforce its no-alcohol policy. The policy states no alcohol is to be allowed in any university-owned structure, and undernah drinking, in accordance with state law, is prohibited whenever it could take place. No more of this wisk wok mugede at ASUS-sponsuelted tailgate parties where all that is lacking to make a total mockery of the no-alcohol policy when the white arrows pointing at every bottle, can, keg and wasn’t being.

Avoiding the perils of winter: etiquette for everyone

W alk to class last week I was suddenly surprised:

Snowball? Snow? Swoosh! A clump of snow made its way down the plaid of my jacket, instantly soaking my dry shirt. Somewhat dazed, I managed not to kill the man responsible.

I can’t believe I didn’t see it coming. At least I had a snowball and smashes all over his face. I thought snowball throws were the attempt is what smacked me. The victim thought it would be funny to throw a snowball at my friend.

Last week a friend of mine, L, not thinking, threw the full blow of the wet powder. To say the least, it was not the best move a bystander. He was quickly in poor condition, because of a sense of guilt.

I remember thinking that was the least I could do to protect more innocent bystanders, unfortunately, there were others, there is some etiquette to observe.

Imagine the scene. You are walking up by the UCC, when you see a covered piece of ice, you feel your stomach flipping and by doing a dance of sorts try to keep your balance. Unfortunately, your latest dance steps are not enough to keep you upright. You fall hard on your butt and try to look cool. Have you ever seen this?

First, do not laugh hysterically when you realize you are walking on a glass. Wipe out and land on their butt. In other words, if you are walking, you are slower than the victim, you are taking a chance. There is no excuse for this.

Another Oscar-winning scenario; you are on the way to the Student Union and you see your friend coming who beat you in the snowball fight the night before. “Hi, ha,” you laugh to yourself, picturing the revenge you can now bestow on the unknowing victim. They approach your hiding spot and you grab a fistful of snow, throwing it at the person’s face. You are much too quick for this to be effective.

Second rule of etiquette—he is sensible. If he is minus 2 degrees and the wind is blowing, it is not the best time to dose someone while they are walking to class. Oh yes, many of us have been victim of the unmerciful. Just remember, the temperatures we have experienced this last week do freeze nose hairs, so imagine how it happens when someone strikes you. Do not walk 15 minutes to class or some other place while your car is covered under three feet of powder.

For those of you that have cars, this one is especially for you. If your windows are frozen, do not drive. The reason for this is you cannot see, and one of you almost hit me when I was in the crosswalk the other night. Believe me, I could not use the insurance money, but I would prefer to walk for the rest of my life.

Now for the pedestrians who so freely roam Moscow. If you see a car take off from a stopped position and you are almost in the intersection, do not keep walking. Cars have a hard time stopping fast enough to prevent someone who is so cocky enough to walk right in front of that. They can get really angry.

Winter, and especially this one, is full of accidents waiting to happen and accidents do occur. Sometimes, winter hijinks are not accidents though.

These winter mishaps include going to bed at night and finding out that someone has bailing out your sheets with a blanket of water. Well, it wasn’t going to work, but was some of that white stuff that is supposed to remain outside?

This happens most for those people living in the residence halls or in Greek houses. In the event that this happens, find out how the person got into your room—and the responsible could be responsible—and find some other way to prank them.

OK, I could be protecting my own interests in making that plea for the other way in other words. However, I think it is best to plead the First. The talking face has no problems in people’s beds or whitewashing in the halls. First of all, I think a couple of people own over. Secondly, the Moscow police probably wouldn’t like me saying I throw snowballs (if indeed that is the case).

That brings up a final point. If you choose to throw snowballs, be wise. It’s always wise to find out in some cow pitcher and throw them, or make sure there are no police around.

Overall, enjoy the snow and the winter we were given. Be nice, be safe and remember to duck if you see someone shaking a tree limb as you walk under it.
I honestly feel bad for smokers

Jennifer Eng

I honestly feel bad for smokers. You see them huddled in front of doorways trying to get away from the cold and wind. They are the smokers who have lost their rights to smoke inside buildings because of strict ordinances.

I feel very bad for smokers, they subject themselves to harsh weather just to get their nicotine. Even with the threat of pneumonia these persecuted people stand outside to have a smoke.

I feel these people should have smoking lounges and enclosed areas where they can smoke and not freeze to death or get drenched from rain.

I support smoking lounges and facilities, because I cannot tolerate smoke. With these lounges smokers should enjoy their cigarettes, cigars or pipes in the comfort of the indoors, but not inside building doorways or dashing busy times when students are on their route to class.

When I say I can’t tolerate smoke, I mean I literally cannot tolerate it. I’m one of the many people on campus who choose not to smoke because of asthma. Smokers complain because they feel it is their right to pollute their own “lungs” and I agree. However, smokers have no concept of how hard it is for people like me to breathe in a smoking environment.

There are those non-smokers who whine about smoke just because they disagree and feel it is a tasteless habit. I agree with smokers about these whiny types. I’m tired of being told to smoke indoors too, but more because those of us who have a legitimate medical reason for not liking smoke are classified with these whiners.

If my chest didn’t tighten, ache and cause me to quit breathing, I would not mind mind smokers and their habit. However, I have to dodge smoke, avoid entry ways and not go to places that allow smoke just because I like to breathe. I know that sounds unreasonable, but finding clean air is my habit.

I feel smokers have every right to light up, but not at the expense of my lungs. I don’t think people should smoke while they walk to class realize what a pain in the butt it is for me to have an asthma attack on the way to class just because their smoke is blowing in my direction.

If you have never been around a person having an attack it can be scary or “watch”—but sometimes it’s scarier for the person having the attack. I have to be careful of not only smokers, but wood stoves and fireplace smoke, fumers burning off finishes, dust, changing vacuum bags, aerosol spray cans and the list goes on.

Smokers should realize, especially on cold days, that it takes a lot for an asthmatic to even get up the hills. There are days when I cannot go outside because my lungs hurt so bad from the cold air. On days when I do get up the courage to face mine, the worst nightmare is walking behind a smoker and having an attack.

Smokers should try to visualize what a “bad asthma day” is. By noon my chest can be so sore from the struggle to breathe that I’m tired, very cranky and more than a little bitter.

Asthmatologists have to worry about these bad days and plan for them if they can. Some days I take extra long hot showers in order to break my condition; sometimes I take these late at night and you wouldn’t believe the strange looks I get then.

Aside from worry about smoke and other “antagonist,” asthma has to worry about a common cold turning into pneumonia, some types of drug interactions and inhaler pumps running out.

Not to mention the cost of maintaining asthma which increases everyday with the rising cost of prescriptions, doctor visits and insurance. Some insurance companies will not even take you with a pre-existing condition like asthma.

I fully support giving smokers smoking lounges and indoor places to smoke, just to keep them from doing something I have to go through and pathways I must take to get to class.

Living in today’s world means a little bit more consideration for fellow humans.

In a way asthma is a handicap. The only difference is people don’t stop to consider giving asthmatics social concessions outside of city ordinances forbidding smokers from smoking in buildings. Most people wouldn’t step in the middle of a sidewalk and force a wheelchair bound person to get off the sidewalk and then have to fight the curb to get back on. So why should smokers be forced to conglomerate on the sidewalk and force an asthmatic to cross the street just to pass?

Sent in the entire Hebrew Bible not a single person cried and went to heaven. Only two got to heaven at all:Envelope (Genes. 3:4) and Abel (Gen. 4:1-3,11). They had to be taken up to heaven—somewhere above the sun, moon and stars—while they were still living and breathing.

There are a few hopeful allusions to the idea of life after death in the Old Testament, but only in Daniel 12:2 it is a specific reference by immortal “Many of those who sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.” The idea of resurrection was adopted from the Persian Zoroastrian religion. And Daniel is the very last book in the Old Testament.

In the Jewish Bible it is not found with the Prophets but in the Writings. It was written about 167 B.C.E. (Before Common Era).

In the New Testament, which was written between c. 50 and as late as c. 120 C.E. (Common Era) there is no agreement as to whether life after death is in the form of a soul or a resurrected body. Nor whether eternal life is in heaven or in some kind of heaven. Read Heaven, A Ministry for a Fuller Account.

Up to-date physiology makes it very clear that there is no such thing as a soul. And when our bodies die they return to the dust from which they came. Just as the Bible says.

Letters to the Editor

No such thing as soul, eternal life

Editor/Argonaut: I see that the Campus Crusade for Christ is sponsoring a speaker from a fundamental college in Los Angeles. He will speak on “Prindlea for the Soul and Life After Death.” I presume he will allude to the Bible for his “evidence.”

But he will not tell you that in the Hebrew Bible (called the Old Testament by Christians) there is neither a soul nor life after death. When you breathe your last you go your body decays and returns to the dust from which it was made.

“For the fate of human and the fate of animals is the same as one dies, so does the other. They all have the same breath, and human beings have no advantage over the animals. All go to one place, from which we all come, and to dust we all return.” (Ecclesiastes 3:19-20)

“The most God could promise the faithful was that they might live long enough to see their grandchildren. And he never threatened anyone with hell because there is no such place. The worst he could do to offenders was punish their offspring up to the third and fourth generation.”

Read the first citations of the Ten Commandments in Exodus 20:5-7: “Also read the entire 25th chapter of Deuteronomy: God’s ultimate threat in the last verse is hilarious.

Tables turned: Dole gets bitten by New York election law

ALBANY, N.Y. — In an example of how the tables can turn in high-stakes politics, Republican presidential hopeful Bob Dole's forces have themselves fallen victim to New York's hyper-technical election law. It wasn't supposed to work that way.

Dole had planned to use the nation's toughest ballot-access laws, coupled with near-monolithic backing from New York's Republican hierarchy, to keep Steve Forbes and other rivals off New York's March 7 primary ballot.

But in a legal slipup that could have serious consequences for the GOP, front-runner, the Dole camp neglected to attach their "symbol sheets" to some of their formal challenges of Forbes' nominating petitions in New York City. Symbol sheets explain abbreviations used in the challenges.

On other challenges, Dole failed to note the addresses of potential Forbes delegates he was challenging.

"The state election law requires that the symbol sheets be attached...and the addresses must be on the forms," said New York City Board of Elections spokesperson Naomi Bernstein.

That was enough for the New York City Board of Elections last week to toss out Dole's challenges to the Forbes petitions in six of the city's 11 congressional districts. That was a big boost for Forbes, the multimillionaire publisher from Bedminster, N.J., who is running second to Dole in most polls.

"Who gets elected by the sword, dies by the sword," chanted Tom Spargo, one of New York's best-known election lawyers and the person in charge of shepherding Forbes' petitions through the maze of New York laws.

In the city's two other congressional districts, the Dole challenges were upheld and Forbes' petitions for primary ballot spots in those districts were declared invalid. At least one of those rulings will be challenged by Forbes in court.

In the rest of the state, Spargo's crew also did well in fending off Dole challenges to Forbes petitions filed with the state Board of Elections and four other local boards.

By late last week, Forbes was on the ballot in 28 of the state's 31 congressional districts. The only other Dole rival to challenge for a spot in the New York primary, Pat Buchanan, was on the ballot in 12 districts.

In reality, the New York primary campaign is now in the hands of the lawyers for the next several weeks. The Dole, Forbes and Buchanan forces plan to continue the battle over petitions in the courts and the New York ballot may not be finalized until mid-February.

Nonetheless, if the election board rulings stand, Dole would wind up with a primary against Forbes in New York state and would face competition from Buchanan outside New York City. In the city, the conservative pundit is on the ballot in just one of the 11 congressional districts.

Should Forbes catch fire in the Iowa caucuses and the New Hampshire primary in late February, he would be well positioned for a run at Dole in New York, where 102 delegates are at stake. That's the third-highest number of delegates available in any state, and more than 10 percent of what is needed for the nomination.

Only California and Texas offer bigger electoral prizes.

Buchanan would likely pull New York votes away from Dole on the right.

Putting together the challenge to Dole in New York has been expensive for Forbes. While Buchanan relied heavily on volunteers to carry his petitions, Forbes spent about $1 million to hire lawyers and veteran political operatives and to arm them with computers.

Dole relied on the state's Republican Party apparatus, headed by state GOP Chairman William Powers, to put him on the ballot, and to keep the others off. Dole will be on the ballot, but with company.

New York has, in effect, separate GOP primaries in each of the state's 31 congressional districts. To qualify for the ballot, candidates must collect the signatures of at least 1,250 Republicans in each district. In some New York City districts, where there are few Republicans, candidates are required to collect the signatures of five percent of party members who live there.

Dole and his New York supporters, including Sen. Alfonse D'Amato and Gov. George Pataki, came under heavy fire last year for refusing to serve New York's ballot access laws. They were accused by Forbes, Buchanan and others of supporting a Soviet-style closed political system.

While others backed off, Forbes and Buchanan decided to press ahead in New York.

"When the smoke clears, we feel the voters will have a choice," said Buchanan spokesman K.B. Forbes.

"They played their technical game," said Forbes' lawyer Spargo added. "We played it back, and we won."

used around by infested alcohol fans.

It is an imaginative man's myth that one needs alcohol to have fun, to enjoy a game or to relax. Responsible drinking is also a myth, for how can a person be called responsible if he or she ingests even moderate amounts of mind-altering chemicals?

I agree with U. on one point: Alcohol is no joking matter. The use and abuse of alcohol is a serious problem and not a myth. The only things about alcohol consumption that are not myths are the losses; i.e. loss of money, time and brain cells. Not to mention the possible loss of life.

Give The Gift of Life
Bad Boy has been all good for Vandals

Mark Vanderwall

When you look at Idaho's Jason Jackman, thoughts of Harley Davidson, Jack Daniels andinness may run through your mind, but the man underneath is a whole different story.

Finishing his high school career in Hurricane, Utah, Jackman made the transition from high school ball to major college ball in stride. After redshirting his freshman year at the University of Utah, Jackman started the majority of games during his sophomore season while playing under one of the top coaches in the country, Rick Majerus. Jackman sat the last couple of games, before learning that he would be replaced the next season.

Jackman then decided to attend Dixie Junior College to avoid sitting out a year, before arriving on the UI campus earlier this year.

"I saw some differences at Utah, so I decided to follow coach Cravens to Idaho and try to start over," said Jackman.

Sporting an earring and slightly longer hair, Jackman has often been labeled as having a bad boy image.

"But that ever bothered him or change the way he plays?"

"I love to talk. I love playing in front of the opposing teams crowd as much as I love the game itself. You have people on every road trip that hound you non-stop. There is nothing better than having a great game on the road, winning the game and looking at the expressions on the faces in the crowd afterwards."

Jackman has made as impact since his arrival in Idaho, scoring a season high 31 points against Cal Poly San Luis Obispo earlier this season, but this only tops the list of skills Jackman packed for the trip to Idaho. He ranks second in the Big Sky in field goal percentage at .631, fifth in free throw percentage at .818, ninth in scoring at 13.1, and 11th in rebounding at 5.7.

Along with Jackman's so-called bad boy image, Idaho as a team has caught a bunch of flack as well, but this is just another aspect that goes along with being a college athlete for Jackman.

"All teams go through these things, or at least at the three places I've played. When you're a college athlete, you have to act in certain way in public. This is something you have to get used to, because what you do in public will surely get noticed by someone. Fair or not, it's part of being a college athlete."

As for plans after graduation, Jackman would like to tackle the courts overseas. Jackman is majoring in Sociology and plans to return to school sometime to pursue either a career in Criminal Justice or Law.

Jackman credits much of his success to his father, who he has spent summers working with for the majority of his life.

"My dad has always taught us to be disciplined, with that discipline helping me on the court and in life itself," said Jackman.

Jackman comes from a large family, having three brothers and a sister. The athleticism doesn't stop with Jackman. His younger brother was going to go on and play college ball as well. As fate would have it, a torn ACL has ended any hopes of following in the family footsteps. Jackman tries not to think about getting hurt, but rather he focuses on how fortunate he has been in his career.

"I try not to think about getting hurt. I go out and play every game as hard as I can and if something happens it happens," said Jackman.

Turner has been a catalyst in the Vandals' surge. The junior swingman from North Idaho College has scored in double figures in each of Idaho's last eight games, averaging 13.9 points and shooting 57.5 percent in that span.

"They stumbled in their first league games on the road, which happens to a lot of us, but they have won four in a row and are as hot a team as there is in the league right now," Montana coach Blaine Taylor said.

The go-to man for the Grizzlies is 6-6 senior forward Shawn Samuelson. The Broadus, Mont., native is pouring in 16.6 points per game (2nd in BSC) and pulling down 7.4 rebounds a game. Jordan Chris Spoj and Walker Kirch walker chip in 11.2 and 10.0 points a game to aid the Grizz attack.

The Bobcats get the bulk of their scoring punch from the senior trio of 6-5 guard Nico Harrington, 6-7 forward Quadre Loillis and 6-8 forward Adam Leachman. The triumvirate has combined to score 42 points per contest in Big Sky games.

Bobcats, Grizzlies make annual trek to Palouse

Damon Barkdoll

The Idaho women’s basketball team will have its hands full this weekend when the Vandals try to knock off defending Big Sky Champion Montana on Friday and Montana State on Saturday at home in Memorial Gym.

Idaho will be looking to snap a three-game losing streak while Montana (14-3, 5-0) and Montana State (10-8, 2-1) hope to get their first and second place spots in the Big Sky Conference. The Vandals have won two of three conference games at home with their only loss coming to Boise State in overtime.

The Grizzlies will be especially tough for Idaho to handle. The pre-season top 25 team comes into Moscow with a current 11-game advantage of 27-5 and have won 22 straight against the Vandals. This season UM had been especially tough, winning eight out of its last nine games. Although UM has only lost three games this season, all of which were on the road. A home court advantage is crucial for the Vandals and should be a key factor in the game.

“All three of their losses this season have on the road, so we have to go after them,” Vandal coach Julie Holt said.

Montana is led by sophomore Skyla Sisco, who was selected to compete in the U.S. Olympic Festival last summer. Last season against the Vandals, Sisco thieved a career-high six steals and will be looking to do the same this year against the Black and Gold. With Sisco leading the way, the Grizzly offense is leading the league in scoring margin averaging 11 points more per game than their opponent.

UM is equally pesky on defense as it is on offense, allowing a conference best 54.5 points per game. Fellow Grizzly sophomore Angel Wells looks to give Idaho trouble down low. The 6-foot 3-inch Spokane, Wash. native blocked 28 shots as a freshman and hopes to stop Idaho’s inside game.

So does Idaho have any confidence coming into this weekend’s games against the neighborhood bully?

“Raisik is our head,” Holt said. “We’ll go through the game strategy. A big point for us is to be able to defend against the guard.”

After having a tough Montana team, Idaho will again have to face their resources and try to knock off Montana State. The Vandals own the overall series record versus the Bobcats with a 24-11 mark. Last weekend MSU knocked off their Sky opponents Idaho State and Boise State at home and are playing surprising well considering their pre-season expectations to finish sixth in the Big Sky.

Northwest tracksters set to invade Kibbie Dome Saturday

Mike Stetson
Staff

Too much snow on the roads to drive home this weekend, too cold to hit the ski slopes, nothing much on TV without football games, what should you do? Head up to the Kibbie Dome Saturday for some fast paced Vandal sports action.

Saturday, Idaho’s track and field team will host the annual McDonald’s Open beginning at 8 a.m. in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome. The meet draws over 500 athletes each year. Also, the open format of the meet means teams need not register in advance to compete.

Mike Keller, Idaho men’s track coach said most of the area schools will attend the meet, including Washington State, Montana, Gonzaga, Spokane Junior College and others. Keller also invites any athletes interested in running this weekend to come out and participate.

“Don’t talk about it, come out and put it on the line and show us what you can do,” Keller said.

Idaho students can register to compete in any event prior to the event’s start, free of charge. Non-students can compete also, but must pay the $5 fee for all non-students entering the Dome.

Saturday’s meet is the second of the indoor season for Vandal teams, which hosted the University of Idaho Scoring Meet last weekend. Seven schools attended the meet, including Washington and Washington State. The Vandals made a strong showing in both women’s and men’s events last weekend. The men placed five athletes in the top three in their respective events. The women placed two athletes in the top three. As for the relays, the UI men won the 4x400 meter relay and the women placed second and third.

Despite the strong showing, Keller believes the Vandals have room for plenty of improvement.

“We didn’t double up athletes and we didn’t compete anyone in the shot or the hurdles. Scoring doesn’t mean anything right now, the only thing that matters is winning at the end,” Keller said.

On the women’s side, Julie Taylor, UI women’s interim coach, avoids the team issue and focuses on the individual athletes.

“I don’t think we can compete for the championship right now, but we have a lot of individuals who can do well,” Taylor said.

Both the men and women look to this weekend’s meet as an opportunity to qualify athletes for the Big Sky Championships March 3-3 at Montana State.

“Right now we are hoping to get people qualified,” Taylor said.

These athletes who fail to qualify this weekend will still have the opportunity in several more meets, including the 21st annual Vandal Indoor Meet Feb. 16-17. The event begins Friday evening at 6:30 with the top 90 male athletes.

Intramural Co-Rec Volleyball kicked off this week. The sport runs through mid-march.
Idaho will try to rebound against the two Montana schools after dropping a pair of road games to Weber State, 90-66, and Northern Arizona, 88-60 last weekend.

"We have to play well," Holt said. "We have to attack them on defense - take it to 'em. And we need to maintain composure. Offensively, we need to play great team defense."

If you want to get a hold of Vladimir Morakhovsky, expect to get his answering machine a few times before a successful reach. Between playing the cello for the Washington/Idaho Symphony, studying economics and linguistics and managing Targhee Hall as a Resident Assistant, Morakhovsky has very little time to be around to answer his phone.

"It requires some time management, but being an interactive part of the community in a positive way is important to me," says Morakhovsky.

Morakhovsky, 20, is a senior studying economics at the University of Idaho. He came on exchange last year from the St. Petersburg Mining School in Russia and decided to finish his degree here. Many would envy the fact that he will be graduating at such a young age this semester but Morakhovsky hasn't had it easy. His first two years of school were spent with heavy loads at two different schools in very different programs.

At the St. Petersburg Mining Institute, Morakhovsky studied economics and mine management while also attending linguistics and music at another institution. He took a curriculum of harmony, choir and the mandatory piano course in addition to playing the cello and the trumpet.

Even though the piano isn't Morakhovsky's main instrument, he plays it with finesse. Watching his fingers glide across the keys as he jumps from rag to classical to jazz is an awesome observation. But that isn't all he enjoys. Traveling and a few sports are some other hobbies.

"I like to interact, I like linguistics, I like music, I like economics, I like a lot of things," says Morakhovsky with the belief that his interdisciplinary lifestyle will help in his search for being well-rounded.

What Morakhovsky likes the most, however, is the opportunity to make his exchange educate people about the international way.

"The world is getting smaller," says Morakhovsky, while he admits that several boundaries still exist, such as in the all too familiar situation in Chechnya and Bosnia, the barriers are breaking down.

"The more you share, the better off you are as a society."

Cove/Mallard Coalition aims to educate

Jeff Albertson

Contributing Writer

On the dance floor, Wade Gruhl is a swirling mass of flailing arms and legs, a wild man in appearance—when the music stops so does the madness.

Gruhl is just one of many local and statewide residents who have taken it upon themselves to become watchdogs with an environmental conscience. Gruhl, along with Moscow residents Greg Mullen, Natalie Shapiro and Gary McFarland are just a few of the faces behind the Cove/Mallard Coalition, which recently held a benefit concert at Rathaus Pizza in Moscow.

Local bands Sagan' Time and The River Project lent their warm Bohemian sounds to the cause drawing in crowds from the Arctic-like temperatures outside.

"We were hoping to raise enough money to support the office for a while, pay the rent and have a little left over to get started on some other projects," Mullen said.

"(The Coalition) is kind of a grass roots organization fighting to have timber sales stopped in the Cove/Mallard Wilderness area," Gruhl said.

The Coalition became involved in protecting the area when the new Republican Congress passed a spending bill that would benefit victims of the Oklahoma City Bombing. A rider attached to that bill, now known as the Salvage Logging rider, sped up the process that allowed the National Forest Service to begin construction of 145 miles of roads in pristine wilderness as well as authorizing sales of large chunks of timber.

According to the coalition, the Cove/Mallard timber sale is the largest road building project in the history of the area. The roads constructed will allow access to 81 million board feet of timber from 200 clearcuts. The six year project will cost taxpayers $16 million dollars from road building subsidies and deficit timber sales.

Before the rider, as early as 1993 the Coalition had the power to appeal such sales with environmental laws on their side. Gruhl said environmentalists now see the sales and road construction as logging without laws.

"It's a money loser because the general public, you and I, are subsidizing the roads that the Forest Service builds. U.S. taxpayers subsidize the overhead expenses of the Forest Service who is paying to have the roads built," Gruhl said. "The money they receive from selling 80 million board feet of timber will be less than the expenses of the whole project."

Gruhl said part of the Coalition's drive to protect the area lies in the fact that the land is a National Forest and therefore belongs to the citizens, not the corporate interests that control politics. "Given the choice people want to have environmental laws," he said.

Robert Amon, who helped found the Coalition, owns 40 acres of land near the Cove/Mallard wilderness. That land has and is being used as a base camp.

Morakhovsky uses the base camp as a means to have their presence known and to make sure the Forest Service stays within its bounds in managing the wilderness.

The Coalition holds the Forest Service and the road construction accountable for sediment built up beyond allowable standards in streams, logging in no-cut areas.

How to make a ‘cultured cocktail’

Book Review

Erik Maron
Staff

Anyone can drink a cocktail, almost anyone can make a cocktail, but only a select handful can mix a truly good drink. People study and practice for years to achieve the status of mixologist. An old bartender once said, “You have to tend bar for about five years before you really begin to understand it.” Although you may never achieve the level of understanding seasoned bartenders do, you can hone your mixing skills with a little guidance and lots of practice. The practice is up to you, but what better place to turn for guidance than a pro?

Katharine Williams has taken her years of experience as co-proprietor of The Papagayo Room in San Francisco’s Fairmont Hotel and created The Cultured Cocktail, a collection of 150 classic drinks with easy directions and hints for creating delicious cocktails.

With illustrations by Susan Gross, The Cultured Cocktail is an attractive book, divided into sections by spirit, including liqueurs and wine. There is also a section on how to stock a bar and pantry, as well as the many varieties of glassware used by bars. Most recipes are designed to make two cocktails and many have non-alcoholic variations for nondrinkers and designated drivers.

The book includes all the classic drinks like martini, mai tai, Long Island Iced Tea, Manhattan and Kamikazes. In addition to the time-honored mixes, there are a number of less known drinks that have earned respect over time, such as the Klondike, Adonis Cocktail, Bertha, Sazerac and the lively Woo Woo. Although it doesn’t include as many drink recipes as Mr. Boston’s drink collection, The Cultured Cocktail is easier to understand and more fully explains each cocktail’s preparation. Where Mr. Boston is geared more for experienced bartenders needing a resource, Williams has written a book for the layman drink mixer. Anyone can understand and prepare these drinks with some degree of success and after a little practice, you can be world-renowned for your mixing abilities.

Well, perhaps not world-renowned, but this book can give you the basic techniques and knowledge needed to be a consistent and successful drink mixer. With this book in your collection, you’ll seldom be stuck not knowing how to prepare that drink request.

The Cultured Cocktail is published by Clarkson Potter andretails for $15.

and signs being buried by logging activity.

While the Coalition and its members insist they practice non-violent protests, area residents in the local logging town have been less than eager to see the environmentalists coming.

Shapiro acknowledged the hostility towards the Coalition, adding that anyone planning to attend protests at the base camp is given training and instruction from a non-violence trainer.

Shapiro said tactics such as chaining themselves to fences and equipment can be horrifying and added that you have to assume that those opposed to the Coalition’s practice of civil disobedience will at least respect human life.

This summer the Coalition plans to set up camp near the Cove/Mallard area. “People will be at the base camp all summer,” starting Memorial Day weekend,” Mullen said.

“Different people have different reasons for attending the Coalition’s public events. We have our presence known, monitor Forest Service activities and do what we can to stop or slow them down.”

In 1994 Congress passed a bill that makes it a felony for anyone to halt or impede lawful forest practices or to interfere with the lawful management, cultivation or harvesting of trees or timber. The law’s first test case was eventually thrown out of court.

The Coalition has no formal membership and its numbers vary, but Mullen adds, “if you support us and you are involved you are part of us.”

To find out more about the Cove/Mallard Coalition you can phone them directly at (208) 882-3755, or fax (208) 883-0727. You can also email them at: gcsp@ias.idaho.edu or write to them at Cove/Mallard Coalition, 1015 Campus Way, Moscow, ID 83849-5702.
