Crash determined to halt
Canadian lumber imports

Zachary Smith

Idaho’s senior senator is determined to put a stop to the flooding of the U.S. lumber market with subsidized Canadian lumber.

The year-long battle to save the U.S. lumber industry from collapsing has been plagued by unequalled negotiations. A second deadline was set for Feb. 15 and if it was not met, Craig told U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor that he would push for heavy sanctions on Canadian lumber.

“At some point we have to draw a line and say, ‘If you aren’t meeting the demands of what we’re asking you to do, the line will be there,’” Kantor said. “Otherwise, what’s the use of a deadline?”

Cuts kill VTV coverage

Facing funding cuts from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, Idaho Public Television is laying off staff, cutting programs and closing its Coeur d’Alene branch office.

At KUID, a writer-producer, an engineer and a videojournalist director are being laid off July 1. With them goes the station’s coverage of Vandal games.

“KUID will continue to broadcast public television programming even if it is now,” said Russell Spain, station manager. However, the station won’t be producing much.

“Those won’t be any (production) done as they’re being done now, with full-time staff,” Spain said.

Spain said the station’s equipment will stay in Moscow, but refused further comment, directing questions to IPTV General Manager Jerold Garber in Boise. Garber did not return calls last week.

The Corporation for Public Broadcasting distributes federal funds to PBS stations and producers.

In January, they notified IPTV that its share of cuts could total more than $700,000 over the next four years. State funds to IPTV have also been cut by more than $100,000 this year, according to a press release.

IPTV has 67 full-time positions and 47 part-time positions at stations in Boise, Moscow and Coeur d’Alene. Ten percent will be cut and four vacant positions will be eliminated. In addition, a management position was eliminated last August. At KUID, the four cut positions will bring the station down to four staff members.

IPTV will eliminate four positions at Idaho programs and Child Care Almanac programs, as well as coverage of UI athletics. Idaho Reports, a daily half-hour program covering the Idaho Legislature will be scaled back in July.

Outdoor Idaho and Dialogue will not be impacted by cuts, according to a press release.

Genders learn to talk to each other

Women and men learned how to communicate better in a conference held at the University Inn this past weekend. The event was sponsored by the Association of UI faculty and staff women, and co-sponsored by the Moscow League of Women Voters, Washington State University Association of Faculty Women, the UI Women’s Center and Women in Natural Resources.

The workshops were lead by Carolyn Denison, an executive director of the National Institute for Leadership Development who received her doctoral degree in counseling psychology from Arizona State University. Those who attended heard key speakers and participated in group activities.

In an exercise lead by DesJardins, the participants were divided into groups of two to six or seven, except in the case of the male who were so small in number to divide them would be counterproductive, and were asked to discuss the messages they received growing up as to what it meant to be an adult. The results were interesting.

The men commented that they had had a hard time separating the gender issues from their experiences. They knew that they were brought up to be individually competent, which meant having a job and/or skill. Whatever job or skill they acquired then became their identity.

The spokesman brought up a metaphor from some of their experiences as Boy Scouts. The concept that a Boy Scout must carry around the knowledge, skills and equipment in order to survive two days in the wilderness at temperatures of 10 degrees below zero alone, when few actually ever get into that situation, can be seen to men carrying around this figurative backpack of uselessness in their daily life.

The women over 20 reported that their messages consisted of waiting for the man to rescue them, known as the Cinderella syndrome. They were told to be cooperative, nice and not too outspoken, a mother, a care giver and sexy.

The 40 to 50 age group reported that their generation was one of transitions. They were being told that they could do anything they wanted to do, and could be self-reliant, yet still get married, never say no, look perfect and be weary of the male domain in the work place.

One professional woman said, “When I was at work, I felt guilty about not being at home, and when I was home I felt guilty about not being at work.” This issue of guilt primarily concerns women, but is also breaking into the male domain.

The 20 to 30 age group decided that theirs was a generation of decisions and histories. Most of those in the 20 age group complained of coming across as indecisive because they had not chosen either by this time. They agreed that an undercurrent still exists telling them to be complete is to be married.

Craig determined to halt Canadian lumber imports daho's senior senator is determined to put a stop to the flooding of the U.S. lumber market with subsidized Canadian lumber.

"We can't go on talking indefinitely while lumber mill workers are on the brink of financial ruin and thousands of Americans lose their jobs," said Idaho Senator Larry Craig.

The original Jan. 31 deadline for halting Canadian lumber imports has come and gone while negotiations continue. A second deadline was set for Feb. 15 and if it was not met Sen. Craig said U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor would have sent for heavy sanctions on Canadian lumber imports.

"At some point we have to draw a line and say, 'If you're going to do this, you're going to do it. If you're not going to do it, you're going to get hit.'" Otherwise, what's the use of a deadline?" said Craig.

Craig, chairman of both Senate subcommittees overseeing forestry lands, said if present negotiations don't produce results, he'll work with Democrat Senator Max Baucus of Montana, and others in Congress, to impose a 25 percent temporary duty on Canadian lumber imports.

The situation has worsened over the last 19 months as lumber prices have declined by 37 percent from January 1994 levels.

In a Feb. 15 letter to President Clinton, Senator Craig said, "Subsidized imports have risen from around 27 percent of the U.S. market in 1991 to 36 percent in the third quarter of 1995." This has contributed to an estimated loss of 29,000 U.S. lumber mill jobs, said Craig.

Craig urged President Clinton to support Ambassador Kantor's recommendation that the United States exercise U.S. trade laws and impose a temporary duty on Canadian lumber or the Canadians fail to meet the final deadlines.

How does this affect Idaho? Craig said that Idaho workers also fear for their jobs as small companies and mills struggle to survive in the face of unfair subsidies.

UI student breaks 100,000 point barrier on Ms. Pac-Man

MOSCOW—When Brad Kaul sat down behind an Atari 1200 system on Saturday night he expected to literally crush the elite 100,000 point barrier that had evaded everyone for seven years. Without breaking, his score finally reached 171,120 Sunday, at 12:12 a.m. before his last Ms. Pac-Man was extinguished.

"When I broke the 100,000 point plateau it was a load off of my shoulders. I just felt like there could be something better. The score is infinite, any score is possible," said Kaul, 21, a junior in architecture at the University of Idaho.

Kaul said he began playing Ms. Pac-Man in the second grade when the pellet munching video game character was still popular in the arcade.

"My skills have slowly diminished," he said, noting the several years that have lapsed since he recently began playing the game again.

Kaul said playing Ms. Pac-Man requires a fair amount of strategy.
"You've got to score as high as you possibly can," he said. "You've got to go for the ghosts, not just clicking buttons. You've got to be aware of the ghosts and where they are, so you are able to predict where they will go," Kaul said.

"You can't let them wear you down, because when you get to 150,000 points you slow down," he added.

Issuing a standing challenge to everyone, Kaul has vowed to pay $10 to the person who can prove the next best score in several years. He can be contacted via email at kaul39@uidaho.edu.

"Ms. Pac-Man could bring the world together if everyone just had a little more fun—because it's pure," said Kaul.

Flood relief legislation clears committee

BOISE—Gov. Phil Batt's legislation to ease tax limits with northern Idaho's flood problems has been sent to the full House for a vote.

The Revenue and Taxation Committee on Monday approved the governor's bill to allow counties to exceed a new property tax limit, an existing state law, in effect just over seven months, limit property tax increases to 3 percent from one budget year to the next.

The proposal, which should come up for a final vote in the House later this week, has its critics.

Chief state economist Michael Ferguson said most of the money would be used for repair of public facilities and for public safety, not for help individuals.

Rep. Charles Duddy, D-Driggs, said he's talked about the proposal with county commissioners in his area.

"We will address the Legislature on Tuesday on his assessment of the flood damage and how to deal with it. During the weekend, members of his staff have been working at state funds that might be tapped to help pay for damages estimated as high as $100 million.

Ferguson said several accounts could provide resources for flood relief. In the Permanent Building Fund, money appropriated for projects not yet under construction could be available.

But Ferguson had no recom-mendations on how the money would be spent.

Other flood-related legislation being prepared would allow greater flexibility in turning tax reports and payments in the flood-ravaged areas, and another would provide some tax relief for flood-damaged property that won't be replaced.

Rep. Tim Ristiger, R-Shoshone, said the flood relief legislation wouldn't benefit only northern Idaho.

Supreme Court to consider King case

LOS ANGELES—The U.S.
Supreme Court on Tuesday will case how much sentencing discussion federal judges should have when the government argues for long-term terms for two police convicted of beating Rodney King.

The Supreme Court will consider whether a judge erred when he sencenced Tracy Koon and Larry Stovall Powell to 30-month prison terms rather than the 70- to 87-month sentence recommended in sentencing guidelines.

The sentencing was originally scheduled to be heard by the nation's highest court in early January, but was postponed after a fierce snowstorm prevented lawyers from getting to the courthouse in Washington D.C.

Koon and Powell, now former police officers, were convicted of violating King's civil rights by beating him during a 1991 traffic stop.

Koon, Powell and two other officers were acquitted on state charges in a jury verdict that prompted the 1992 Los Angeles riots. They were later re�ired under federal civil rights charges.

The other officers were accorded a second time, but Koon and Powell were convicted.

Deputy U.S. Solicitor General Gregg Bredesen, who represents the represent the Justice Department, said
Davies' rationale for the lower senencing could lead to a wide disparity in sentences. He said that is what lead to the King convictions and violating the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984.

Now judges have to apply their sentence decision making for federal offenders and must give adequate explanations if they decide.

Commuters show true grit after bombing

LONDON—Determined to carry on with their daily round, Britons began using temporary security checks and searches all over Monday. But many tourism were just a few blocks away, the third IRA bomb in the capital in a week and a half apart two a bus Sunday night, killing one person and injuring nine in London's prime tourist district.

The IRA broke its 17-month cease-fire on Feb. 9 with a massive bomb in a London bus district that killed two and injured dozens of people. The explosion was a small IRA bomb in London's theater district Thursday.

In Covent Garden, crammed with pubs, restaurants and trendy shops, many businesses were opening Monday.

"We're all in the same boat, the Covent Garden General Store—which venir T-shirts to novelty cookie were telling each other.

For most Britons, it was business as usual. The morning trains, snarled traffic and a strong police presence were not a deterrent.

Police closed several city blocks around the spot in the

Students form National Education Association chapter

Andrew White

Students across campus are forming a new ASU registered organization called the Student National Educational Association.

The National Education Association is one of the largest and most powerful unions in the United States. They advocate quality education and endorse politicians they feel will best reflect the values of education.

The student branch of the NEA will provide members with free mailings and magazines, updates in the educational field, use of databases free of charge and competitive insurance rates. In April the SNEA wishes to send an eight-member delegation from the UI to Boise for a conference.

Stephanie Lindquist, a senior in Music Education said, "The SNEA provides students with a great introduction to the field. The student organization of the NEA is not limited to just education majors, any interested students are encouraged to inquire. "It's a great opportunity for the UI to get involved," said Pierce.

In a letter to the NEA magazine, "Tomorrow's Teachers," Marla Robinson the NEA student program chair said, "When I joined the NEA Student Program, I didn't belong to any college group on campus, but I knew it was time to take responsibility for my future. It was the best decision I have ever made."

The NEA also provides financial aid to students in need. In many states local NEA officials have set up scholarship programs. The NEA also provides assistance to students trying to find employment in the educational field after graduation.

Members who join the student NEA will also be affiliated with the Idaho Education Association as well. The IEA is similar to the NEA only the state level. While the NEA lobbies for educational rights on the national level, the IEA lobbies on the state level by influencing legislation and policy. The IEA maintains a liaison with the state Department of Education, state Board of Education, Idaho Human Rights Commission, Professional Standards Commissions and many more.

"Through the NEA Students Program, I learned new skills as varied fundraising and arranging speakers. I started out thinking this will great on a resume, and ended up really caring about the kids and friends I had made," said Robinson.

Currently there are 112 students involved in the SNEA statewide in Idaho. Currently the NEA reports the average beginning salary for teachers in Idaho is $17,164 in 1994. The median salary for teachers in Idaho in 1994 was $28,920.

Professors want more access to Internet

Christopher Clancy

Computer Services' infrastructure projects, new labs and computers that have dramatically increased available on-line resources at UI have left some faculty members feeling under-prepared to deal with a computer illiterate student body, department of English Chair Gary Williams said.

"We feel hampered when students have so much better facilities. It goes without saying, that students are becoming more computer literate than their professors," said Williams.

The problem is the unavailability of hardware, said Williams. Once the new network, known as TIP, is completed it will improve access to the Internet and other on-line resources but forces much of the hardware that will be necessary to reach those resources.

"Computers ought to be like a desk. It's something that you need," said Williams.

Often faculty computers are provided by the faculty themselves or are outdated, Williams said. In some cases the computers in use are 266's or slower with limited displays and drives. Many are incompatible with newer software and, aside from UNIX access, are not Internet capable.

"Most of our computers won't even run Netscape," Williams said.

Though labs are open to both students and faculty, many faculty members feel intimidated by the atmosphere of the labs, Williams said.

"Some professors feel uncomfortable using the same computer labs that students use," said Computer Services' Kari Dickinson. As an extension of the TIP program Computer Services is trying to improve out-of-lab access, although Dickinson said she urges faculty members to take advantage of personal labs until the project is completed sometime this summer.

UI faculty have chance to teach abroad

Alissa Arndt
Staff

University of Idaho faculty members don’t have to look far for overseas opportunities. There are programs such as the University Studies Abroad Consortium and the Cooperative Center for Study in Britain which offer faculty a chance to teach in an international setting.

Robert Neuenschwander, the study abroad coordinator of the International Programs Office said, “Our goal is to get as many faculty overseas so they can get more international experience and carry that over to the classroom.”

The IFO tries to get at least one faculty member to teach a program overseas every year if possible, added Neuenschwander.

Grants for $250 are offered by the USAC to certified foreign language and international studies teachers who participate in their summer abroad programs at their sites in Thailand, Germany, Costa Rica, Italy, France and Germany.

USAC has summer, semester and full year programs for faculty and students both. They also provide opportunities for faculty swaps which consist of a foreign instructor teaching here while a UI instructor teaches overseas.

“Even students who don’t want to study abroad can get direct knowledge from somebody overseas which they might not have available here,” said Neuenschwander.

The CCBS is also looking for faculty to submit course proposals for both their summer and two-week winter programs. CCBS programs are generally shorter than the USAC programs.

Other than their semester program at Cambridge, CCBS programs are designed for shorter stays. CCBS also provides an English speaking environment, VISA assistance and a forum for professors who are interested in teaching abroad.

Prize money offered for public service announcements

Jennifer Eng

The American College Health Association is looking for college-age people to create and develop a public service announcement to educate American adults about genital herpes.

“We need new ways to teach sex education, and many don’t realize the signs and symptoms of genital herpes,” said Charles Herett, executive director of ACHA said, “What better source of new ideas for education than college students, who have grown up with video, a medium that educates and entertains?”

The contest is sponsored by ACHA in cooperation with Glaxo Welcome Inc., a research based pharmaceutical company in research Triangle Park, N.C., and has been in involves herpes virus research for over year. The sponsors said college-age individuals are the largest portion of the population of men and women, 18-40 years, who are at high risk of contracting STD’s such as genital herpes.

Currently, as many as 31 million Americans have genital herpes, with 500,000 new infections each year.

Rules of the contest require participants to be 18-years or older and enrolled at an accredited college or university. Entrants must submit an original, on-air, on-camera public service message, geared towards an adult audience, that provides accurate information about genital herpes and why people think they may have it should seek medical attention. Judges will assess each eligible entry on the basis of communications value, creativity, originality and execution.

The winner will receive a $10,000 scholarship, a trip to New York City to attend a New York PMA Festival and the opportunity to assist in the production of the public service announcement. The genital herpes PSA will be aired on commercial television.

'96 Graduates can look forward to good job prospects

This year's job market looks pretty good. In fact, employers think they'll increase their hiring of new college grads by a substantial margin over last year. They've also planned to up their starting salaries by a respectable amount. They say their companies are growing, and all in all, business looks good this year. This rosy job outlook is brought to you by the 259 employers who responded to the Job Outlook survey, conducted by the National Association of Colleges and Employers during the fall of 1995.

Now, before you decide that you don't need to read any further, read this: There's no guarantee that you'll get your dream job. In fact, there's no guarantee that you'll get any job—not without putting forth some effort. Yes, employers are enthusiastic about this year's job market, but no, they're not interested in hiring just any warm body that shows up for the interview. So, read on.

Who's Hiring?

Overall, respondents plan to hire 23.5 percent more new college grads in 1995-96 than they hired in '94-'95. In other words, last year those employers hired an average of 80 new college graduates each; this year, they anticipate hiring 98 new college grads joining their work force rolls (see Table 1). Employers in the service sector are most enthusiastic about their hiring plans: They project a 27 percent increase in hiring—an average of 124 new college graduate hires. Incidentally, this sector accounts for the majority of job opportunities, and it's likely that you'll end up working for a service-sector employer—they're projected to account for seven out of 10 hires this year. Best bet for jobs in the service sector: Look for opportunities with merchandisers and with employers providing computer software development.

Freshmen and sophomores should think about jobs now

Seem a little early in the game to be planning your job search? It's later than you think. Graduation and job hunting are just a couple of years away.

More importantly, much of the stuff that employers look for in job candidates—relevant experience, for example—takes time to acquire. So, take steps right now to ensure that you enter the job market with every advantage. Here's what employers say you should be doing now to make yourself an appealing job candidate:

• Gain work-related experience. Participate in cooperative education programs, internships, part-time or summer work relevant to your field of study. This experience could be crucial to your career.

• First of all, employers increasingly look for (and expect) job candidates to have this experience. In fact, employers responding to NACE's Job Outlook survey said that more than half—58.6 percent—of their entry-level college hires had co-op or internship experience.

Job-search advice from employers

Thoroughly research the organization you're interviewing with. Why? How can you be interested in a job if you know nothing about the organization, what it stands for, what kinds of opportunities it offers? That's what staffing professionals say to themselves when they're faced with a candidate who hasn't bothered to find out about the company. You can't interview intelligently if you are in the dark about the employer.

Assess your skills, abilities, achievements, and experiences. If you don't bother to take this step, you can't communicate effectively with employers who need to hear from you how your abilities match their needs.

Start your job search at early as possible. Take advantage of networking opportunities. Alred career fairs, participate in employer information sessions and presentations and work with alumni contacts to uncover opportunities and learn more about the employing organizations.

Use the career services office. It's staffed with professionals who are knowledgeable about the job search process and can help you conduct a self-assessment, put together a resume, refine your interviewing skills and more.

Wal-Mart plans store atop Washington's boyhood farm

Associated Press

STAFFORD, Va. — The riverside farm where George Washington mapped out as a boy, and where legend has it the first American president chopped down his father's cherry tree, could soon be part of a much newer American legend. Wal-Mart, the morose, some say ruthless, discount chain plans to open a store atop part of the old Washington farm.

"This is George Washington's boyhood home and it is a national treasure," said Hessie Howell, one of the leaders of a fledgling citizen opposition group. "There can always be more shopping centers, but there can never be another place like this one."

The farm site along the Rappahannock River near Fredericksburg is the only one of Washington's three homes that is not already a park or museum. The foundation of the Washington house, which burned in the 1860s, is preserved and signs tell tourists a little about the family's life there. But grander plans for a visitor's center and much-needed preservation work have founsted repeatedly.

The site is mostly open fields, with a view of the river. Suburban houses and a shopping center are visible nearby, but the Wal-Mart would be the first commercial encroachment of the land closest to the old Washington house.

The Wal-Mart, with a promised Colonial-style facade, would sit alongside the preserved foundation. The 30-acre Wal-Mart property would overwhelm the 15-acre historic site, said William Abbot, editor emeritus of Washington's papers at the University of Virginia.

"In addition to sentimental reasons, this site is worth preserving. It can be used to teach young people about life in the 18th century," he said.

A spokeswoman for Wal-Mart said if the Bentonville, Ark., chain does not build on the site, someone else will.

"This land has been zoned commercial for many years, so I guess I'm a little puzzled as to what exactly the folks did think would be built there," said Betty Pellemeyer.

The nation's No. 1 retail giant plans to break ground on the store soon and open next year.

Washington lived at Ferry Farm from 1738, when he was six, until his father's death when the boy was 11. The young George then divided his time between Ferry Farm and two other family estates.

The legend of the cherry tree is almost certainly the fabrication of an admiring Washington biographer. But if George did actually confess to the vandalism with the famous words "I cannot tell a lie," the event took place at Ferry Farm, historians said.

When word of Wal-Mart's plans leaked out last month, the store seemed a done deal. The Stafford County Board of Supervisors welcomed the project and plans for the store were already drawn.

Historians and environmentalists opposing the store say their only hope is to convince Wal-Mart to go elsewhere.

The opponents hope to take a leaf from critics who turned away the American history theme park the Walt Disney Co. planned near a Civil War battlefield in Manassas.

Although Disney seemed sure to win all, necessary approvals for the project, the company pulled up stakes in 1994 after months of bad publicity. Historians led the charge against Disney, saying the enter-

Ex-neo-Nazi moonlights as National Park ranger

Associated Press

SPOKANE, Wash. — A former white supremacist leader is now a seasonal federal law officer, working for a government he once decried as a "Zionist Occupied Government.

Jastin F. Dwyer, the former Washington state leader of the Aryan Nations, is a seasonal park ranger, working six months a year for the National Park Service. As part of his job, he carries a gun and has the same arrest powers as an FBI agent.

Dwyer, 28, worked last season at Fort Spokane, where he made arrests and wrote misdemeanor tickets. The campground is at the confluence of the Spokane and Columbia rivers in Lincoln County. "He's on our radar, but is not working now," said Gerry Tays, superintendent of the Coeur D'Alene National Recreation Area.

Dwyer's seasonal job is set to resume in April, but National Park Service officials are not expected to call him back to duty.

Dwyer has an unlisted number and could not be reached for comment Saturday. But in a statement issued Friday, he told the Spokane Review he's no longer involved with the Aryan Nations.

"I'm trying to put the past behind me and (a news story) will only be counterproductive in my new life," Dwyer said. "I am no longer involved (in Aryan Nations) and haven't been for several years."

Dwyer was a skinhead in the San Francisco Bay area before coming to the Aryan Nations near Hayden Lake, Idaho, in the late 1980s. In 1991, Dwyer recruited skinheads in Federal Way in Western Washington and staged a neo-Nazi rally on Whidbey Island for the last Bob Matthews, who led a band of...

sites that are not English speaking. However, all classes are taught in English so the faculty does not need to know the native language to take part in the programs. CSBS pays all costs for instructors to participate, but does not pay faculty salaries.

Fulbright grants, celebrating their 50th anniversary this year, are also available for faculty. Fulbright grants are funded by all countries that participate. The U.S. government establishes a base amount of money that is then matched by all participating countries. Due to the current atmosphere in Congress, the U.S. funding for the program could be greatly slashed, says Gleante Wray, associate director of IPD. This will put considerable stress on research grants for faculty. Fulbright will try to keep their student programs as long as possible, but the faculty grants will take the "first hit" and Wray: Faculty must apply for the Fulbright Scholar Program and submit research projects for the particular place they wish to go. The projects are then reviewed by a U.S. committee that may or may not recommend them. The projects are then sent to the proposed host country and reviewed by a committee there. If the projects are approved by the host countries they are sent back and must go through one final review in Washington D.C.

Two UI professors have had their projects recommended by the U.S. committee and are now being reviewed by their proposed host countries. Competition for the limited funds is extreme.

Wray will be holding two information sessions to let faculty know about the next competition. She has also invited faculty that have participated in the program to offer tips on applying and creating successful research projects. These sessions will be held in the Morrill Hall conference room Feb. 27 from 12:30 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. and March 1 from 3:30 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Wray said, "Education is key to getting mankind to live together in peace. Fulbright research grants promote exchange of ideas, information and cultures as well. They also provide invaluable connections and more opportunities for exchange for faculty and students alike."

violent neo-Nazi known as The Order. He also befriended Randy Weaver, who became a federal fugitive in 1991 after failing to show up for trial on a firearms charge. Dwyer visited Weaver in his mountaintop cabin near Naples, Idaho, just days before the deadly 1992 shootout that left Weaver's wife and son and a federal marshal dead.

"I'm certainly as shocked as anybody that we have this guy working for us," Chris Andrews, chief ranger for the National Park Service, said Friday from his Washington, D.C., office.

Roger Kennedy, director of the National Park Service, is being briefed on the matter.

Dwyer has an arrest record. He was hired by Mark Anesault, then acting district ranger at Fort Spokane.

Tays, Anesault's supervisor, said Anesault followed agency guidelines in checking on Dwyer.

The Park Service is prohibited from asking job applicants about past affiliations with unions or political or religious organizations, Tays said.

"If we'd known then what we know now about him, the National Park Service would have never hired this guy," Tays said.

The National Park Service this week issued new guidelines changing the way it conducts background checks on seasonal officers.

"If we'd known then what we know now about him, the National Park Service would never have hired this guy.

—Gerry Tays superintendan

The changes have nothing to do with Dwyer, Park Service officials said. "We are doing this, obviously, to see what we can do better in the way of background checks," Andrews said.

Dwyer drove a 1979 Chevy Blazer, painted in camouflage colors and bearing a bumper sticker that reads, "I love my country, but hate my government."

Dwyer lives near Cheney with his wife, the former Elizabeth Bullis. They were married by Aryan Nations leader the Rev. Richard Butler under a burning Nazi swastika at the April 1994 Aryan Youth conference in Hayden Lake.

Butler said he spoke with Dwyer just a few months ago.

"It's working for the Forest Service, or something like that," Butler said before being told it's the National Park Service.

The Aryan leader said Dwyer hasn't disavowed his racial views, "at least to me."

Butler said he isn't surprised Dwyer now works for the federal government.

"You can't make any money in the patriotic movement," he said. "There's no way he could make a living fighting for the white race, so he had to go to work for ZOG (Einstein Occupied Government).

After Dwyer was hired for the ranger's job last April, he began the application process to become a Spokane County reserve sheriff's deputy.

But sheriff's officials recognized Dwyer's name, "We were aware of his affiliation with the Aryan Nations group," said Undersheriff Mike Aubrey.

Dwyer never submitted the department's 10-page, personal background questionnaire, which asks the applicant to list affiliations with any groups or organizations.

JOBS

For this—manufacturers said that nearly 70 percent of their new college hires had had this experience—employers in the service industries also recognize its importance. More than half—51 percent—of their entry-level college graduate hires had internships or co-op experience.

Second, participating in such a program could be the road to your first job; employers told NAACE that nearly a quarter of their new hires came from their own co-op/ internship programs. This was especially true of manufacturing employers, who plucked 27.4 percent of their new hires from among the ranks of their cooperative education programs.

* Get involved in campus organizations and/or extracurricular activities. Really involved. Don't just add your name to club membership roster—hold an office, chair a committee, be an active force, a leader, in the organization or activity. Employers look for candidates with leadership skills; one way they look for evidence of these skills is participation in campus groups and activities.

* Keep your grades up. It's tough—especially when you're first adjusting to the world of college—but maintaining good grades can pay off big time come graduation. You'll be competing with tens of people for the job you want. Don't misunderstand: Good grades aren't insufficiently going to give you the edge over one of your competitors. There's a very good chance, depending on what field you've decided to go into, that employers will expect all of their candidates to have good grades. Good grades can make you a much stronger candidate than you have a chance at the job.

* Acquire and develop your computer skills. No matter what your career aspirations, there's an excellent chance that you'll need computer skills to perform your job. The reality is that this skill isn't a "nice to have"—it's a must in today's increasingly technology-dependent workplace.

Dr. Charles McKetta, forestry economist at UI, said that from a sawmill standpoint the situation is terrible because they can't compete with the lower prices. However, from the consumer perspective those lower prices are very attractive.

New computers and hardware upgrades would cost money—money that would have to be provided by each department or by each faculty member, a proposition that is unlikely, Williams said.

"Advisors and department administration have received computers to support student advising, but not for research and teaching."

When the university has so little money for computer related expenses it makes it difficult to continually upgrade the standard each year Williams said. Dickerson said she encourages the faculty to use student labs in the meantime.

researched is that of the national trend of people becoming married later in life (after 30) and having children even later still.

"This was unheard of in my generation... If you weren't married by 19, that was it." She has also studied women who attended all female colleges. In this environment where "your reality (as a woman) is the norm," the women become confident, strong and have a greater sense of self.

They assert what they know and do not back down from this knowledge, which is the norm for those attending co-educational colleges.

She blames this résolution and passivity to the shared female feeling of competition.

Desjardins studied this idea of competition between females only to discover it begins at a very early age and is well in place by the time a girl reaches age 11. It is rooted in the message that a woman is not complete without a man; therefore, she must compete for the man's attention and love.

The one exception is that of African American women who, she discovered, are told to only count on themselves. This causes this group of women not to mention marriage or competition in exercises of self identity.

Carol Gilligan, a colleague of Desjardins said, "These disparate visions in their tension, reflect the paradoxical truths of human experience that we know ourselves as separate, only insular as we live in connection with others, and that we experience relationships only insu far as we differentiate other from self."

The idea of inherent differences between the sexes becomes tricking to negotiate because the self is so intertwined with the beliefs of society and its projection of what it is like to be a man or a woman upon the self.

John Rowan writes in The Horned God, "If we as men deliberately and consciously take up this position, going through the initiations, the deaths and re-birth conditions required to do so, then we shall be fit to live in a post-patriarchal world. We have to go beyond patriarchy and matriarchy to what lies beyond..."

Desjardins concluded and instructed the participants that now they are aware of the messages men and women are subjected to growing up, they can never ignore them. She said, "Awareness is the first step. She believes men and women can learn to communicate, work together productively and carry on successful relationships, building on all that is said before. Those who participate can no longer be ignorant of the messages and ideologies they may have taken for granted up until today.

In the manufacturing area, expect an average increase of 3.3 percent. Within that sector, you're likely to see the most substantial increases from computer and business equipment manufacturers—4.1 percent—automotive and mechanical equipment manufacturers—3.4 percent—and electronic equipment manufacturers—2.9 percent.

The government/nonprofit sector doesn't look as good this year in terms of job opportunities, but those who do find careers in this area are looking at an average starting salary increase of 2.6 percent. Federal government employers plan to up their average starting salaries by 2 percent; state and local government agencies anticipate a smaller average increase of 1.7 percent.

Remember that the salaries presented here are averages—they're not set in stone. Some graduates will earn larger starting salaries; some will be offered substantially less than what is shown here. A number of factors affect salaries including supply/demand, geographic location and what the individual candidate can offer the employer.

Who They're Looking To Hire—The "Ideal" Candidate:

Today's job market looks much better than that of yesterday, but don't be fooled into the belief that employers are "desperate" for new hires. They're not, and in fact, they'll find that the standard employers have for new hires are pretty high. What exactly are employers looking for in job candidates? The typical reply of those responding to NACE's survey: "To get a job with us, the candidate needs communication skills, performance and interview skills."

Employers ranked oral communications, interpersonal and team work skills first, second and third respectively, when asked to indicate the importance of skills in a job candidate. All three related to communication—particularly to how well a candidate might relate to and interact with coworkers. Today's employers view good interaction and communication among employees as critical to the organization's success.

Of course, employers also look for candidates to be proficient in their field possess leadership and analytical abilities and exhibit flexibility and really they're looking for candidates who have a combination of these skills.

To determine whether or not a candidate has the leadership skills the employer is seeking, the employer looks for evidence in a candidate's accomplishments and experiences. Generally, employers agree the candidate who has had a position that holds leadership positions or is otherwise active in campus organizations and/or extracurricular activities has relevant experience via co-op, memberships or part-time work and maintains good grades. Employers look for these attributes as indicators that the candidate has a good combination of prized skills.

Finally, the "ideal" candidate who is prepared for the interview, has good references, exhibits a strong resume and is enthusiastic about working for the organization, displays professionalism and is willing to show himself/herself. Show Yourself in the Best Possible Light—Sound like a tall order? Then consider this: The candidate who has prepared thoroughly for the interview signals that the interview skills could get passed over.

Why? Because employers look for you to communicate how your skills relate to their needs—and you should need to know to write your resume, cover letter and interviews. It's not enough to just list or point to an accomplishment or an experience—you must be able to discuss examples and applications of your skills that you developed and used in your experiences. So, don't skimp on the time you spend on your resume/cover letter or in preparing for interviews. Be sure to take advantage of the expert help that's available to you through your career center. While it's likely that your career center’s services won't be free, you can ask your career counselor or fellow students to help you evaluate your resume, cover letter and interview techniques, conduct mock interviews, and help you prepare yourself to employers in the best possible light, all of which will help you out for your first job successfully...and all the subsequent ones you undertakes throughout your career.

There’s no need to be disappointed in the headline change for the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival or the GTE Giants of Jazz Concert scheduled for Saturday. Dianne Reeves, 1996 Grammy award nominee, has been added to this year’s entertainment to replace singer Al Jarreau.

“After studying at the University of Colorado, Reeves moved to Los Angeles, recording with George Duke and Stanley Turrentine. She also had an 18-month stint with Sergio Mendes before establishing her solo career...”

A few hours later Dianne Reeves called to say she could be here and that she’d love to sing with the Big Band.

Jones Brothers to reunite at festival

Justin Cason

For a large number of people, family reunions can be a dreadful affair full of annoying relatives and stale jokes. When brothers Elvin and Hank Jones get together this week, though, chances are they’re going to change all that.

Jazz music is one thing that makes the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival go round, and the Jones brothers have been a part of that type of music almost all their lives. Hank is one of the most prominent pianists in the extensive world of jazz, and Elvin is more than just influential with his drumming. However, not since the two were children have they performed together in the United States. At least, not until now.

The Jones’, along with bassist Brian Bromberg and guitarist Herb Ellis, will back up almost every evening act during what should be one of the best Jazz Festivals since its beginning nearly 30 years ago. After decades of playing apart, a reunion of their talents seems only fitting, especially since the only thing that has kept them apart musically these past years was their opposite modes of jazz.

“They both play different kinds of music,” said Sue Ehrlwine, assistant program coordinator for the Jazz Festival. “They have their own styles. Elvin is into progressive jazz, and Hank is into the more traditional jazz.”

Because of this, they fell into distinct groups of musical categories. In fact, it was these differing cliques which brought both Jones’ to fame. A large part of Elvin’s notoriety came as a result of his association with trumpeter legend John Coltrane, with whom he played during the 60s. Hank has played with more musicians than one can count, recording thousands of demos along the way. He has been an accompanist for Ella Fitzgerald, Artie Shaw and Benny Goodman, and, while as a member of the CBS Orchestra, he played piano for the likes of Julie Andrews, Barbara Streisand and Harry Belafonte.

While the Jones’, Bromberg and Ellis will be spending the bulk of their time playing back-up to the other performers, in no way will they be second fiddles.

“They are the main rhythm section, but they will also be getting some time in the spotlight,” Ehrlwine said. “After all, they are one of the highlights.”

Indeed, “highlight” is a compliment both Hank and Elvin have received quite a bit over the years, especially from students. “I watched them play last year, and they were very entertaining,” said sophomore music major Mike Jones (no relation). “I’m definitely going to see them again this year.”

Although the Jones brothers have never performed in the U.S. together, they have appeared at the Jazz Festival before at different times. Elvin was here in 1994, and Hank has been here four or five times.

Fans of the Jones’ can check them out tonight—assuming tickets are still available—at the Pepsi International World Jazz Concert. It starts at 7 p.m. at the Kiddie Dome and will also feature Lionel Hampton, Brian Bromberg, Herb Ellis, Toots Thielemans, the Ray Brown Trio and several international stars.

Bromberg lends strings, expertise to Hampton

Erik Marone

It simply couldn’t be a Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival anymore without the presence of bass player extraordinaire Brian Bromberg. Almost as much a fixture at Jazz Fest as Hampton himself, Bromberg is making his fifth appearance this year. Bromberg lends his talents every night of the festival accompanying the legends of jazz, a status Bromberg is certain to attain. His workshops are standing room only as musicians and music lovers alike flock to hear his music and his wisdom about the music industry, life and just about anything else.

Bromberg’s training on the bass guitar started at age 14 and in five short years, his name was gaining recognition, having played Carnegie Hall and toured with Stan Getz. Today his credits include recording with, among others, Dave Grusin, Dizzy Gillespie, Richie Cole, Lee Ritenour and Freddie Hubbard as well as numerous solo albums. With a style all his own, his popularity is gaining quickly and he is recognized as one of the best lead bass players of his generation. Incorporating elements of traditional jazz, classical, funk, rock and even speed metal, Bromberg sets himself apart from the pack with a smooth but lively sound he is able to tailor to any occasion. His selection of guitars is impressive as well, including fretless, piccolo and synth basses in addition to the traditional fretted and upright.

Although he can be seen at the concerts in the Kibbie Dome every night, the place to catch him is in his workshops. It is there that he can improvise in any manner he chooses, explaining what he does and how he got where he is, offering words of advice to aspiring jazz musicians and other music lovers. Even after yielding the room to other musicians, Bromberg sticks around, speaking one on one with fans and signing autographs.

Bromberg will be hosting clinics on Thursday and Saturday, 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. at the Student Union Borah Theater. He’ll be discussing upright and electric bass technique.

Even though he is quickly on his way up, his feet are firmly planted on the ground. He knows where he got where he is and is willing to share his experiences with others. It is always an honor and a pleasure to have Brian Bromberg grace our Jazz Festival every year.

Besides his performances, Brian Bromberg conducts clinics for jazz festival attendees.

Gene Harris with Ron Eschete are two more performers at this year’s festival.

All-star concert set for Friday

Matt Baldwin 160

Saxophones, trumpets, guitars, harmonicas, pianos, bass and drums—each has a distinct flavor, essence and color to them. For this week musicians will come together to combine these instruments into a collage of symphonic jazz, individual jazz and jazz bands. Thursday's Special Guest Concert will be part of this collage as part of this year's Lionel Hampton Festival.

Most of the talent ranging from Dee Daniels' fabulous four octave range to David Sanchez's saxophone harmonics, will help make up the talent for the special event this weekend.

The Special Guest Concert features 11 performers bailing from different parts of the country and world: Dee Daniels, vocals; Ethel Ennis, vocals; Toots Thielemans, guitar and harmonica; Gary Hargrove, trumpet; Joe Lovano, saxophone; Gene Harris, piano; Ron Eschete, guitar; Luther Hughes, bass; Paul Humphrey, drums; Joan "Bucky" Pizzarelli, guitar and David's Sanchez, saxophone.

Daniels attended the University of Montana where she founded, directed, wrote arrangements for, and accompanied the university's resident Black Ensemble Gospel Choir. After her years at the University of Montana, she returned to Seattle where for the next four years she captivated the crowds with her captivating style on stage, as well as her interaction with the audience.

Ethel Ennis is a legend in the world of jazz, balls from a very beginning in the world of music with her first commercial song written recorded by many artists, of which included Little Richard. This is Ethel's third appearance at the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival. Toots Thielemans, born in Brussels, Belgium, began playing the accordion at age three in his "Grandpa's Band." During his German occupation of Belgium Thielemans learned to play guitar by listening to Django Reinhardt's records. After World War II, he returned to Greece and his native Belgium.

Joe Lovano is the critically acclaimed modern master of the tenor saxophone. Recently, Lovano has been working with Pulitzer Prize winning composer Gunther Schuller. They met when they first worked together at a music symposium in Idaho two years ago. They are both excited about this collaboration with the superb musicians on their latest project which features a group of great standards and trailblazing originals by Schuller and Lovano.

Having an innate and uncanny skill on the piano, Gene Harris joined his first professional band when he was seven, and had his own radio show by age 12 and appeared in nightclubs in the Midwest. Harris' album, The Gene Harris Trio Plus One, was awarded the Grand Prix du Disque de Jazz, the French equivalent of the Grammy. He is the lead man in the Gene Harris Quartet.

Ron Eschete teaches at the Guitar Institute of Technology in Hollywood and has also written several books on jazz guitar methods. Eschete is also a member of the Gene Harris Quartet. Harris moved Luther Hughes and his family from Chicago 22 years ago to work in the quarter. When performing with Harris, he plays locally in the Los Angeles area.

Paul Humphrey, the last member of the Harris Quartet, is a well- respected drummer in the jazz community. His album Black and Blue won the German equivalent of the Grammy in 1992. Humphrey has also enjoyed a career that spans the years from the Vaughs Monarch Orchestra to White House concerts with Benny Goodman and Frank Sinatra.

Native from Panama, David Sanchez turned to the sax at 12 after playing the cornet for four years. He toured with dizzy Gillespie and with the band Calypso before performing in Dizzy's historic month-long 75th birthday engagement at New York's Blue Note jazz club.

Elementary, junior high and high school, as well as college, will be competing against each other in their own respective categories, which are broken down into A, B, C, AAA and so on.

Competitors and jazz fans alike are assured of fair results, as the judging is always done by professionals. "We hire judges from all over the country," said Brenda Cail, program chairman of the Jazz Festival. "We have teachers, college professors, and jazz professionals." As much interest in winning in the first place performers get to participate again at the end of the Festival in the Northwest Airlines Vocal Winners Concert on the Saturday of the festival. The Highlands Inn has generously provided the use of their facilities.

Daniels' group will perform at the 27th Annual Jazz Festival on Saturday, February 21.

WELCOME TO THE 1996 LIONEL HAMPTON JAZZ FESTIVAL!

We've been serving the UI campus and community since 1898, making us the longest continually published college newspaper in the pacific northwest.

WHEN YOU NEED TO KNOW!

THE UNIVERSITY OF IDAHO
Argonaut
The Students' Voice
Welcome Lionel Hampton, Jazz Festival

Buckle up and get ready for a ride into the realms of melody and song—Jazz is coming.

Once again the University of Idaho campus will hear the electrifying sound of vibes. The Kibbie Dome will be filled over the heads of musicians, some aspiring, some successful. The event, of course is “The 1996 Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival.”

For nearly three decades UI has had an annual jazz festival and for 11 years the festival has been named after Lionel Hampton. The concert event has grown from a one day event to a four day extravaganza including over 50 of the world’s greatest jazz stars and over 13,000 students.

Twenty-nine years of great music has graced UI and a grand tradition has been established, world famous stars have come to UI for the one and only “Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival.”

The Inland Northwest has few occasions that are imperitive in nature, this is one of them.

The Kibbie Dome will become packed with students, stars and community people all there for the same thing—great music.

World renowned artists come to North Idaho to share their talents not only with eager crowds, but also impassioned students. These artists spend time with music students offering advice and encouragement to tomorrow’s greats.

Herb Ellis has commented that the festival is the only one where musicians get to share their experience with students. The value of professional encouragement and recognition is great. Many great artists attribute their talent to a legendary figure that inspired them in their youth.

This year musicians such as Elvin Jones, Herb Ellis, Brian Bromberg, Toots Thielemans, Hank Jones, Tito Puente and many more will showcase their talents.

In addition, over 13,000 students participate in the yearly festival. Students compete in individual and group events.

Vocal and instrumental jazz is represented by these kids. A lucky few of them will earn the chance to perform.

Tonight is “International World Jazz Concert” night. The Thursday night show is titled “Special Guest Concert.” Friday night the Dome hosts the “All Star Concert” and Saturday is the “Giants of Jazz Concert.” These are the scheduled evening shows there is much more going on this week.

For those on limited budget the clinics offer a great opportunity to see some fine musicians at no cost. The clinics are held today through Saturday, most are in the Student Union Bowl, Theatre.

Take a look at the Jazz Festival insert for a schedule of all the clinics.

Grab a seat, get comfortable and hear the world’s number one jazz festival.

MTV sinks its claws even further deal, but with nine musicians on stage, there is a lot happening that is completely lost when the camera only picks up a single musician at a time. In addition to detracting from the stage, the video work could have been focused on making it clear that John Michael only wears a guitar for effect, waiting until he turns around to prove that he knows more than occasional chords fingerings by breaking into a solo to close the show.

I was going to let this slide, but they couldn’t let me get away with it. The clincher was the video effects. Straight video work could have been passed off as having been for the benefit of the folks in the cheap seats. However, this was a technical director’s dream. Video delays, negative images, funny camera moves, tilted cuts, split screens, wipes and a host of digital effects were applied to the video. It was like watching live MTV.

Being among those in the cheap seats (a pleasant way to say “a long way from the stage.”) There is no such thing as cheap seats anymore and under the influence of a few Budweisers (in mind it was all they had), I spent probably 75 percent of my time watching the screens, oblivious to the fact that there was a concert going on. For the cost of one ticket to the show, I could have paid my cold bill for an entire month and watched the same thing on CMH 24 hour a day, and been able to watch the occasional break for Space Ghost and Letterman. Even better, I wouldn’t be drinking the “King of Beers.”

I’ll consider the concert a waste of time or money by any measure, but it was an interesting exercise in picking through the haze and hype to find what substance underlay the glitter. With the video telling us so, and providing the occasional break for Space Ghost and Letterman. Even better, I wouldn’t be drinking the “King of Beers.”

Counting down to the 'Big One'

I am an earthwalker. One of my stipulations is that you must have been right the last 593. The reason I write in this is before a quake people are "flipping their cookies." My predictions have pre- vented several suicides. In those cases information calls have turned into suicide calls. I feel the people why they are feeling as they are. They accept me and thank me after the quake hits within a short time. I am glad that students now agree with me. They say the coastal quake will be in the 9+ range. We will not get a quake but a shock in the 5+ range. They and I both say it is T-tunes and counting to the "Big One."

A phenomenon is hitting now that is affecting a lot of people. I wake up and my pillow and sheets are soaked with sweat. My house at night is not that warm. When I get up to take a piss, I'm freezing. Nothing computes. I simply wish to give an answer to a problem that is showing in a lot of people.

Support minimum wage increase

Senate bill No. 1302 has been introduced by Sen. Patricia A. Lawton. This bill, if passed, would gradually increase the minimum wage from the current rate of $4.25 to $4.75 on July 1, 1997, and finally to $5.25 commencing July 1, 2000. Also, it eliminates tips from the definition of "wages," and provides for overtime in excess of 40 hours per week.

It is ludicrous to implement weld- less reform when the alternative is earning $4.25 an hour and trying to support a child, medical care and all the other costs. Also, it has been suggested that college students are required to carry medical insurance while staying on aid from the county and state to meet their needs. How can anyone afford health insurance while living on $4.25 an hour, the wage many col- lege students earn?

Locally, taxpayers are asked to support our schools and other pro- jects with local levies. Personally, I find it very disturbing to support these projects regardless of their merits, when working people are still earning poverty wages.

Currently, S.B. No. 1302 is stuck in the State Affairs Committee. If you support this bill, let your represen- tative know as soon as possible so it can be voted on during this legislative session. Call the Idaho on 1-800-325-6080; write your representatives at the State Capitol Building, Boise, ID 83720.

Flood help thanks

Thank you for volunteering your time to help fight the recent flood devastation on campus. Your efforts paid off. University and student issues would have been greater had you not provided support for the flood control effort. In whatever capacity you may have helped, please know that your assistance was greatly appreciated.

Again, thank you for your help in preventing a higher level of flood damage to the university.

Palouse water OK due to volunteers

While words can never adequate- ly express the depth of gratitude I feel toward everyone who pitched in to help in our recent time of cri- sis, it is absolutely necessary that an attempt be made. The sheer vol- ume of people, equipment and other resources that rallied to the call for help requires me to refrain from singing out any individual person or entity for fear of an omission. Thus, this letter goes out to each and every one of those who gave so selflessly.

The effort that went into protect- ing the City of Palouse water sys- tem was simply phenomenal. Knowing the importance of potable water to the citizens of Palouse, people literally abandoned their own properties to come fight for the common good.

We received help from individu- als, groups, organizations, clubs, businesses, schools, churches, towns, cities and more. Though the clean-up effort is far from over, it has been quite impressive. Many who worked

Kudos to Kane

An appreciation going out to yesterday ASU President Brian Kane. Kane also promised that he would veto Senate Bill #956-20. Senate Bill #956-20 seemed to be an incorrect sentiment to the existing rule. The truth is it would have granted automatic ASU activities board recogni- tion to these on-campus living groups. The bill is not dead, but Kane put his nail in the coffin of this ill-conceived and poorly thought out rule change when he announced the veto.

Kane should be commended for realizing this bill would have resulted in dispersed divisions between the on and off-campus students.

Rarely does anyone overtly agree that there are divisions within the campus community, but here are. For example, when prizes are given away at universi- ty events, they often focus on living groups, leaving out the off- campus population. Granted this is a small step in trying to realize the representation of all students.

One promise Kane made while running for the office was that he would work to break down the barriers between the students who live on campus and off. There has never been any real data that any effort put into reducing the tensions felt between these two factions. By recognizing that special privileges granted to only a small group of students is inherently unfair, Kane has made the first big step in creating a unified campus.

NEW YORK—In spite of recurring inflation jitters and a long list of other worries, some prominent economists and investment managers haven’t lost their enthusiasm for bonds.

Indeed, they predict bond prices will begin climbing again soon, pushing yields on long-term Treasury bonds below the lows they reached in 1993.

If that expectation is fulfilled, they add, it will provide a strong element of support for the stock market as investors grapple with questions about weakness in the economy and slowing growth in corporate profits.

"I think over time rates are going to come down a lot more," says Richard Strong, chairman and chief investment officer at Strong Capital Management in Milwaukee, which manages the Strong family of mutual funds.

"How can you have an inflation rate of something like 1.5 percent and a percent rate of less than 8 percent? It just doesn’t work. At some point rates are going to have to come down the economy’s going to hit a wall." The latest official statistics put the inflation rate for the United States in 1995 at 2.3 percent, a nine-year low.

This year, in an economy slowed by weakness in consumer spending and other dampening influences, Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Deutsche Morgan Grenfell-C.J. Lawrence Inc. in New York, says the rise in the consumer price index is likely to be around 1.5 percent. "Dietinflation is alive and well," he says.

Under an old rule of thumb, interest rates on top-quality long-term bonds should be about 2 to 3 percent above points the inflation rate to compensate lenders for giving up the use of their money.

Right now, Treasury bond yields, at a little more than 6 percent, are more than 3.5 percentage points above inflation, and more than 4.5 points higher than inflation projections for this year like the Fed’s. "Long-term Treasury yields probably won’t move much before too long," maintains Mitchell Heid, chief financial economist at Smith Barney Inc.

"We continue to believe that the old rule yields of 5.78 percent set in November 1995 will be tested at some point over the next few months, and a 2.5 percent mark should be tested before the end of the year," he adds.

Lower interest rates reduce the attractiveness of fixed-income investments that compete with stocks for investors’ favor. "The other benefit (for stocks) is that lowering interest rates causes investors to look ahead to longer economic times," says Greg Smith, investment strategist at Prudential Securities.

All this optimism has been challenged of late, however, by worries over the dollar’s decline, President Clinton and Congress on the federal budget, and a jump in world gold prices, which are closely watched by many analysts as a barometer of inflationary expectations.

"Lack of a comprehensive budget agreement could make it difficult for the market to continue its gains during the second half of the year," Held says.

The rise of gold prices past $400 an ounce is unsettling to bond investors because gold and bonds have traditionally been incompatible—both serve as a hedge against the very inflation that attacks the core value of bonds.

"But the eyes of many analysts, gold’s rally now probably reflects worries about other than inflation as demand for gold in the Far East spurred by the newfound affluence born of rapid economic growth. Thus Strong, in his Strong Discovery Fund, can have a penchant of his assets in gold at the same time that he holds a 30 percent position in Treasury bonds in the balance in medium-sized U.S. government stocks and Japanese stocks.

In the gold market, which has made little progress in recent years, Strong says, "I think the world supply-demand balance has finally started in favor of demand."

Nothing could convince me to stay

It’s time for me to go. That’s it. I’ve had it. House is killing me. My wife is killing me. What would drive me, and many like me, from this town? I once was a teacher, University Residences and Facilities management, that’s it. It all started back summer when my next-door neighbor (the power plant) was X-rayed every way for about a month, setting off false alarms. We were all wondering if my home was going to be hit by an atomic blast. However, the house was done for any of us living next to the smokehouse. Apparently the woods inside the soil caught on fire during the summer and was left no smolder for the next few months. Although there was little they claimed they could have done about it, the fire was out pretty darn fast as soon as the story reached local papers. It wasn’t until after the story appeared in this paper that they actually did anything. And, after several strategized telephone calls, my roommate received a call from our very own Intern Chief Tom Bell appologizing for the inconvenience. Next came the 4 a.m. beeping, buzzing and whirring noises from the plant. Sometimes we heard what we thought was a chainsaw cutting through metal. What’s going on over there! And why does it have to go at four in the morning! Don’t I have a right to sleep at least a full eight hours. Although many use this time for activities other than sleep, we are promised in our housing contract a healthy environment conducive to studying, living, eating. Quiet hours are sacred for me, and when broken I feel confused completely out of my head. Someone over the head with my illegal pot (so, no, I don’t really have one, that would be wrong of me).

But there! There’s more! One of our shower stalls had chipped tiles on the floor. We called Facilities Management in hopes of a quick fix. Instead we got what was a nilly tantly been incompatible—both serve as a hedge against inflation, but the very inflation that attacks the core value of bonds.

Nothing could convince me to stay

It’s time for me to go. That’s it. I’ve had it. House is killing me. My wife is killing me. What would drive me, and many like me, from this town? I once was a teacher, University Residences and Facilities management, that’s it. It all started back summer when my next-door neighbor (the power plant) was X-rayed every way for about a month, setting off false alarms. We were all wondering if my home was going to be hit by an atomic blast. However, the house was done for any of us living next to the smokehouse. Apparently the woods inside the soil caught on fire during the summer and was left no smolder for the next few months. Although there was little they claimed they could have done about it, the fire was out pretty darn fast as soon as the story reached local papers. It wasn’t until after the story appeared in this paper that they actually did anything. And, after several strategized telephone calls, my roommate received a call from our very own Intern Chief Tom Bell appologizing for the inconvenience. Next came the 4 a.m. beeping, buzzing and whirring noises from the plant. Sometimes we heard what we thought was a chainsaw cutting through metal. What’s going on over there! And why does it have to go at four in the morning! Don’t I have a right to sleep at least a full eight hours. Although many use this time for activities other than sleep, we are promised in our housing contract a healthy environment conducive to studying, living, eating. Quiet hours are sacred for me, and when broken I feel confused completely out of my head. Someone over the head with my illegal pot (so, no, I don’t really have one, that would be wrong of me).

Nadeau speaks on grizzlies

Most people have strong opinions about the reintroduction of grizzlies into the Bitterroot Ecosystem. While most agree they are a threatened species, some like it that way, while others would like to see bears back in our forests. Steve Nadeau currently works with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game on this issue. He has worked with grizzlies before in both Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. Nadeau finds "the main reason they are threatened is because they were eliminated by humans." At one time grizzlies were fairly common in the Bitterroot. Records show that one hunter, Wright, killed 13 of them in one expedition. Early in Idaho's history the bears were killed on site. After 1910 because of natural phenomenon and human progression, the population numbers began to rapidly decline. The last confirmed evidence of a grizzly sighting was by Bud Moon, a ranger in 1946. The Bitterroot was first identified as a site for potential reintroduction in 1975. Of the three ecosystems in Idaho the Bitterroot is the only recognized grizzly ecosystem without grizzlies in it, Nadeau said. There have been reports of bears, but all have turned out to be black bears. The state of Idaho's official position is that the Governor is opposed to the reintroduction in the Bitterroot area. Two main reasons cited are first, potential conflict between humans and bears and second, disruption of local economies. The state also provided some conditions they would like to see met if the program did pass. One request is that the bears be reintroduced as a non-essential experimental population in a non-essential experimental area.

What this means is some of the restrictions that stem from the Endangered Species Act are loosened so as to work with the reintroduction works. "According to Conservation Biologists the best way to assure that grizzly bears are protected would be to start a population, and the Bitterroot may be the best place," Nadeau said.

The main reason for support was that bears are a part of the ecosystem, and the second was that people felt it is necessary to save or increase the chance of survival.

Grizzlies once abundant in Northwest

Jerri Lake

During the times of the Northwest fur traders, grizzly bears were abundant in this part of the Northwest. Now, two centuries later, their numbers are greatly reduced, and in some areas, nonexistent. The historical range of the grizzly covered a variety of habitats. It roamed through most of Alaska, the western half of Canada and the United States down into the central Mexican highlands. Grizzly bear experts estimate over 50,000 grizzlies lived in the contiguous United States prior to European settlement. Records indicate the Lewis and Clark expedition killed six grizzlies in 1806 near present-day Kamish, Idaho. Many hunters during the late 1800’s killed several grizzlies on each trip they took. A hunter named Wright recorded five killed on one trip along the Clearwater and another 13 on a trip into the Bitterroot area. Other hunters, trappers and sheep herders continued to kill grizzlies in this area until the 1900’s. Some people believe the excessive killings is what eliminated grizzlies from the Bitterroot Mountains. Because of the grizzlies low reproduction rate, so more than five or six percent can be killed by humans or the population will decline.

A female grizzly will not start having young until she is about five to eight years old. After that, she will only average a litter of two cubs every three years and only one may survive to become an adult. At this rate, a mother may be 10 years or older before she replaces herself with a daughter of breeding age.

Grizzly bears do not disperse very much to colonize new areas. A young female may inherit a part of her mother’s area, but males may roam farther. Grizzlies need an abundance of different types of foods to satisfy their caloric requirements. Grizzlies roam across the land according to the distribution and seasonal availability of needed foods. These moves may change from season to season, and from year to year. North American adult females range from 50 to 150 square miles, and males from 300 to 500 square miles. Home ranges of several bears may overlap, especially at sites with abundant food.

The grizzly bear outside of Alaska was listed as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act in 1975. According to the act, “a threatened species is one that is likely to become an endangered species within the foreseeable future throughout all or a significant portion of its range.”

When a species is listed under the Endangered Species Act, all federal agencies are required to “recover threatened or endangered species in cooperation with state and tribal fish and wildlife agencies.” The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is charged with developing and implementing the plans to recover any listed species.

Currently, there are plans to reintroduce grizzly bears into the Selkirk range in North Idaho and the Bitterroot in central Idaho. The past plans have created heated controversy from different sides of the issues. Some want it reintroduced because it “symbolizes the essence of wild America and strikes images of power, freedom and beauty.”

Others fear the government regulations that will come with the reintroduction. Some of the regulations could affect timber sales and mining permits. Hunters and other outdoor enthusiasts would be faced with road closures and seasonal restrictions for grizzly bear “security.”

Depending upon the type of recovery program chosen, the taxpayers cost of recovery is about $160,000 to capture, translocate and monitor four to six grizzlies per year or $600,000 for a five-year program. Biologists claim the Bitterroot ecosystem alone could support over 200 grizzlies, a density of about one bear for every 25-30 square miles.

Backpackers, fishermen or hunters might cover the range of several bears on a single trip into this wilderness, unless the government says our presence may violate the grizzlies “security.” If for some reason you have to kill a grizzly in self-defense, a violation of your security, you must report it within 24 hours. Great if it happens in the first few days of a long pack in trip. The government will then form an investigation to determine if you really killed the bear defending your life. If the bear comes into your camp and destroys your everything you own, you are not allowed to kill it.

About the middle of April, the season on black bears will open. There are some grizzlies in Idaho, depending on where you go. Because it is possible at first to find a large Black Bear and a small grizzly to look about the same, you must know the difference so you do not shoot the wrong kind.

Grizzlies are usually brown in color, but can vary to a blond. An adult male can weigh up to 400 pounds and females to 300 pounds. From the side, a grizzly will have a hump on its front shoulder and a dipped face. A black bear is usually black. However, it can vary in color with patches of white on its chest, or be dark brown to blond. The black bear makes averages 200-250 pounds and the female about 150 pounds. It has no hump over the shoulder and a straight face profile.

An old forest ranger once told me, “If you see a bear and still cannot tell the difference, run up and kick it in the rear, then quickly climb a tree. If a bear climbs the tree to get you, it’s a black bear. If it rips the tree out by the roots to get you, it’s a grizzly.”

Campus Parking scarce due to Jazz Festival

Jeremy Chase

Outdoors Editor

Just when you thought it was safe to park your car on campus, the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival will take precedence over many University of Idaho parking lots and streets.

Due to heavy bus and pedestrian traffic on and off campus, several streets and parking lots will be impacted throughout the festival.

Traffic on Deakin Street between 6th Street and Sweet Avenue will be limited to one-way, south-bound on Feb. 22 through Feb. 24 from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. This change is to allow jazz festival buses and traffic easier access to points on campus.

With the re-routed traffic, parking on campus will also be affected by the festival. The east end of the KSBIie Dome lot will be closed at 5 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, and 3 p.m. on Friday and Saturday.

Mallard, Canada geese up in Idaho

Mallard and the Canada goose numbers were up substantially from last year in Idaho's annual mid-winter waterfowl survey. The survey is coordinated each year by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game and is a part of a nationwide waterfowl population survey. Personnel from both agencies make the count in early January every year.

The same areas are counted in each survey so that waterfowl population trends can be spotted. The survey is not an attempt to count every waterfowl in Idaho at the time but is meant to give biologists a good idea which way populations are headed. Though survey areas and timing remain constant in every year's survey, changing weather conditions and other factors affect the count. Because the survey is made in all states at the same time, waterfowl that may have moved out of one state are usually accounted for somewhere else.

The statewide count showed 159,160 mallards this year, 149,797 in 1995. Mallards crowded into the Lake Lowell-Deer Flat Refuge area of southwestern Idaho when 92,238 were counted this year. The second largest concentration of mallards, 23,528 birds, was found in the American Falls area in 1994 where there were 15,167 last year at the same time. While the number of mallards in all of North America has increased over the last couple of years, more mallards, 171,200, were actually counted around Idaho in 1994. Canada geese numbered 70,257 in the statewide count this year, far above the count of 43,855 last year. More than half of this year's goose count came from the American Falls area at 38,968. Only 6,517 geese were seen in that area last year. One observer noted that he had never before seen American Falls Reserve completely ice-free at that time of year, a likely explanation for the large increase in geese there. The next largest concentrations of geese were seen in the big lake country of the Panhandle. Smaller flocks were scattered along the Snake River between American Falls and the Oregon border. The statewide survey counted 33,758 in 1994 and 27,082 in 1993.

Overall, ducks showed a slight decline from last year. The difference was primarily in the number of redhead, 11,431 this year compared to 32,829 in 1995. Total waterfowl numbers were higher than last year, from 284,590 to 299,100, because of a dramatic increase in goose counted. Total waterfowl statewide were 261,620 in 1994 and 221,407 in 1995.

Speak out to Gov. Batt about Bull Trout

The public is invited to comment on Governor Phil Batt's Bull Trout Conservation Plan in a series of open houses arranged by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. All comments will be forwarded to the Governor.

The bull trout has been studied for listing under the federal Endangered Species Act. Idaho officials are working to save the native fish and avoid having it listed as a threatened or endangered species.

The public is invited to attend open houses on the bull trout plan at the following times and places:

- Panhandle: An open house will be held at the Fish and Game regional office in Coeur d'Alene Feb. 12 beginning at 7 p.m. Plans are available at the office for review before the open house.
- Clearwater: An open house will be held at the regional office in Lewiston beginning at 7 p.m. Plans are available at the front desk in the office.
- McCall: An open house is set for Feb. 13 at the McCall office from 6 a.m to 5 p.m. Copies of the plan are available at the office and in the McCall Public Library.

Waterfowlers donate to Keho

Idaho Waterfowlers recently contributed $5,117.06 to the Keho Lake Project in southern Alberta. The check was sent to administrators of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, a program involving public and private waterfowl habitat management organizations in the U.S. and Canada. A large portion of the full flight of waterfowl comes into Idaho from southern Alberta prairie lands.

Idaho Department of Fish and Game Director Jerry Conley said the department agreed to sponsor the Keho Lake Project in 1998. This payment brings Idaho's contribution to $159,862.39, leaving a balance of $181,671.60 to be paid toward completion of the project.

Funding for this habitat improvement project comes from the sale of state waterfowl stamp prints, collector stamps, and related artwork. State law requires that 20 percent of the revenues derived from these sources be spent on waterfowl propagation projects in Canada.

Idaho gets back on track at Eastern's expense

Damon Barkdull

Coming into Saturday night's matchup against hopeless Eastern Washington, the Vandals were hoping to snap a five-game winning streak. In the first half, Idaho (10-12, 4-6) must have believed a cure for beating the deficit was right over the horizon as Eastern (3-19, 0-10) didn't come out firing. The Eagles did, however, look for the open end raced out to a 13-point halftime lead. Unfortunately for the Eagles, Idaho found a spark, erased the deficit and came out of the Big Sky Conference matchup with a 76-63 win in front of a sparse 2,525 fans in the Kiddie Dome.

"We were embarrassed about that first half," said Idaho junior center Nate Gardner who went five for nine from the field and finished the night with 16 points. The fact that EWU shot 66 percent from the field in the first half and 9.5 percent in the second, was a key factor in a game that almost saw Idaho fall to the seller dweller of the Big Sky.

The Eagles, who raced out to a 45-32 halftime lead, shot only two field goals in the final 20 minutes of the game and lacked the intensity as seen by the same EWU team in the first half.

It was almost a win-versus type role for the Vandals, who came out lacking intensity and defensive aggression in the first half, then in the second half caused 13 Eagle turnovers and three airballs.

Idaho was led in scoring by Reggie Rose with 19 points. Eddie Turner chipped in 14 points for the Vandals, while Harry Harrison led the Vandals board crew with 14 rebounds.

Even with the satisfying conference win, the Vandals had reason to be smug in the first half. The Vandals called a timeout with 15:59 left in the first half after EWU's walk-on guard Travis King hit a three-pointer to cap a 12-4 Eagle run.

The Vandals pulled within seven points after Idaho's James Jones dunked the ball and was fouled. Jones eventually completed the 3-point play, although EWU still maintained a 32-25 lead with 5:23 left before intermission. The Eagles built on their lead after a Luke Egan three-pointer and a Mike Sims layup, giving EWU a 45-32 at intermission.

In the first half, Idaho shot 41 percent from the field and committed seven total turnovers.

A let Idaho coach, Joe Cravens, didn't have to yell and scream at halftime.

"At halftime, some of them (UI players) made a decision about what they're going to do these last couple of weeks. Whether they're going to throw in the towel or whether they're going to have some pride," Cravens said, "It looks they decided to have some pride."

After a Shawna Didden three-pointer and a Rose lay-in off a Turner steal, Idaho edged within eight points of EWU's lead. After a King airball, Idaho went on an 8-2 run and earned the first lead of the night, going up 49-47 with 11:11 left in the game.

From that point, Idaho didn't look back. Harrison helped put the Vandals up by ten with just under six minutes to play after hitting one of two free throw shots. EWU's cold shooting continued and only foul shots kept the Eagles close. The Eagles made 14 free throws in the second half but couldn't match Idaho's 9-10 shooting from the charity stripe.

With 2:26 remaining in the game, Idaho maintained a 67-61 lead. The Vandals soon pulled away after Rose and Didden combined to hit five of six from the foul line and Gardner hit a layup with 2.2 left to finally end a game that was close to finalizing.

Seahawks get sued over possible move to Anaheim

(King) County has breached its legal obligations by not providing a first-class or earthquake-safe facility for the playing and viewing of the Seahawks' home games," Tzemach said. "If the state and King County had ever spent a fraction of the time and money they've spent attacking Mr. Behring in addressing the significant structural and operational deficiencies of the Kingdome, the parties would never have been brought to this situation."

Behring closed the team's suburban Kirkland offices Feb. 2 and two days later began moving equipment to Anaheim, Calif. He announced plans to use Rams Park in Anaheim as a training facility.

He reopened the Kirkland facility temporarily this week to prepare for the NFL draft, but he has not changed his plans about the move.

There is no written agreement between the Seahawks and the city of Anaheim for use of Rams Park.

Anaheim spokesman Bret Colson declined comment Wednesday on the new federal lawsuit.

But before it was filed, Colson told The Seattle Times: "Our No. 1 one concern at his point - our No. 1 priority is to not enter into any agreement that would result in litigation."

The federal complaint is the latest legal maneuver designed to keep the Seahawks in Seattle. King County on Feb. 2 sued in state court, claiming the team is bound by contract to play in the Kingdome.

The Seahawks - who have 10 years left on their lease - filed their own suit, claiming the lease can be broken because the Kingdome is unsafe from major earthquakes and is not a first-class facility.

The state Supreme Court agreed this week to decide whether those suits will be heard in Seattle, where the county filed, or in Kittitas County, where the Seahawks filed.

The new federal suit contends Behring violated antitrust laws with a "campaign of innuendo and misinformation" to block other pro teams from entering the Seattle or Los Angeles markets, and by playing the regions against each other.

The state, Grigolino said, played a major role in helping the NFL's creation of the Seattle franchise by facilitating the construction of the Kingdome.

As a result, the state expected to reap tax revenues, a boost to the state economy and "immeasurable" benefits to Washington residents.

The state also asks to inspect Seahawks documents and for a court order requiring the team to preserve all documents.

King County Executive Gary Locke said he was pleased the state has jumped into the fray. "We are fighting Ken Behring with every legal weapon we have," Locke said.

One antitrust expert said he didn't think the federal suit would have much chance of success.

"Washington's antitrust lawsuit against the owner of the Seahawks franchise is the legal equivalent of the pot calling the kettle black," said Christopher Cameron, a Southern California School of Law professor.

"It's one thing for a city or state who is seeking a franchise, or a team who wishes to leave one city for another, to bring an antitrust suit, but it's preposterous to think that a city losing a franchise is going to win one,"

Seahawks coach Dennis Erickson, a Northwest native, said reporters Wednesday at the team's headquarters that he and his family were initially disappointed upon learning the team would leave Seattle, but Erickson said he never considered quitting coaching.

"That's what I do and that's what I do well and that's what I'll do the rest of my life, regardless of the not always being here in Seattle," Erickson said. "I'm loyal to this organization and this football team. That's why I'm loyal and that's why I'm here.'
Road woes continue at Eastern

Mark Vanderwall

The trip to Eastern Washington was costly for the Vandals, as several bad breaks took place in Idaho's 72-58 loss to the Eagles in Reese Court Saturday night.

Idaho played very well on the defensive side of the ball, but the problem arose when it attempted to turn the defense into offense. Idaho stole the ball 17 times in the game, but the points off of the turnovers didn't ever accumulate.

"We stole the ball 17 times, but I bet we only ever converted just one of those steals into points," said Idaho Head Coach Julie Holt.

Another negative that came from the loss was the effect it had on the overall Big Sky standings. Idaho dropped to sixth place at 4-4, the lowest they can go and still make the post-season tournament. Only two and-a-half games separate the second and seventh place teams, with Idaho being the only team to wrap-up a berth thus far, making Idaho's remaining four games all very important.

Perhaps the greatest concern is the condition of Idaho's leading scorer and rebounder Mindy Rice. Rice is still hampered by a tender left arch, and may have torn the band of muscle surrounding the arch Saturday night. Rice saw limited action, playing only 15 minutes and scoring four points, 12 less than her average. Rice is now in crutches, and her playing against NAU will be a game time decision.

The biggest problem for the Vandals came in the form of trying to stop EWU's Tina Smith. Smith was wearing signs that read, "Keep Out Of Reach From Small Children," as she lit the Vandals up for a career high 23 on 8-13 shooting. Smith found outside touch as she nailed 2-2 from beyond the arc, and 5-5 from the charity stripe.

"I'm just relaxing and sticking with the shots more," Smith said. "I know it was just a matter of time before the shots started falling."

For the Vandals, if there was anything positive to come out of this, it was the play of freshman center Jennifer Stone. Stone played 26 minutes, her highest mark of the year, while scoring 13 points and tallying seven rebounds.

"I think everyone was very excited for her to come in and play as well as she did for us in Mindy's absence," said Holt.

Art Skorpik played a great game as well, as he put up some tremendous numbers. Skorpik scored 15 points, dished out five assists, tallied seven steals and at 5-3 grabbed five rebounds.

Trailing 32-23 at the half, Idaho looked to repeat history, as they came back from an 11 point deficit at home to eventually beat the Eagles 72-61, but as history often does, it remained a tale of the past. The Vandals pulled in within nine late in the game at 60-51, but Eastern countered with a run to put the game out of reach for Idaho, before finally sealing the Vandals fans on free throws.

EWU improves to 7-5, 5-5 while Idaho falls to 7-5, 4-6. The Vandals return home for the last time to host Northern Arizona Thursday night at 7:05 p.m. in Memorial Gym and again on Saturday night against Weber State at the same time.

"We need to win at least two of our last four games, with one of those wins preferably coming against Northern Arizona," said Holt.

Ante-up everybody, it's time for some late night cards

I have a theory or philosophy if you will. Just as women are emotional creatures, men are competitive beings.

I think there is as many need in males to be playing a sports game. When we are not competing, we tend to become a little bored. What seems like a harmless action into a contest. To illustrate this I give you a made up card game example. Most don't stop for anything and to beat their previous hand. They will often times, by taking more liberties.

The cold weather and following of the recent snows have forced all males to get creative with their competitive spirit. One can only play so much backgammon or heads up without burning out and views that over the years has increased.

This group of men, we'll call them the Rick Johnson fan club, half the players going to the popular and active, with the others playing in the same conditions of EBSP's. The latter group, Rick and his crew pull out all the stops with their cards. Theirs is a group of men, with the mens card games.

However, poker is fast becoming a late night way of life. In fact, this love of cards and low stakes is slowly picking up. With cards you have a fancy, it forced the competitor, the group to jump-on. The sitcoms with its setups and descriptions of a fantastic community of competitive card games. Trust me for this guy, that deserves a WOW. Now the Rick Johnson fan club is playing poker, all the things from Texas Hold Em to Midnight Baseball and Pick a Card.

The rub of winning a relative low stakes, you're playing a win, it's boring and you really can't go around the table and do this over and over. Card players, the key ingredient to the fun is the competitive atmosphere. It allows them to talk trash, to win in a winning hand, to point out the luckiness of an opponent’s strategy or to make a regular relish like card playing, like the wheel who haven't fazed out he doesn't want this in your hand.

Vandals qualify several in weekend meet

As O'Brien and bethephile Marlaeke Velman captivated the crowd in the Kibbles Dono, the tailing times of Idaho's track teams became the star Friday night and Saturday at the 21st Vandal Indoor Invitational and the McDonald's Open.

O'Brien easily hurdles the competition Friday to win the 55m hurdles in 7.20 seconds, then followed that with a 16.50 foot pole vault Saturday for first place. Meanwhile, Velman set a new meet record for women in the 55m dash with a 6.97 on Friday, then doubled up on Saturday, finishing first the 55m hurdles, 7.84 and in the long jump, 21-0.

For Idaho's track and field teams, the weekend became a qualifying ground for the Big Sky Championships and National's as the Vandals' saw improvement all over the track. Friday the women set five new personal bests and the men followed that performance with 11 personal bests on Saturday. "We had a very good weekend," Interim Women's Coach Julie Taylor said.

Vanderbyl competed against the top athletes from the Western United States in the Vandal Invitational. High jumper Thad Hathaway led the Idaho men when he took first with a 7-foot 1/2-inch jump. The other Vandals Men's Team first came when the 4x400m relay team sprinted to the 12th best time in the nation, and a new meet record of 3:01.75.

if the bright guy does have just a pair of twos.

Realistically, isn't a little gambling for small change a little more relaxing and enjoyable than an unhealthy frenzy if left unchecked. If losing 14 cents can keep a guy from going insane or starting a fight because he didn't release his personal need for contesting, then petty poker is a good thing.

My suggestion is this. For those competitive guys out there who are having problems working out their combative tendencies, why not try to get your own poker club started (just kidding, don't do this. The people at this number might not have a clue about poker clubs). Just buy a deck of standard playing cards, bribe a friend to play with you and deal the cards.

being an upset.

"They were clearly the aggressor in the second half. They took us out of our offense," said first-year EWU coach Steve Aggers. "It seemed like they had a headstart every time, made all the mistakes and seemed to really enjoy the game." Six-foot Eight-inch center Melvin Lewis led all EWU scorers with 13 points.

The Vandals next game is a Big Sky Conference match up against Northern Arizona in Flagstaff on Thursday.

NFL salary cap favors players

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS _ A federal judge issued a temporary restraining order that set the NFL salary cap for 1999 at $46.8 million, about $2.1 million higher than the owners wanted.

U.S. District Judge David S. Doty sided with the NFL Players Association on Thursday in setting the cap on the eve of the free agent signing period, which was to begin today.

However, both sides may agree to delay free agent signings until the issue is resolved in a conference call with Doty on Feb. 22. A decision on the delay was expected today.

At issue are ticket, local television and radio revenues generated by the Jacksonville Jaguars and Carolina Panthers, who joined the league last season.

The owners say the cap should follow the recommendation of an independent auditor and reviewed the expansion revenues to arrive at a figure of about $38.7 million, said NFL spokesman Greg Aiello.

The NFLPA believes the higher figure is a more accurate reflection of revenue projections for the upcoming season.

"We think it's clear as a bell," said attorney Gregory Kester, who represented the players Thursday.

In its first year in 1994, the salary cap was set at $34.6 million per team. That increased to $37.1 million last season.

Doty also gave preliminary approval to a three-year extension of the league's collective bargaining agreement with the players, stretching the deal through 2002.

That extension does not include expanded revenue-sharing deals, which would have included portions of contracts such as the one Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones signed last season with Pepsi and Nike.

The owners voted against the expansion revenue-sharing provision last week. If that item is not approved during their meeting next month, the NFLPA might turn down the entire extension.

"We expect them to include the revenue sharing," said Jim Quinn, an attorney for the players. "If they don't, then we'll re-think what we want to do."

Doty set an April 5 date for a hearing on final approval of the CBA extension.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. _ Chris Childs scored five points in the final 52 seconds and made a steal to set up two go-ahead free throws by Armon Gilliam as New Jersey rallied to best the New York Knicks 92-77 Saturday night.

The Nets scored the final 10 points and held the Knicks scoreless for 2:24 in winning their third straight game, which matches their season high.

All three wins have come since the end of the All-Star break against quality teams, including two against Indiana. The loss was only the third in the last 10 games for New York, all on the road.

Gilliam led the Nets with 28 points and 11 rebounds. Childs had 20 points and nine assists and Shawn Bradley added 11 points and 15 rebounds.

New Jersey outscored-bound New York 63-43.

Patrick Ewing had 19 points for New York, Derek Harper 16 and Anthony Mason 15. Magic 95, Heat 93

MIAMI _ Rex Chapman of Miami missed two free throws with 2.1 seconds left, allowing Orlando to break a four-game road losing streak.

Chapman's second miss was intentional and the Heat grabbed the rebound, but no one was able to get a shot off before time expired.

Shaquille O'Neal scored 31 points to narrowly win his showdown with Miami's Alonzo Mourning, who had 27 points and 15 rebounds. O'Neal grabbed 10 rebounds and even made six consecutive free throws in the second half.

Mourning has scored 35 and 33 in his past two games against O'Neal but missed 16 of 27 shots this time before fouling out with two minutes left. Cavaliers 97, 76ers 82

CLEVELAND _ Cleveland extended the NBA's longest current winning streak to seven games, beating Philadelphia behind 25 points from Terrell Brandon.

Brandon, who also had nine assists, was one of six Cavs who scored in double figures.

Vernon Maxwell scored 26 and Jerry Stackhouse 22 for the Sixers, losers of three straight and 14 of their last 17 games. Philadelphia has lost 20 of its last 21 meetings with Cleveland, including the last seven.

Derrick Coleman returned for the 76ers after missing six weeks because of a sprained ankle. He had 10 points on 3-for-14 shooting, nine rebounds and five assists in 37 minutes.

Randy Johnson says he was joking

Associated Press

That Randy Johnson, What a kidder.

Johnson says he was just joking when he told a sportswriter that he'd like to play for the Arizona Diamondbacks when the expansion baseball team begins games in 1998.

When his remarks appeared in print on Saturday, Johnson said he was surprised.

"I was just kidding," Johnson said. "Didn't the writer realize that's part of my personality?"

How could he be taken seriously? "The Arizona Republic and Phoenix Gazette reported that Johnson was mulling playing for the Diamondbacks when his contract with the Seattle Mariners expires in 1997."

"I've got two years left here and then I'll be coming down, playing with the Diamondbacks," Johnson told the newspapers at the start of spring training in suburban Phoenix.

Johnson, winner of the Cy Young Award, pitched the Mariners into the American League playoffs last season.

Mariners' manager Lou Piniella didn't seem to take the remark too seriously.

"That's Randy," he said, smiling. "At least we don't have to worry about it for two years." The Mariners went 27-3 when Johnson pitched last year. He limited opponents to a .201 batting average and set a major-league record with 12.35 strikeouts per nine innings.
