Associate professors' salaries hit bottom

Robert Hall

University of Idaho associate professors' salaries in the humanities and social sciences are now below 99 percent of their colleagues across the nation. Furthermore, their median salary of $36,661 is $4,710 below the median for all other UI associate professors, according to the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO. UI, blames market forces primarily for the low salaries. This is what the market pays for associate professor positions. “These people generally aren’t recognized as being in the same group as other professors. They do perform research and services, but don’t teach. They include librarians with master’s degrees and Health Service counselors,” Gier said.

The associate professors are hired at their market value, but once here, they can be paid other than that value by the administration. “Internally, the university is not bound by this ruthless standard. We challenge the administration to direct a greater portion of the equity pay to our under-paid associate professors,” Gier said. He suggests that the associate professors join the AFT. “Lobbying individually is not as effective as lobbying as a collective.”

The median salary for associate professors who work in the library is $30,492. That salary is $10,879 below the median for all other UI associate professor’s salaries. Other median salaries are: business and economics, $57,221; engineering, $52,335; science, $46,788; forestry, $40,000; agriculture, $40,035; education, $39,021; and architecture, $38,885.

Full professors are behind as well, bringing in $13,650 below the averages for all other public universities that host the Ph.D.

When asked whether or not these salaries have had any effect on the quality of education at UI, Gier said, “Absolutely not. There are a lot of very qualified people out there looking for jobs.” Gier also mentioned the quality of life in Moscow draws many talented people to the area. “It’s cheaper to live than many places and Moscow is a very nice place to raise a family.”

to live.”

Kurt Olson, dean of the College of Letters and Sciences, explained that, “Idaho just doesn’t have the population, the tax base, that other states have; therefore, the funding for higher salaries isn’t there.”

Olson also said that there is a trade-off of higher salaries for the kind of environment we have been in Moscow. There are lower commuting costs and insurance costs, and it doesn’t cost as much to live here as it does to live in some other areas.

He said that professional schools often have competition from industries for talent and this drives up the salary base. Many of the departments in the College of Letters and Sciences don’t have that competition.

“A lot,” what’s “hot” can drive up salaries. For example, biochemistry is hot right now. More students want to take the courses, which creates a demand for more teachers,” Olson said.

“We are always looking for ways to improve salaries” Olson said. “We have a very high quality faculty, they love teaching and they are very dedicated.”

Salaries are rising. For the period of 1990 through 1995, raises for the higher administration rose by 21.34 percent compared to 16.2 percent for the faculty.

For 1995-1996, according to the AFT, they rose by 2.33 percent, about 3 percent lower than the faculty. This year the administration’s salary rose 3.17 percent, slightly above the faculty.

“Here was not a permanent solution,” Blaisdell said. Instead, “it created one-time state funds and allowed us to fund our temporary holdback to the same extent Jerry Wallace, vice president of Finance and Administration, said. “It’s the same kind of dynamic. The state has found the permanent FY drug holdback, and the general fund commensurate to be that it has all really been made permanent.

“Now we need the payroll to an example of what I haven’t having end to grocery shopping.

Instead, the student uses a credit card to purchase food. We expect you to file an estimated income,” he said. Sebald advised students to hang on to the Student Aid Report until their taxes are finished and then make the appropriate changes. The money may then be sent to students in June.

March or early April.

The deadline given on the front page of the FAFSA is misleading. The form will be processed until June 30, but to receive certain funds, the priority deadline is Feb. 15. Missing this deadline, a student is no longer an applicant for work study, SEESA, or the Perkins Loan.

However, they may still receive the Pell Grant and Federal Direct Loans.

Sebald also advised ignoring instructions A and B. “Fill out the section. If they don’t need it, they won’t use it. But if they need it and you don’t do it, there will be massive delays,” she said.

Another important detail to remember on the renewal form is coloring in the “yes” block on item 104. This sends the information collected in the form to the University of Idaho.

Finally, students should complete and stamp the enclosed postcard and put it in the envelope with the FAFSA. This card will be sent back to the student to inform them the deadline was met.

NASA selects UI engineering students

Team to use "Apollo 13" airplanes

Robert Hall

Jeff Daniels, Tiffany Roddick, Nathan Stoddard and Josh Wilson have been selected by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for the first Reduced-Gravity Student Flight Program.

The students are one of 25 teams from around the country selected to take part in the program. They will spend two weeks in April at Ellington Field in Texas, home of the Johnson Space Center's Reduced-Gravity Program.

"Ever since I was a kid, I have wanted to do something like this with NASA," Daniels said. "I get butterflies sometimes already."

The four mechanical engineering students will conduct their experiment, "Precision Viscosity Measurements in Microgravity," aboard the same planes that were used in the movie Apollo 13.

NASA's Boeing KC-135A will provide the team with a true three-dimensional weightless testing environment.

Professor Ralph Budwig of the UI Department of Mechanical Engineering and Sandi Billings, advancement officer in the College of Engineering, will be joining the team.

"Viscosity relates to the properties of a gas or liquid that make it to move or flow," Budwig said. He added that viscosity measurements are an important factor in both scientific and industrial applications.

"For example, if you have a gas pipeline and want to know how much energy it takes to move gas 100 miles, you need to know the viscosity," Budwig said. Convolutional efforts limit the accuracy of the measurements.

The UI team will perform their experiment in near zero-gravity. They hope to obtain improved data on the viscosity of various liquids by measuring the force of an object moving through the liquid.

Billings is excited about the trip and said it is truly an honor for the students to be selected by NASA to perform their experiment.

The plane will make 30 to 50 parabolic maneuvers, where the trajectory of the plane will provide about 25 seconds of zero-gravity conditions.

Budwig has compared the flight to a roller coaster ride.

"The plane starts out level, then pitches the nose up in a steep climb. At a designated peak, the plane peaks and begins to curve down. The weightless condition occurs," he said.

The students will also experience entrance and exit conditions coming in and out of the maneuvers.

They will be subject to 1.6-g's on each reduced gravity maneuver. These conditions often have an effect on a person's equilibrium, which is why the plane is nicknamed the "Vomit Comet."

"We'll see how the air sickness goes," Wilson said.

The two-week NASA program starts on April 7.

The trip will include program orientation, pre-flight physiological training, installation of equipment needed to conduct the experiment on the aircraft, a test of readiness review, pre-flight briefings and issuing of flight suits and boots as well as two days aboard the research plane.

"It's one step closer to my dream," said Roddick. "This adventure will be exciting and rewarding."

Team mate Stoddard agreed. "This is my first big step toward working with real professionals at NASA."

Middle-ground options abound in Jones case

Question: Do you think President Clinton should have to stand trial in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case while he is in office?

Kate Lovan, freshman, Inst. Studies and Political Science

"I do think he should be held responsible, but I think if he is forced to stand trial, it could impede what he is able to do in office."

Candy Boaz, ASUS secretary

"I definitely think he should, because why should he be treated any differently than you or I?"

Jeremy Bauch, senior, mechanical engineering

"Yes, I think the president should be held responsible for the law the same as an ordinary citizen."

Steve Danieli, freshman, music education

"No, I think he should probably be able to wait until he's out of office."

Even if a judge ordered that all information gathered during that phase be kept confidential, "It's impossible to believe that what was said ... would not leak out," Jeffries said.

Allowing pre-trial proceedings involving everyone but Clinton would be a problem too, says Steven R. Shapiro of the American Civil Liberties Union, which filed a brief arguing against a delay in the trial.

The president still would have to spend time helping his lawyer prepare to question the other witnesses. But because he would not be questioned, his own memory could fade by the time the trial begins. "He becomes less valuable as a witness, but the intrusion on his time is almost as great," Shapiro said.

Ronald D. Rotunda, a University of Illinois law professor, questions the idea of requiring a judge to automatically defer to a president's general claim that he is too busy to deal with a lawsuit at all.

The Argonaut

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The question for the Supreme Court in the sexual harassment lawsuit brought against President Clinton by Paula Jones can be reduced to three words: Now or later?

But the answer may not be so simple.

During arguments in the case last week, the justices appeared to be seeking a middle-ground that would protect Jones' right to sue and avoid intrusions on the president's duties.

As Justice Antonin Scalia saw it, there might be a difference between "the person of the president being hauled before a court" and allowing other pre-trial matters to go forward.

Jones accuses Clinton of propositioning her in a Little Rock hotel room in 1991 when he was governor of Arkansas. Clinton has denied the allegation and said he does not remember ever meeting her.

Both sides in the case have asked for an all-or-nothing decision. Jones wants a trial now; Clinton wants to delay all action in the case until after he leaves office in 2001.

There are other options, including:

- Delving the trial, but allowing pre-trial fact-finding to go forward.
- That would include gathering all documents related to the case and questioning of witnesses—including Clinton—by lawyers for both sides. The goal: get evidence from witnesses whose memories might fade and preserve evidence that otherwise might be lost.

- Allowing each fact-finding involving everyone but Clinton. That would preserve much of the evidence without requiring the president to appear for formal questioning until he leaves office.

- Letting the case go forward until the president makes a specific claim it is interfering with his duties. The trial judge would automatically defer to the president's assertion and delay the trial.

- Allowing each fact-finding involving everyone but Clinton. That would preserve much of the evidence without requiring the president to appear for formal questioning until he leaves office.
Computer lab users must get Novell accounts

Candice Long
Staff

Starting on Feb. 11, all University of Idaho faculty, staff and students will be required to use a Novell account to login before using the computer labs on campus.

Computer Services has implemented this new program for two primary reasons. First, it allows for more flexibility to manage the labs and identify more effectively who is using the computers. Lab users now use Netscape e-mail and newsgroups without proper identification, but logging in will allow full use of Netscape in terms of sending e-mail, reading newsgroups, posting newsgroups and browsing the Internet.

"The system we are using now limits the functionality of Netscape," said Karl Dickinson, acting director of Computer Services. "Our new system has additional features and benefits that will be accessible for students' use."

The second reason is part of a long-term plan. There have been reports of paper waste in the labs and students are exceeding the average resource use. Eventually, users will move toward a system of restricted printing.

Students who do not already have a Novell account should present a photo ID at the Help Desk in the Administration Building, Room 24. Those who have not acquired a Novell account by Feb. 11 can enter in "labuser" in place of a login account identification number for a limited time.

University computer screens warn students of the impending change in the login system.

Doctor gives warning, tips to avoid ski injuries

Erin Schultz

"There's virtually no limit to the way you can hurt yourself downhill skiing," said Dr. Sam Monger, physician for the University of Idaho's Student Health Service.

The truth of this statement became even more of a reality on the slopes of Sun Valley when Al Vincelllette, a former Nordic jumper for the American Olympic team, died in a downhill ski accident three weeks ago.

Vincelllette lost control at a very high speed, hitting an avalanche-control post with a force that ended up killing him. Further, Vincelllette was a seasoned skier, proving that there's more than just lack of experience involved in wipe-outs.

With any great ski season comes some first rate injuries. During these winter months, doctors see a variety muscle strains, bruises, broken bones and other ski injuries on a regular basis. While there's no telling whether it is the beginner or advanced skier who is more likely to get injured, there are some similarities between ski accidents.

"Generally, skiers tend to hurt themselves toward the end of the day when they're tired; when they're making just one more run," Monger said. And Monger speaks with conviction, since he also suffered a serious ski injury making just "one more run" at the end of the day.

In Vincelllette's case, speed played a factor.

"He lost control at a high rate of speed. Going downhill, by turns, on the bottom run, you end up going 20-25 miles per hour and it feels like you are just walking down the sidewalk," said Bruce Malone, director of Ski Patrol at Sun Valley.

The most common ski injuries come in the form of concussions, bruises and strains, especially knee and back strains. There is no magical cure, but students who go into the Health Center will usually go away with a prescription for ibuprofen, rest and ice.

One thing Monger recommends to those skiing the slopes is to do some kind of warm-up activity before blazing your way down the mountain. While you don't necessarily need to stretch out, one thing that could help is to do a short jog. Doing something that gets the body temperature up increases the flow of blood to soft tissues," Monger said. This could help work against strains and bruises — some of the more preventable injuries.

Finally, Malone emphasizes the importance of respecting the speed. "Occasionally skiers don't respect how fast they truly are going. That's when a sudden impact can be dangerous," Malone said.

Health Services increases hours, adds "fast track"

Erin Schultz

With the start of the new semester, the Student Health Services has added Monger to the University of Idaho's Student Health staff.

Business hours have increased to a 12-hour workday. The center will remain open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday, except Thursday, when it will be open from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m.

We did this to increase availability to students," said Dr. Donald Chin, Student Health director.

In addition to new hours, Health Services has added a "fast track" for students who come in to pick up prescriptions or lab results or who have administrative requests such as wellness parking tickets. The fast track will keep these students from dealing with long lines and hours by putting them on a different waiting list.

"Students need to tell the secretary that they qualify for the fast-track and they will be put on a special list," Chin said.

Along with this, a 24 Dial-a-Nurse phone line is now available to answer questions and give medical advice confidentially over the telephone. The number for this is 236-4511 and all calls are answered by a registered nurse.

Help the Marshmallow Men: Keep Phys. Ed. mandatory

Some of my most vivid memories of high school involve a 5-foot tall physical education teacher who terrorized me twice a week during my sophomore and junior years.
I stood in the gym as somewhat of a physical aberration: 6 feet tall, broad-shouldered build—with a gut that dribbled more than the basketball when we played. Five fat guys on a team and we were always skins and always the butt of all the jokes when we rolled and waddled and swept up and down the court chasing five physically adept young men with badges of fence rails and the stamina of indiviusals who had not spent the leisure hours of the past five years eating Suzy-Q's. This 5-foot terror, this wrestling and football coach—he scared us marshmallows.
He shouted us through six weeks of calisthenics followed by rounds of volleyball which ended a half-hour later when we fat guys had finally caught our breath.
He screamed as we staggered through the final laps of the mile run, our thighs to the roots and tongues stuck with the metallic taste of near complete physical ineptitude.
He was at our elbows bawling as we shot the basketballs, as we swung the hauz, as we hit the birdies and as we staggered to the showers and emerged red-faced-glowing and charged with fatigue as we hauled our sstly gym clothes home in pathetic little bags every two weeks whether they needed a wash or not.
I hated him and hated the pinheads in the class who were better at sports than I was.
I hated the sweat and the whispered jokes and speculations of cup sizes as the Marshmallow Men shed shirts once again to play yet another round of basketball. I hated always having to play hard, win hard and return the next day prepared to perform the same sadistic ritual all over again.
But all the while my health improved.
I found out I liked badminton and could shoot a nice left-hander. I could run 100 yards and not need supplementary oxygen at the finish line. I was no longer short of breath.

Legitimacy to African Americans vernacular is energized by a commitment to get more teachers to recognize and acknowledge that students who speak black vernacular are no less capable of learning and excelling as their counterparts who grew up in families and communities speaking only standard English. Oakland is only one of a number of school districts in California that have programs in place to help inner-city blacks improve their communication skills in preparation for a job market that demands standard English. Rather than subsidizing a public school system that is biased against culture and class, districts across the country should follow Oakland's lead in acknowledging that there are substantial distinctions in language use and dialect that shape and constrain how people read and write.

Letters to the Editor

Americans ignorant of Irish/British difficulties

We are writing in response to a letter from several students which was concerned with the situation in Ireland and in particular the views of Mr. Mulholland in a recent column. We agree that the Irish are the deplorable bastion of imperialism—we thought that as two Britons ourselves we would like the chance to reply.

You may be surprised that we agree with many of the points in their letter; indeed there is a general feeling of shame among our generation at the imperialist history of our country, but it seems to be the case that Americans, particularly those with an Irish background, do romanticize the Irish Revolution of 1916 and to some extent Ireland is free.

It is indubitable that there is a history of British oppression in Ireland, the writers of that letter have completely ignored the reality of today's situation.

The Anglo-Irish Treaty of 1921 gave the Irish Republic the lower 26 counties of Ireland whilst the Protestant majority of the six counties of Ulster remained part of the United Kingdom. Now, we could go back to the twelfth century to discuss why these Protestants are living in Northern Ireland but the fact remains that today, as part of a democratic political system based on consent, the problems of the inhabitants of Ulster remain in the status quo.

It is perhaps easy to take an idealistic stand and to base one's argument on the other side of the Atlantic, but what do the writers of that letter actually propose that we do with the Protestant majority in Northern Ireland who wish to remain under British rule? Ship them on over to England, perhaps?

Oh, and since we're on the subject of the oppression of indigenous people, how about considering your own history of slavery and the virtual annihilation of the Native American Indians. Perhaps your time and energy would be better spent attempting to solve some of the USA's manifold social problems instead of espousing blinkered declarations on issues occurring on the other side of the Atlantic?

On a lighter note, it is highly amusing to hear many Americans claim that they are Irish only to discover that this is based on the fact that their great grand-father's horse's saddle was made in Dublin. Hang on, in our country that makes you American, not Irish and what's so bad about that?

Pi Kappa Alpha alcohol-free policy promotes brotherhood

The purpose of this letter is to inform the University of Idaho as well as the community of Moscow that as of Nov. 11, 1996, the Zeta Mu chapter of the Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity is officially alcohol-free.

While we realize this is a delayed response to our previous actions, the membership believes that a self-imposed, alcohol-free policy could not have come at a better time. Our intentions are to promote the nature of our brotherhood and rediscover the values upon which this fraternity was founded.

The term limit of this self-imposed period has not yet been determined; however, it will definitely extend through the end of the 1996-1997 academic year. At that time, we will assess our progress and either continue or terminate the policy based on our evaluation.

If at that time the membership feels we have achieved the above goals, Zeta Mu will adhere to and exceed the existing University of Idaho alcohol policy.

Proposed shopping tax shifts, rather than eliminates, property tax burden

Idaho's first "shopping tax" (others call it a sales tax, but I shop and they tax me; therefore I call it a shopping tax) comes around 30 years ago and was 3 percent. Then, because we were told more money was needed for schools, it went to 4 percent. And then, a "temporary" problem required a "temporary" increase to 5 percent. Now, let's examine our new and very Republican legislators are thinking of reducing property taxes (yet) by raising the "shopping" tax over 30 percent (property tax is defined as 1 percent). This is not a good idea. As a household tax, it will support almost every Republican in office today, I believe that this very anti-Republican idea will dramatically increase the so-called gender gap and cause an enormous economic gap for those now in office.

Women in general, and wives in particular, must keep track of how much money they earn. We are not just paying too much in property taxes, we are paying too much in income taxes and the current "Nevermind." tax.

The argument that we, the tax payer, must somehow pay for our own taxes (tax cuts under its own weight). What I have said and what I believe most voters have said is cut taxes and spending, not shift taxes and spend more.

If there is more spending to be done with my money, I'll do it. I can shop better for my family than the government.

police” discovered that King was a mere mortal in the conduct of his personal life and that some political radicals had been attracted to the movement. Garow even documents that anonymous letters were written to King by those who threaten blackmail and violence if he didn’t moderate his political positions.

Certainly anyone who has ever been involved in movements for any kind of fundamental change shouldn’t be surprised by this repressive battle against King. Mainstream liberals and Democrats often have a more difficult time accepting it, however. John Kennedy and his brother Robert Kennedy were deeply involved and approving of this FBI activity, as were Lyndon Johnson and his aide, the sensitive and intelligent Bill Moyers.

What motivated these liberal icons isn’t easy to determine. The functionaries who are still alive aren’t eager to talk. It’s very plausible that J. Edgar Hoover, the FBI’s self-appointed director-for-life, had some fairly threatening files concerning them. Knowing this, they dared not foul up his plans to use King as the poster child for the notion that King was a genuine subversive, a real threat to democracy, not a crusader for extending it?

Maybe it was simple jealousy. They saw what King was capable of. Accomplishments of what they considered lesser were with his grasp. All the gifts of oratory, vision and charisma that they possessed were his. But he also had the gift of courage in such great supply that many feared he might accomplish his revolutionary goals — without them.

These leaders saw that even with all their grandeur, King simply didn’t play by the rules. Maybe he didn’t understand them, or maybe he just had no time for them. So you see, it’s not important what our personal views of King are. What matters is that we recognize not only his brilliant vision, boundless energy and eloquent words, but also his ability to be uncompromising with the most successful of his political contemporaries. It was this uncompromising spirit that gave King his place in history.

King didn’t “get there” with us. Indeed, almost 30 years after his life ended on the Memphis concrete, we still haven’t gotten there. But even as he inspired admiration and awe in millions and jealously and hate in millions of others, Martin Luther King never stopped trying to reach his movement. We, not his, block that kind of spirit takes much more than just a day off to celebrate.

when I chewed gum.

I no longer hated the 5-foot tall gym coach who screamed encouragement and support each time I tried, and his support at the end of each week we Marshmallow Men could do just as much and become a little easier at the end.

What small increase in health and self-image I had in high school I owe to that short gym coach and the state’s mandatory physical education requirements.

Now the Idaho state Board of Education is, in an attempt to pare down education regulations, recommending that physical education classes no longer be required.

Physical education courses should remain mandatory in Idaho schools. It is a nation where obesity and inactivity are on the rise — indeed, only half of Americans aged 17-21 are physically active on a regular basis — where so many sedentary distractions — television, computers, video games — take the place of physical activity in leisure time, it will be physically detrimental to many if physical education courses are offered as options only.

Latah County Republican Tom Trim filled in, and mandatory physical education and will push for such in the legislature. “If school children aren’t provided the opportunity of exercise and physical activity,” he said, “and make it a lifelong habit, the incidence of obesity is much greater in the teens, the 20s and on throughout life.” The legislature has until April 1 to come to a decision, otherwise mandatory physical education courses will suffer a coronary due to gridlock.

Removing physical education’s mandatory tag will mean away of our future Marshmallow Men are likely to remain so, and will contribute to soaring health costs as their slowly bodies decay under the curse of disease. Idaho legislators will be doing their children a great favor if they maintain physical education as a school requirement.

As traumatic and embarrassing as it often was, I’m thankful for that short shouting man who cowered me through two mandatory semesters of physical education.

To this day I remember him with a gentle curse as I exercise and try to retain the level of health mandatory physical education helped me achieve. This is not to say I’m likely to be co-starving on any David Hasselhoff-based entertainment program anytime soon. It does mean I’m not quite the Marshmallow Man I used to be.

Broncos capture victory in Vandal land

S. west victory rang out for the Vandal women's basketball team as they...}

The Vandals... In the first half after a Kelli Johnson 3- point shot and a free throw. Both teams battled back and forth for the lead, until Nieman put the Vandal... three by three by tipping in a missed shot just prior to halftime.

The tip-in gave Idaho the 32-29 lead, and gave the Vandals some momentum going into halftime.

"We played hard. We hustled really hard," Nieman said of the first half. "We were really intense and then let down in the second half."
New cast in Super Bowl

Both the New England Patriots and the Green Bay Packers bring new and old faces to the "Big Show," but the Packers bring the most dominating statistic of all — being part of the NFC power- equation that has managed to roll over any competition representing the AFC recently.

The onlooking of great players like Joe Montana, Michael Irvin, Mark Rypien and Emmitt Smith, complemented by outstanding offensive and defensive lines from the NFC, have managed to put down hopes of an AFC Super Bowl champion for the past 12 years. In fact, Custer's last stand for the AFC came in the shape of the Oakland Raiders who won Super Bowl XV back in 1981.

Returning to the stage and spotlight surrounding the Super Bowl are only six veterans and a previously seen coach.

For the New England Patriots, there are four players returning. Three of the four are former "Pacell" New York Giants, including offensive lineman William Roberts and Bo Kratcl. Also returning is running back Dave Meggett and Shawn Jefferson, the former San Diego Charger.

Living off a description Bro and Luke Duke, the "good-ole boys," or "America's Team" from Green Bay, Wis., bring only two familiar faces back to the Super Bowl.

Wide receiver Don Beebe, who played for the Buffalo Bills from 1990-93, will be returning as a wide receiver for thePkack the behind the gun of Brett Favre. Beebe was part of four Buffalo Bills' teams to make it to the Super Bowl.

Speaking of quarterbacks, the Packers back-up QB, noted as a man who wears sun glasses even on a cloudy day, is more than just another Chicago Bear quarterback Jim McMahont. He is the only Green Bay player to have won a Super Bowl title, and the only player for the Packers coming into Sunday's game with a ring.

Byron Jarraagin

McMahon relished the taste of sweet victory in the past when the Chicago Bears won Super Bowl XX under the direction of Mike Ditka in 1986. After his success with the Bears, McMahon has had an unpredictable career playing back-up quarterback for different teams, but his experience is something many of the young Packers could use.

Bill Parcells, head coach of the New England Patriots, brings some Super Bowl experience to his team from a coaching stand-point.

Parcells was part of a winning tradition in New York — claiming Super Bowl victories in 1987 and 1991 with the Giants, behind the arm of quarterback Phil Simms.

Green Bay returns to the Super Bowl as an entirely new team compared to the Super Bowl Champ Packers of old, who claimed the first two Super Bowl titles back in 1967 and 1968.

The only Super Bowl experience Parcker coach Mike Holmgren has seen is as an assistant coach with the San Francisco 49ers.

Overall, the Packers are just as young a team when it comes to Super Bowl experience.

In six days, Washington State university quarterback Drew Bledsoe will have the attention of the Patsies. They'll be watching and listening — hoping to apply his efforts against Brett Favre, the NFL's Most Valuable Player last two seasons.

Bledsoe is in a position to match his efforts with Super champion Mark Rypien, former 1981-85 WSU quarterback, who won Super Bowl XXVI as part of the Washington Redskin organization.

Kermit and crew fly Southwest

Danny Barkdull

Sports Editor

With the air chills and the ground is frozen, Canada geese traditionally fly south for the winter.

And while the University of Idaho men's basketball team is enjoying the slight warm trend in Moscow, they're hoping the Southwest sun will impire a thawing of a Vandals cold streak.

Idaho (0-0, 0-0) has yet to win a Big West Conference game, though, they're hoping to overcome the odds when they travel to Las Cruces, N.M., on Thursday to face New Mexico State (7-7, 1-3).

On Saturday, UI will journey to Denver, Texas, to duke it out with North Texas (6-6, 1-2). "It's a tough road trip," said UI coach Kermit Davis. "We kind of dug ourselves in a whole with losing some games at home. In order to try to get into position and maybe have a chance to qualify for the Big West Tournament in March."

Scott newcomer to UI Basketball

Byron Jarnagin

Sometimes childhood dreams come true, and when they do — it is almost as if heaven shines its light down from above, giving someone the opportunity to prove themselves to the world.

Robert Scott, well known for his performance on the football field, has traded in his cleats and moved from the turf to the basketball court.

This spring, the Fontana, Calif., native is taking a break from the gridiron to fulfill what he believes to be his second calling. Starting as far back as the sixth grade, Scott participated in basketball, and pursued the game through high school.

The 6-foot-1 Vandal played for the A.B. Miller High School varsity, dedicating three of four years as a guard and a forward. Scott averaged 12 points, six assists and 10 rebounds per game.

Coming out of high school, Scott wanted the opportunity to play football and basketball at the college level and hoped for a scholarship in both.

With the luxury of a scholarship, football turned out to be his initial sport, but somewhere back in his mind, basketball would be something he wanted to try.

Things worked out his freshman year. Scott took some time and checked out the Idaho basketball scene and decided to stick strictly to football.

Another opportunity arose mid-season this year for Scott to take a shot at playing for the team. The Idaho basketball team was decimated by players leaving, suspensions and an injury to go-to man Reggie Rose — thus, Scott saw an ample opportunity to pursue his dream.

“Right from the start I could tell that this was a team that worked hard for everything, plus the strong camaraderie that surrounds this Idaho team makes it even stronger,” Scott said. “This is a young team, but the practice atmosphere is intense and there is a lot of discipline on the court.

“As far as the players on the team, I have felt accepted — despite the position that I am in learning about the offensive and defensive strategies. They have already learner them to some extent," Scott said. “I’ve only been here a week, and coach has thrown me in some games to give me a feel for it. But things are starting to come around as far as me getting used to the scheme of things. Right now it still feels like I am just running around the court.”

Being in the right place at the right time, as the old saying goes, has been the cornerstone of Scott’s chances to put on an Idaho basketball jersey.

Since the beginning of the 1996-97 season, the Vandals have had success from the bench, but the number of actual bodies on the bench has been few. Also, with the loss of Rose and the indefinite loss of Derrick Elliott, the Vandals needed some extra help.

In comes Robert Scott to Idaho basketball, who experienced his first few minutes of game time as a Vandal after just one day of practice. Still, in what he refers to as a “learning process,” Scott made use of his speed and quickness last Saturday against Boise State to be an effective defensive weapon.

“I was excited and happy when they threw me in the first game, and a little surprised. I never thought I would be playing ball again,” Scott said. “I was nervous, not wanting to mess up.”

Coming into the Idaho basketball program, Scott would like to be a positive influence on the team as a whole, especially in the area of leadership.

“I would really like to bring a leadership role and a positive work ethic with a specific purpose to the team. And, I’d like to become a large factor on defense, since at the present time, I am not a huge scorer,” Scott said.

“Right now I realize that I am learning. I am working with the coaches and the other players to become more comfortable on the court and get back to where I know I can play good basketball.”

The Vandals will be using the physical presence of Scott on the defensive end in hopes of grabbing a few more Vandal rebounds.

On the offensive side of things, Scott won’t be shooting from behind the three-point arch yet, but he will be a big factor in complimenting Jason Jackson and others on the offensive boards.

“He’s done better," said UI coach Kermit Davis.

“The Boise State game really wasn’t a good game for him (Scott) to play in because of their pressure and change defenses. He hadn’t really been with us long enough. His practice yesterday was good. His minutes will go up and we’ll play more of him on this road trip.”

On Thursday and Sunday night, Idaho will be on the road against New Mexico State and Northern Texas.

Quite possibly, Scott could get some quality playing time versus two formidable Big West Conference opponents.

“Right now my strengths are my quickness, willingness to work hard for rebounds and an active presence down low," Scott said.

"However, I feel that my effectiveness in scoring will come in time as I get used to the surroundings.”

UI seniors leave with awards

Kindra Meyer

Another chapter in Vandal football closed with the annual awards banquet held Friday evening.

Over a meal, drinks and plenty of socializing, the night lasted late into the wee hours, as tears and reminiscing for the graduating seniors. The banquet was held in the University Inn, filled to the brim with players, prospective Vandal coaches, staff, boosters, friends and family.

Following an hour of mingling, attendees sat to enjoy a meal as they listened to speeches given by coach Chris Tormey, other coaching staff and each of the graduating seniors. Memories lingered on the bonds they had created over the years, encouraging recruits to become Vandals, beating rival Boise State and giving many thanks to all who had supported them.

Awards were handed out to those players who had established themselves as leaders and provided the team with strength and spark on both sides of the ball.

Two youngsters were recognized for not only their potential, but ability to take a good pounding. Offensive Scout Player of the Year went to Nampa native Will Alderson and Defensive Scout Player of the Year was awarded to Rick DeMulling.

Freshman sensation Tom Pace was not there to be recognized for being Special Teams Player of the Year. Pace looks to have a bright future as a running back following this two-year career with the Vandals.

The Wayne Anderson Coach’s award was given to wide receiver David Griffin. The "little power man" from Fontana, Calif., will graduate with a degree in Criminal Justice.

Offensive player of the year went to senior quarterback Ryan Fien, who led the nation in offense throughout the season. The UCLA transfer is a history major.

Defensive Player of the Year was awarded to Jason Shelt, a senior who has played a strategic defensive role in years past at linebacker. The Kennewick, Wash., native is majoring in General Studies.

The John Fyler Most Valuable Player of the Year was received by defensive end Ryan Phillips. The award is won by defensive team members, not coaching staff, Phillips, a Resource Recreation major, also took home the Sack Plaque for the fourth year in a row.

Barty Mitchell also shared the Sack Plaque title with Phillips, as they each racked up nine during the 1996 season.

The Hec Edmundson Most Inspirational Player was given to senior Andy Gilroy for his heart and attitude. Gilroy, a finance major, was a three-year starter at tight end despite being plagued by injury.

The Wayne Walker Iron-Man award was unselfishly earned by Dan Zeamer. Deemed an unsung player by his coaches, Zeamer moved from defense his senior year to give the offensive line a much needed boost. Zeamer’s degree in accounting has already landed him a job.

Junior running back Joel Thomas received the Big Hill award, as many opponents can attest to. This 5-foot-6, 207-pounder has not only shown his ability to power through defenders, but has delivered crushing blows on special teams as well.

The Captain’s awards were given to co-captains, Phillips, Thomas, Gilroy and Zeamer. Big West Conference Awards were also given to All-Academic, All-Conference and Big West Players of the Week.

The banquet was not only a tribute to the years of hard work the seniors gave to the program, but made note that each is on track to graduate with their degree.

SOUTH...

"we have to have some road breakthroughs."

The Vandals fly south after losing a tough 62-57 Big West Conference loss to Boise State on Saturday.

On Thursday, Idaho will bring its eight-man squad to the Pan American Center, where New Mexico State has averaged 7,200 fans per game. Not only will the crowd be a huge factor, but the Aggies play tremendous basketball on both ends of the floor.

"You can just go on and on,” Davis said. "New Mexico State is one of the most difficult places to play in the country."

Indeed, the trip to Las Cruces is undeniably the most difficult road game the Vandals play this season.

"They were picked to win our league,” Davis said. "It's the most talented team in the Big West, including Pacific and everybody.”

This season, the Aggies beat Texas Tech 122-107 on a neutral floor and lost in overtime against archrival New Mexico on the Lobos home court — coincidentally, both opponents were ranked amongst the top 20 teams in the nation.

The Aggies are led by guard Antoine Hebbard who has 60 assists in 14 games.

Idaho's leading scorer, center Jackman (17.5 ppg) will match his skills against NMSU center Louis Richards, whose 18.9 points and 6.9 rebounds per game has Davis seeing him as a possible winner of the Big West Newcomer of the Year award.

With an upset win against NMSU, Idaho would break a four-game losing streak. In those four Big West Conference losses, the Vandals lost by just a combined margin of 39 points, which includes two losses by five points or less (Idaho State and Boise State).

"We're more of defensive breakdowns,” Davis said. "Our defensive breakdowns have been our most critical point. We got to come out with a little more toughness and hardness and execute offensively.”

Game time on Thursday is 6:30 p.m. On Saturday the Vandals play at 5 p.m. Both games can be heard on station KHTR (104.3 fm).
