If the contestant were the answer before being recognized, they are not allowed to answer the question.

12 members of faculty were present to serve as scorekeepers, streakeepers and judges. Photos from the UI Bookstore were given to the winning team and participants.

The team "Cali Tags," which consisted of members Brian Davis, Brian White, Victor Jacobsen, Keith White and Steve Javaskia received first place in the tournament.

Governor considering tobacco windfall for college buildings

Announced Presser

LEWISTON, Idaho - Gov. Dirk Kempthorne is considering earmarking interest on the state's tobacco settlement payments for state building construction and maintenance of those payments are put in a trust fund.

Kempthorne and health programs are two other possibilities interest beneficiaries being evaluated by Kempthorne should the trust fund approach be adopted.

Last spring, the governor said substance abuse and other health programs should be considered.

A trust is one of several ways of handling the payments. The state will begin receiving no later than June 1999 between $2.1 million and $3 million a year for the first 15 years. The state has allocated $1.5 billion and the money for new construction.

Under those categories, the state has been able to pass a a third of the minimum experts say must be spent to maintain existing buildings and it is financing only about 5 percent of new construction.

Kempthorne said a trust system would have more money than the Permanent Building Fund that could be used to handle the maintenance of state college buildings. He would not speculate on how much cash might be involved, saying only that "you would be amazed at how quickly it accumulates."

Because of the uncertainty surrounding the tobacco payments, Kempthorne and the Legislature are expected to consider the first two payments totaling $32 million in the Budget Review Account. The interest on it already goes to the building fund.

Recently, Microsoft announced its annual meeting upset despite judge's monopoly finding

Announced Presser

BELLEVUE, Wash. -- Microsoft Corp. "is willing to go a long ways" to address the government's concerns over its business practices, but can't accept limitations on its ability to develop software, said chairman Bill Gates told shareholders Wednesday.

Gates and other executives denied a standing-room-from the crowd of about 2,700 shareholders at the software company's annual meeting, less than a week after a federal judge declared the company a predatory monopolist.

"The ruling Friday by the District Court, Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson in Washington, D.C. is a first step toward a punishment for what he described as the Redmond-based company's abusive efforts to stifle competition."

The judge particularly singled out Microsoft's monopoly on the Internet Explorer Web browser with its Windows operating system for personal computers, along with using its market power to attempt to reach others with products like Windows 95, Office 95, Windows NT and Office NT.

Gates and other Microsoft officials spent much of the hour-long meeting discussing the company's legal troubles, but shareholders also had plenty of questions about the company's profits new 37 percent in the most recent quarter.

FUTURE OF LASER POINTERS IN PERIL

The Idaho Statesman

By Mark Johnson

University of Idaho Argonaut

In Moscow, Idaho, the University of Idaho is contemplating the banishment of laser pointers from its campus. This week, the university announced that it is considering a policy that would prohibit the use of laser pointers on campus grounds. The university said that it has received complaints about the use of laser pointers on campus, and that the policy change is being considered in response to those complaints.

The university said that it is not yet clear what the final policy will look like, but that it is considering a range of options. One possibility is that the university would ban the use of laser pointers altogether, while another possibility is that the university would limit the use of laser pointers to certain areas of the campus.

The university said that it is also considering the possibility of imposing fines or other penalties on students who violate the policy. The university said that it would be willing to work with students and other members of the campus community to find a solution that would be fair to both the university and the students.

The university said that it would be seeking input from students, faculty, and staff as it considers the policy change. The university said that it will be holding a series of meetings and open forums to discuss the issue, and that it will be accepting feedback from students, faculty, and staff.

Human Rights not just the United States’ problem

The Washington Post on Microsoft: "It is impossible to imagine how the findings of just done handed down ... by U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson in a suit by Microsoft for breach of contract in a software sales dispute. The judge’s ruling seems to us, in the main, a reasonable read of the contract ... have sometimes been a source of concern to Microsoft, indeed, where the record of the case is aptly summarized, it is hard to arrive at any conclusion that Microsoft’s dominant position is a threat to the health of competition in the software industry." Judge Jackson’s opinion should send a strong message to the company that it is not invulnerable to challenge, even in this litigation. The abiding question whether Microsoft is guilty of substantial deviation from fair competition. In light of the strength of Judge Jackson’s finding, it is likely that the only course left open to the company’s remaining concerns is a threat to the market, so that it would be wise to end that path and find another way to address the problems marketed products have failed..."

Hollywood insiders say studio influence diminishes movie quality

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. — A studio is taking a back seat to business in Hollywood, leading to lower quality films by studios concerned more with profit than with artistic, according to a movie industry panel.

"What the people that script are the studio heads, and more and more, those studio heads are being guided by the marketing departments," said John Frankenberg, the film's writer-director.

Nude dancing takes center stage at Supreme Court

WASHINGTON — In a courtroom session as morose and bloody as the Supreme Court turned the February trial of the speech law that was 1996 as a panel pondered what constitutional protections close nude dancing.

"Nude entertainment has become a short-lived staple of the American scene. . . . 3,000 adult clubs nationwide," lawyer John Bowers pointed out at the trial a public-interest ordinance in Ga. Pa., that enjoined women who work as barroom dancers to wear at least pasties and a G-string.

Some justices voiced doubts. Justice Stephen G. Breyer said that some form of nude dancing "has to be in the mix with any kind of group, in a house. You're intending to get a reaction, not to express something," the nation's highest court ruled in 1991 that nude dancing is a form of expression within the First Amendment's "extraordinary interest" and entitled to protection from government censorship. But that 1991 decision also allowed Indiana to ban bare-chested style dancing under a state law generally prohibiting public nudity. Warten, representing the owner of a now-closed bar that featured nude dancers, argued that the 1994 law was a form of specific and not public nudity. That makes a constitutional difference, he said.

"It's only concern ... was the notion of adult entertainment," Warten \"We're unsustainably careful regarding their contented motives.\"
