A definite alternative

"Antidepressives in medicine have found a way into the bedrooms of America. Non-prescription alternatives such as herbal medicine, massage, acupunture and yoga have become more popular than ever. Massage therapy is one of the most popular physical treatments in the world today. It is used to improve circulation of the blood, strengthen and relax body tissue or relieve stress. Some massage techniques are even gain steam toward treating specific problems, such as asthma or poor circulation in the skin..."

There is a good chance that you may become a user of herbal medications, as many consumers prefer herbal medicines to synthetic ones because of the common belief that herbal supplements have no side effects. While herbs may have fewer side effects than common medications, those who use them are warned that anything taken in excess will inevitably produce side effects of its own.

Aromatherapy is based on the belief that aromas can create a state of emotional and psychological balance in a person. Essential oils, made from one or more herbs, are used to create strong, soothing smells. These oils also contain properties similar to those found in people, which is why many herbalists say that the human psyche responds to them.

The University of Idaho college of pharmacy student, Andy R. Uebelher, 22, said he was involved in Egypt over six thousand years ago in that time these oils have been used in many ways. Massage oils often heal a pain or simply as a relaxing smeal. The process of making these oils is long and costly, so a small bottle can be as much as eighty dollars. In Mexico, essential oils are used in many ways and the Moscow Coop is an excellent source for many flavors.

The Yoga Center in Moscow offers Hatha Yoga, Viniyasa, Yoga and Eclectic Dance are also available. Yoga is taught by yoga master Ramanager hangar at the temporary Memorial Yoga Institute, is one of many classes. It involves the use of props such as wooden...

was a big loss to the coaching staff, Turpin replied, "Gary is a big loss.
And indeed it must be viewed

Turpin's record as a coach is 3-1 and turn-around from his years as a player.

Tough the rivalry between UI and BSU still poses just as much delay of Vandal-Rivalry decades).

Vandals are at a loss to that point drawn.
Since 1982, the University of Idaho

Arguably, competition from Boise State spurred the Vandals in development and maintain a quality

Boise State, Vandals fans would not have been able to eat Thanksgiving years with a smile on their faces that was reflected on the satisfaction of knowing once again what

Parking tips for University of Idaho during the fall recess

By Marc O’Driscoll
UI Parking Committee Chair
Full recess begins at 5:00 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 13 and ends at 7:00 a.m. on Monday, Nov. 29. Here are some tips on parking during the days of that workweek, November 22-26. They may help those who will be here find more convenient parking places and to avoid getting parking tickets.

Parking permits will NOT be required at regularly parked spots in Blue and Silver parking lots. However, appropriately colored parking permits will be required at regularly parked spots in Gold and Fred parking lots between the hours of 7:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. for appropriate color-coded permit (Green or Purple) is required 24 hours a day, every day. Parking permits are regardless of the type of lot they are in between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. for appropriately color-coded permit (Green or Purple).

The UI Parking and Information Office, 406-384-2146, will be open 7 days a week but will close 2 hours before the earliest parking lot closes on Monday through Wednesday. That office will be closed Thursday and Friday.

For more information, call the Office at 406-384-2146.

Sexual motive explored in slaying of 9-year-old girl

By Dan Brandenberg
Associated Press

SPOKANE, Wash. — With the month-long search for a missing 9-year-old girl over and her father in custody in her dousing, investigators are now trying to determine a motive.

The little girl vanished Oct. 12 after her parents dropped her off at a Stayton Park home, where she lived with her grandmother. The girl’s boyfriend, 33-year-old Michael Jackson, has not been a suspect in the case. The girlfriend, 33-year-old Michael Jackson, has not been a suspect in the case. She declined to speculate on a motive, but an affidavit of probable cause filed in court Tuesday suggested that abuse may have played a role. Blood stains and public hair similar to Brad Jackson’s were found on her daughter’s head, according to court documents.

"There was the implication of possible sexual issues," Silver said. "We will speculate that that direction."

Jackson immediately lost his job after Jackson’s death. Former work colleagues said Jackson had no record of violence and was known for his helpfulness to others. Jackson is a self-described "true-blue virgin." When his work colleagues were interviewed, some said he didn’t have violent tendencies. Jackson was not known for violent tendencies.

"We are going to have to get a overwhelming amount of information that we have to go through and catalog," Silver said.

The Chinese embassy was bombarded on May 7, by NATO military operations representing the US and NATO's rapid switch to damage control mode, and claimed that they had been ambushed. They blamed the US for missed the opportunity on that crucial moment that the US and NATO had missed their chance. The US media giants refuse to run the story. The Associated Press, independent editor of The New York Times, said the report was not "well-timed" story, by standards. I discovered that the US media giants refuse to run the story. It is rare that none of the sources were named, but this is standard in political reporting. It would be ridiculous to imagine that military officers would risk their careers in a mission held by killing their names to a news agency. Perhaps the bombing was accidental. I contend that the US media giants refuse to do some investigative reporting, to learn as much as possible. The US media giants refuse to run the story to avoid further damage in the US. Today, probably the most shocking newspaper in existence, took just five days to casually and privately discussed a story that the Guardian and Pakistan media continue to investigate. This foppish response comes even in light of significant strikes on other countries in the Middle East. In July, the CIA admitted that it developed only one of 900 potential targets, the Chinese embassy. The London Daily Telegraph reported in June that the precision-guided missiles, hit only the intelligence gathering, version of the embassy. German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder pledged to pursue the investigation. An official at the National Imagery and Mapping Agency said the outdated map story was "denied in aid of".

Think about it. One day the Pentagon wants us to believe they can do anything with a missile. The next day they say they are using three-year-old maps. Don't buy it. But the means do exist, and the emphasis is a "buy.">

In America, it is the only plan to prevent any country, including our own, from being modernized. I think we could well have prevented this. What is more sensible? Huge military complexes are costing us billions and you can be sure that the bombs are going to the wrong place.

In a way, the US and UK military complexes are costing us billions. We are now spending a war, and we are not going to take this lightly.

The US military complexes are the sleeping dogs of the sun. They have been the sleeping dogs of the sun for many years. They are the sleeping dogs of the sun. They also are the sleeping dogs of the sun.

I say there is an opportunity to change the world. I say there is an opportunity to change the world.

I am very excited about the US military complexes. They have been the sleeping dogs of the sun for many years. They are the sleeping dogs of the sun. They also are the sleeping dogs of the sun.

Egg donation causes no real emotional trauma

To the Editor:

I would like to address the article written by Brenda Percy entitled “Women should consider carefully before selling eggs.”

First of all, if a woman starts menstruating at 11 and stops around age 55 she has over 300 eggs. Then they go down—down the drain and into the world. Should we be measuring their eggs? Women are equipped with more eggs than they could ever use. This is a fact, remember back to health class.

The article states the idea that donating eggs could make you feel bad. How can I mean, you don’t exactly bond with your eggs. I think if we were talking about adoption they might have another story. Adoption means you carry a child full term, and you live with it inside you for nine months. You feel the baby kick and move. You feel the baby born out of the placenta planted itself in the uterine lining. It can have emotional responses based on you. Eggs don’t do this. You never saw a bond with them. I mean you could wonder, but really. Something you haven’t addressed and I feel is the bigger issue is the health risk. In order to donate eggs you have to give yourself hormone injections. Those injections allow you to finish off more than one egg at a time. Normally an egg goes through a cycle during the month where they become “ready” to leave the story. Any time that hormone treatments are used there is a health risk, and most likely not something immediate — any one who uses the shot should look into this. I think a woman needs to think more of the health risk, rather than the minimal emotional risk.

I think it could be satisfying to know I’ve helped an otherwise childless couple. The woman receiving the eggs would be able to bond with the child in a way adoptive mothers do not. Also, egg donation pays pretty well, even if you’re not a supermodel. I think you’ve brought up two separate issues, also. Deciding what you want your baby to look like doesn’t always mean buying eggs. There is a lot of work in genetics in order to be able to engineer the perfect baby. In closing, don’t make donating eggs sound like it brings on the same emotional baggage that abortion does. You’re talking about a whole different issue. Maybe you should look into the health risks involved with any kind of hormonal treatment, especially birth control. Think about the fact that women take these synthetic hormone treatments at their own health risk while there is no birth control like this for a man. Get a little more incisive and informative rather than introducing such broad issues to think about.

Don’t glorify supermodel offspring, beauty is within

To the Editor:

I usually appreciate what the argonaut has to say about campus issues as well as the issues within the US and around the world, however your article “Women should consider carefully before selling eggs” in the November 16, 1999 issue was quite disturbing.

At one point the author refers to using the eggs to create “beautiful and spirited people” in our world in direct reference with supermodels selling their eggs. I respect the opinion of the author, however I do not think that it is right to glorify the offspring of supermodels. There is nothing that says that a child born to “ugly” parents couldn’t be just as beautiful and talented. I think that maybe your concept of beauty needs to be redefined if you only consider it skin deep. I also would question the reference of the article to the US of a campus. If most women polled were appalled by the idea, and it doesn’t seem to be an issue on this campus, then why not write about something pertaining to the women of this campus rather than a celebrity. I am sure that the article was written with good intentions, however you may want to be a little more careful when generalizing different groups of people. As a US student who is “beautiful and talented” on the inside.

Don’t believe preachers about Bible’s contents

To the Editor:

National Bible Week begins on Sunday, Nov. 21st, so it is time to dust off the national best seller and actually read it. There are a few basic facts to begin with. The Bible does not claim to be “The Word of God.”

• Nobody, whether Jewish, Catholic, Orthodox, or Protestant, can agree on how to interpret the Bible. Nobody’s Bible tells us this, either.

• The Bible is not entirely reliable as a history book. It is worse than useless as a science text.

• There are hundreds of errors and contradictions throughout the Bible.

• The walking and talking slave who advised nine to eat the forbidden fruit that an apple was not Satan but a very crazy animal that God had just made.

• Nowadays in the Bible there is an absurd number of lists of the so-called Ten Commandments.

• In the entire Hebrew Bible, no one died and went to heaven to be with God.

• The term "Old Testament" is a propagandist name applied by Christians to the Hebrew Bible. The Greek books in Christian Bibles are then called the "New Testament." Don’t rely on preachers or Bible-thumpers to tell you what the Bible says. Read the Bible carefully and discover the truth for yourself.

Broncos may be tough to buck

The University of Idaho has a tough task to accomplish this Saturday when they take on arch-rival Boise State in a fight for the Big West championship. BSU took the lead in the battle of elimination last year before succumbing in overtime at Broncos Stadium. The Broncos venture to the Palouse in search of a payback victory in what should be a very hostile Martin Stadium crowd.

Boise State and its high power offense come to the Palouse with a four game winning streak. Martin of the Vandals' defense is formidable. Boise features Endreka Choctaw, who leads the West in both tackle-averting and sacks. Second in the conference on both lists is Idaho's defensive tackle Mike Thompson. Idaho's defense has proven vulnerable lately, but has been strong toward the end of the last five games.

The burden of Idaho's points production lies directly on the shoulders of quarterback John Welsh. Welsh played well in his return as the starting quarterback against Montana. Despite the broken leg he suffered early in the season, Welsh has shown good mobility in the last few games, avoiding tackles and scrambling for positive yardage. Welsh will be looking to spread the ball around as he did against Montana, connecting with seven receivers. Among his targets are wide receivers Ross Martin and Jeff Rows, running backs Davis, and tight end Thousand. Martin leads the Vandals with 415 yards in receptions while Thousand leads the team in catches with 31.

Completing the balanced Idaho attack are running backs Michael Moody, and Former Thomas Moody, and Former have combined for 1330 yards this season. Moody leads the Vandals in rushing with 842 yards and 8 touchdowns. Moody has the highest average yards per carry at 7.8 and 10 touchdowns. Pudge edges Pedro in AL MVP upset

NEW YORK — Texas catcher Ivan Rodriguez won the American League's Most Valuable Player award in an upset Thursday, even though Boston pitcher Pedro Martinez had more Triple Crown votes. Rodriguez, who hit .322 with 35 home runs and 113 RBIs, finished with seven first-place votes and 232 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

"That's the dream of every player, to get this award," Rodriguez said. Martinez, who won the AL Cy Young Award in his first full season, went 23-12 with 1.90 ERA and 243 strikeouts. He had eight first-place votes and 233 points.

"It's fine. It's fine. I'm not going to cry about it. I would have been a great honor," Martinez said. "I got the Cy Young. That's good enough."

COLLAPSE: Texas A&M students killed in log accident

- Continued from A1

No warning, 'just snapped'

"At about 2:30 a.m. the center pole which holds up the binnacle collapsed," said Texas A&M University spokesman Jonathan Scott. He said about 50 students were on top of the log at the time it fell.

Thousands of logs are piled high to build the annual bonfire, which was not to be set abeit until Thanksgiving night.

Students were piloting logs on the structure when it collapsed, witnesses said.

Jenny Connally, a student who was on the stack, said it just fell. She said there was no warning. "It just snapped," she said.

The bonfire, which draws tens of thousands of spectators, is a tradition dating back to 1909. The event aims to get students pumped up for the big football game against rival Texas.

The structure is built over the course of several weeks with massive stacks of large logs put in place by cranes, tractors and crews of students.

The stack of logs would have toppled 65 feet when completed at the time of the collapse today, it was perhaps two-thirds of that, or 40 feet tall.

The University president said the students were just turned loose on the project.

"They're a highly structured training program monitored by our safety people, there's considerable over-shift by professionals. All the heavy equipment is operated by licensed professionals, they are not students, so we think our safety program is pretty good," Bowen said.

The head of the school said structural experts were on site monitoring the dis-assembling of the logs in an attempt to understand what caused the sudden and catastrophic acci-

"Right now, we simply are penultimate," said Bowen. "Frankly, we are also growing and that is our principle preoccupation at this time."

Rescue Workers remove a body from the bonfire site.

You don't have to be a woman or an artist to want more female art

By Dave Zirin
University of Idaho Argonaut

A handful of women gathered to share their stories in the Idaho Falls Center for the Arts on Friday evening as a part of the national Women’s Caucus for Art. One woman’s story was on the cover of a major women’s magazine, while another’s was in the visiting headlining artist. Women’s Caucus for Art (WCA) director, Ann H. Shih, and president, Glenda C. Miller, held a meeting to discuss the visibility and the work for women in the art community. Founded in 1972, the organization has self-determination and multi-cultural awareness as its goals, and promotes a forum for women artists.

Local, the Idaho chapter welcomes anyone, male or female, interested in sharing women’s art. Nancy Hathaway, one of the chapter coordinators, believed that Monday’s meeting was part of the scene in getting things going again among the women of the arts. Hathaway also believes that WCA is not as active in the past years, although the chapter did organize a traveling exhibit of local female artists.

The meeting lasted about an hour, with a video of Utah artist, Liz White, who is also a professor of fine arts at Utah State University. It was an informative meeting to organize a multi-media exhibit of women’s art in the upcoming year.

The meeting also included a video of the chapter’s next meeting, scheduled for Monday Dec. 13 at 7 p.m. In the Pichard Hall, those planning to attend are invited to bring their stories and still photos or slides of their work to introduce themselves and talk about their interests.

Art Professor Sally Knechtel said that she wanted to join WCA because it provides an opportunity for her to meet women artists outside the university.

The emergence of the women’s art movement in the 1970s helped WCA founders recognize the importance of having a network, a way for women around the country, often working in isolation within their individual communities, could share ideas with one another. The Caucus was founded to create more opportunities for women artists through the arts, exhibit, document works and exchange ideas, information, and connections.

Mary E. Holland proves the power of women through painting.

WCA national office is located in New York City, while archives are housed at Ruggles University in New Jersey. The works of current Caucus members are shown in galleries throughout the country.

Tickets are available for the National Support for the Endowment for the Arts as well as lobbying against censorship. WCA holds national conferences in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and a few small southern cities. For more information about the national WCA, visit http://www.wcaps.org.

HBO pays tribute to ‘Citizen Kane’

Associated Press

LONDON — Sieve Brown, a relative unknown, played the title role in a 24-hour production of the classic 1941 film, "Citizen Kane," for this year's annual film festival in the United States. According to his wife, "I knew I was the best film noir "Kane." But even more amazing was the fact that the festival took place in the United States in this behalf behind-the-scenes account of the most celebrated of all Hollywood films. "I told them that I was the way I wanted to do," director Ben Ross says. His choice has paid off handsomely, not least considering that the modest budget of a 90-minute TV film has the look of a major studio feature.

The $12 million venture, from a script by playwrights Lion and Schaefer and a familiar name in the field, William Randolph Hearst, the inspiration for "Citizen Kane." Kane began with the filming of the 1941 film, "Citizen Kane," which was the production number given it by the studio.

Dominating a small supporting line-up are James Cagney, as the madcap tycoon, and Summer, as a media mogul. Randolph Hearst, the inspiration for "Citizen Kane," who was ran by the Hearst newspaper empire.

"That's what we have to pay," Kane says.

"Citizen Kane," however, has been a series of popular adaptations in which even the relatively gray Griffiths is known for his part in "Citizen Kane," is known for his part in "Citizen Kane," is a director's dream. "That's where we put our money," Kane says.

God's dream on "Citizen Kane," says co-producer Diane Murray.

And so a trendy Seho restaurant named "Citizen Kane" opened in the heart of the district with a menu that includes "Citizen Kane." The restaurant is located at the corner of West Broadway, the area that was a part of the movie's location.

"Citizen Kane," located at the corner of West Broadway, is the latest in a long line of "Citizen Kane." The restaurant is located at the corner of West Broadway, the area that was a part of the movie's location.
