Supreme Court Justice Scalia to speak Thursday by Lindsay Redifer

Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia will speak at the Student Union Ballroom at 6:30 p.m. Thursday. Scalia, the second Supreme Court justice to visit University of Idaho in the last three years will speak on constitutional interpretation.

Scalia comes to UI through the Sherman J. Flescher Memorial Program. The program is the largest annual endowment given to UI, totaling approximately $1 million a year in support of the Sherman J. Flescher Chair in Idaho State Supreme Court History.

Dawn Day, Chancellor, the first woman to serve on the Supreme Court, visited UI in February of 2008.

Scalia’s lecture is entitled “Constitutional Interpretation” and will address the view that the judicial interpretation of law should be guided by the original understanding of those who wrote the text of law.

LECTURE

Scalia’s address begins at 6:30 p.m. Thursday in the Student Union Ballroom. Scalia will also publish the book “A Matter of Interpretation” through the Princeton University Press.

By Jennifer Davenport and Carrie Loudy

Scalia will no longer support official activities with festivities if alcohol is involved, according to a policy adopted by the court.

The NPC, that decided making holy for 30 national universities, passed the resolution in 1988 on索尼 Meeting. The resolution had to be passed by 80% of votes. Because women will no longer attend fraternity parties, professors will lead them to the Nexus, and students may drive to and from parties.

“Stay away from the drinking and drugs,” said Audi Senator Denny Byrd, a sophomore and member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

The House of Delegates of Beta Chi Fraternity disagrees. They have decided that Kappa Alpha is better, and that things they do are not a lack of individual responsibility.

Citizens confront ‘the possibility of the end’ of our northern neighbor

BY STEVEN PEARLSTEIN
THE WASHINGTON POST

TORONTO — On a bright, sunny day last week, before thousands were gathered in Canada’s most infamous city, the University of Toronto, 200 students, faculty, and staff members gathered to protest the government’s planned closure of the university’s historic building, the Old Arts Building, which was built in 1879.

The protest was organized by the University of Toronto Students’ Union (UTSU), which is the official student union for the University of Toronto. The UTSU has been at the forefront of the fight against the closure for several years, and the protest last week was a significant show of solidarity.

The Old Arts Building is a historic and significant building on the University of Toronto campus. It was built in 1879 and has been used as a lecture hall, a classroom, and a dormitory. It has been a symbol of the university’s history and culture for over a century.

The closure of the Old Arts Building has been met with widespread opposition from students, faculty, and staff members. The closure is part of a larger plan to modernize the university’s facilities, but many people believe that the closure of the Old Arts Building is a step too far.

The protest last week was a chance for the university community to come together and demand that the closure be reversed. The event was attended by hundreds of people, who chanted and marched around the campus, demanding that the closure be stopped.

The protest was a significant moment for the University of Toronto, and it was clear that the university community is united in its opposition to the closure of the Old Arts Building.
Dear Editor:

I was touched by Breonna Green's essay in the Monday, Jan. 27 issue, which is about the perils of growing up in a foreign land. Many students can relate to the feeling of not belonging, and your office has provided a platform for students to share their experiences.

Despite having been born and raised in the United States, I sometimes feel like a foreigner in my own country. The cultural expectations and social norms can be challenging to navigate, especially when they differ from what I am accustomed to. However, I believe that it is important to embrace these differences and learn from them.

Breonna's essay is a powerful reminder of the importance of compassion and empathy. I hope that more students will feel encouraged to share their stories and experiences, as it can help create a more inclusive and understanding community.

Sincerely,

Hottois appointment doesn’t add up

By JULIEN PEZIE

The native of Switzerland originally trained in graphic design rather than business management, as the appointment of Louise Hottois as president of the University of Idaho is an appointment that needs closer examination.

Hottois is no stranger to controversy. She has a long history of being involved in the business world, and her appointment as president has raised questions about the university’s decision-making process.

Despite the explanations of this “arrangement,” I think it is important to scratch the surface and ask questions. How do we evaluate this situation? How do we ensure that the university is making the best decision for its students and employees?

One of the biggest issues with the appointment is the lack of transparency. The university has not provided sufficient information about Hottois’s qualifications or the process by which she was selected.

Furthermore, the appointment appears to conflict with the university’s values of excellence, innovation, and equity. Hottois’s background in business management may not align with these values, and her appointment could be seen as a deviation from the university’s mission.

Despite these concerns, I believe that it is important to support the university in its efforts to improve and grow. However, it is also important to hold the university accountable for its decisions and to ensure that the interests of students, faculty, and staff are being considered.

I urge the university to provide more information about Hottois and the decision-making process, and to ensure that the appointment aligns with the university’s values and goals.

Sincerely,

Dorm room decor demonstrates creativity at its best

BY CHRISTINE V~NESWIE

Dances of cardboard boxes, cautious trips to Wallmart and empty gas tanks are usually what students see with after moving back to the University of Washington and just a few more weeks of summer ahead. Students are more into approaching off campus. Some join societies or fraternities and many take up residence in the dorm rooms. For a few of these students, it's melhorating their living space in the biggest way.

“A place for everything and everything in its place. That's my motto for living in such a small area,” said Luke Belcher. "It's a good way to keep the space in order.”

Back in Seattle's area the ceiling is covered with poster portraits received from Band Theater at various movie rental stores. The bottom part of his look is printing, and in the place is an old record player covered with a comfort.

“Everything I sacrifice in size, I gain in accuracy, so it works out just fine for me,” said Luke Belcher. Students usually don't get up the opportunity to see what their room's look like before moving in. Special handmade blankets lay snugly on their beds, and a picture of their grandmother is arranged in a higher shelf. "I like to mix ideas. I always have a little bit of both in my room," said Luke Belcher. "It's really important in my life."

Students who are interested in creating a personal touch are advised to get in touch with Axis Allstar. "Above all, I'm painting a general and accurate representation of the space around the bricks. And over here, I have made a little bit different of the wall. I know I will paint a picture of the brick walls, eventually. I will have a wall," said Luke Belcher.

Space availability make dorm room decorating difficult, but some students find unique ways to decrease.
