WASHINGTON — The Red Hot Mamas from Coeur d'Alene, participated in the inaugural parade Saturday.

Hot Mamas light GW's fire

With the president-elect in the procession of象征化 and the parade ready to go, the Red Hot Mamas gave the Inaugural Parade a unique flair Saturday and showed the nation a side of Idaho few really see.

The Mamas were one of the more than 500 bands, floats, and other groups, including military units, that participated in the parade, which is a long-standing tradition in America.

The Mamas wear colorful aprons, Carmen Miranda style hats, goofy makeup, and dance while pushing shopping carts down parade routes.

"We were unique enough that it pushed everybody's buttons," said Mary Scobin, one of the Mamas. "People would say, 'Wow, what is that?'"

The Mamas started as a group of homemakers who wanted to participate in the parade. They were inspired by the Seattle Women's March and the Women's Rights Movement.

The Mamas are led by their leader, Melissa Johnson, who is also one of the founding members.

"I'm proud to be a part of this," said Johnson. "We're not just here to show our support, we're here to show our power and strength as women."

The Mamas' float included a yellow school bus with a sign that said "Women's Rights Are Human Rights." They also wore red hats with white stars on them.

The Mamas say they want to show that women can be funny and powerful.

"People might not expect this," said Scobin. "But we're here to show that we're not just women, we're powerful."
Students map out new campus transit system

BY LORRAINE CENTLIER
ASSOCIATE DEAN OF STUDENTS

A team of six University of Idaho students and a class of engineering students have worked out a way to make getting around campus easier.

As part of an internship under the Department of Finance and Administration, the students worked to tackle the problem of how to create a transit system that could transport students, staff and faculty from one parking lot to another.

Dan Schieffer, director of UI Auxiliary Services, sees this transit option as a useful one after looking at the research the students had conducted.

The problem tends to relate to the location of the parking lots. There are many people who wish to park at the front door of their building, but there are spaces at the front door. Some people on campus feel the time it takes to walk from parking lot to their buildings is shorter than the time it takes to get around campus.

"Transportation is a good thing. Not so much keeping people in their cars, but helping people to travel around campus," Schieffer said.

The team presented two options. One was to put in a bus to haul people around campus. The other was a bike-sharing option. Schieffer thought this was a more useful option for the students.

"I think it's a more useful thing than the bus to travel around campus," Schieffer said.

AWoman bet?
UI professor bets $500 million on a 150-year-old person

Steven Austad thinks he is going to win a bet.

And, he thinks that if everything goes well, his daughters will receive the $500 million proceeds of that bet — when they are 500 years old.

"Incredibly," Austad said. "When this is over, there will be a 500-year-old woman and 500-year-old man."

And, if the world ends in the next 500 years, he will be the first to die, he said.

Austad is a professor of biology and codirector of the Idaho Life Span Study, a project at the University of Idaho. The study is one of the only projects in the world that is looking at humans aging past their 100th birthday.

"We are looking at twins and looking at people who are 100 or older," Austad said.

The study began 20 years ago, when Dr. Austin, a second-year graduate student, bought a bet with his professor. Their professor, Dr. Hultman, said, "Winners bet, losers buy."

"So, I am willing to give it a shot," Austad said.

"I think the idea is to buy a bet and then lose against my professor," he said.

Austad said that if he wins, his daughters, 9 and 11 years old now, and other people, will live to be 500 years old and much longer, he said.

"I think it is a good thing, not so much keeping people in their cars, but helping people to travel around campus," Schieffer said.

Thoughts on the transfer of power

I am struck by the fact that in the past 10 years we have seen a transfer of power at all levels, from local to national. This is a remarkable achievement and I believe it has been influenced by several factors. One of the most important is the growth of the internet, which has allowed people to connect and organize in ways that were not possible before. Another factor is the rise of social media, which has given people a platform to express their views and mobilize support. Finally, I believe that the transfer of power has been facilitated by the ongoing national debate about the role of the government in our lives. This debate has encouraged people to think critically about the choices we make and the direction we are headed. In conclusion, I believe that the transfer of power has been a positive development and I am optimistic about the future. John Adams, U.S. President, 1791

Writers Need a Quarterly Meeting

Dear Editor,

Your editorial on the Argonaut's quarterly meetings on Jan. 17, 2023 was enlightening. As a student at Notre Dame, I have noticed a pattern of silence on controversial topics. I think it would be beneficial for us to have a quarterly meeting where we can discuss and address potential conflicts.

With this in mind, I propose a format where we could either have a monthly meeting or another platform where students can come together to discuss and learn about the experience of marginalized groups.

I believe that these meetings would help us foster a more inclusive and open-minded environment on campus.

Sincerely,

MOTHER GORE

Chad drove to UI from Florida in search of his father, a Vietnam veteran. His plane was out late, and he arrived at the airport in time to see him off. Chad was looking for a chance to talk to his father, but he was too distracted by his own thoughts. He had been thinking about the war, and how his father had been drafted into the army.

Chad was born in 1965, the same year his father was drafted into the army.

And for two on the boat

OUROVERVIEW

Chad greeted his father with a hug, and they sat down to talk. It was a strange scene, and Chad felt like he was divided between two worlds. He had grown up in a small town, and now he was in a big city. It was like he was torn between two worlds, and he didn't know which one to choose.

Chad's father told him about his experiences in the war, and how he had been drafted into the army. Chad had never been to a war, but he knew that it was a difficult time for his father. He asked him about the things that his father had done, and how he had coped with the stress.

Gaslighting, the new drug war.

Gaslighting is a disorienting experience. The basic strategy of Gaslighting is to distort the truth and alter the history so that the person being Gaslighted is left confused and unable to trust their own memories or experiences. In the context of the drug war, Gaslighting is used to distort the facts and spin a false narrative that serves the interests of those in power.

Bassist quits Metallica after 14 years

By CRISP HUMAN

James Newstead, long bassist for the band Metallica, has quit the band. Newstead said that he was one of the busiest bassists in the world, and that the sudden change in personal and professional reasons, and the physical demands that I have faced and dealt with over the years while playing the music that I love, have made it necessary for me to leave the band, Newstead said in a statement prepared by the band. "I am sorry to the fans and the other members of the band who have had to bear the impact that this decision will have on the band." Newstead played with the band from 1987 until 1990, after the death of founding bassist Cliff Burton. Newstead also played on the band's self-titled album, "Ride the Lightning," "Master of Puppets," "...And Justice for All," "Metallica," "Load," "Garage Inc." and "Stash." Newstead is the bassist on Metallica's most recent studio albums, "Black Album" and "Stash." He is a member of numerous bands, playing in various projects around the world.

Due to private and personal reasons...

Bassist of the band Metallica, James Hetfield, said the decision to fire bassist Cliff Burton after the death of founding bassist Cliff Burton was necessary in order to continue the band's growth and success. "At this time, I felt that the band needed to take a step back and reassess its direction," Hetfield said in a statement prepared by the band. "We had to make a difficult decision, but it was necessary to continue the band's growth and success." Hetfield, along with lead vocalist and guitarist James Hetfield, formed the band in 1981 in Los Angeles, California. "I am proud of the direction we have taken and where we are headed," Hetfield said. "We have a strong foundation and a bright future ahead of us." The band released its first studio album, "Metallica," in 1983, followed by "Ride the Lightning" and "Master of Puppets" in 1986. The band's self-titled album, "Black Album," was released in 1991 and remains one of the best-selling albums of all time. "We have overcome many obstacles and have come out the other side stronger," Hetfield said. "We will continue to be the band we are and continue to make music that matters."
