Petitions in hand

Student committee readies challenge

By MARSHALL HALL
of the Argonaut staff

With 485 "Paid Under Protest" petitions in hand and another 500 still being counted, the Committee for Student Rights is soon to confront the University of Idaho in their challenge against what they believe to be an illegal fee structure.

The CSR is basing much of its case on a section of the U of I charter which states, "No student who shall have been a resident of the territory for one year, next preceding his admission shall be required to pay any fees for tuition in the University, excepting in a professional department and for extra studies. The regents may prescribe rates of tuition for any pupil in a professional department, or who shall not have been a resident as aforesaid, and for teaching extra studies."

In a meeting of the CSR Monday night the group had not decided what steps would be used in negotiation with the University, but said that would have to be worked out. "We all agree that the fee structure is wrong, but we disagree as to what will be done next," said Committee president Mark Falconer.

The main points the committee is examining is the legality of the tuition charged to in-state students and a more specific definition of what constitutes a professional department.

The CSR doesn't know if the case will go to court, and as yet they felt it was too far away to be seen. "If it does go to court it's because of the University, not because of us," said CSR coordinator John Orwick.

According to the charter, the University can charge tuition for professional departments, but the CSR doesn't feel an undergraduate degree falls into this category.

However, Financial Vice President Sherman Carter said the term "professional departments" have never been defined. "They could be defined as including every department in the University, except possibly in some of the college of letters and science," stated Carter.

The University administration was questioned as to whether they felt the tuition case would go to court, and they gave the impression the final result would be litigation. Jon Warren, University attorney, was unwilling to discuss the case at this time. "The ethics of it prevent me from discussing it at this time, but I'm sure it will be litigation," Warren said.

The CSR is hopeful that the University is willing to negotiate, but this remains to be seen according to Orwick, who labels the administration's position as "self-righteous intrepidity." (Note: according to Funk & Wagnalls Standard Desk Dictionary intrepidity means refusing to compromise or come to terms, esp. in politics.)

Another one of the main points involved in a challenge is whether the term tuition be defined as, and especially in relation to the University of Idaho. Carter felt that the definition of tuition in relation to Idaho was "the cost of instruction and payment of faculty salaries, and items related to that."

The U of I vice president cited state legislation of the 1930's as stated in the "Book of Statutes and Decisions of the U of I," as giving the regents the authority to levy fees, rent, and other charges to students and faculty members for labs, hospital, admission and athletic purposes.

Pointing out that the University charter itself states that no tuition would be required by in-state students, the question arises as to why this section has remained in the charter for so long without amendment. "That goes back to the constitution, and it hasn't ever been altered," said Carter.

The operating budget of the University of Idaho includes over $1 million of fees and tuition provided by the students. Carter said he couldn't see how the state could pick up the revenue bonds, if the student fees were lost.

If litigation proceeds, Carter predicts increases increases in the student fees at an increased rate. "The net effect will be an increasing number of legislators realizing that a protest against tuition is under way, and that action to correct it will promptly result, and this will lead to increased fees, faster than would otherwise be the case," stated Carter.

An ad hoc committee conducting a review of student service programs at the University of Idaho will receive an extension in the time allotted to conduct its investigation, amid complaints from one student member about the reason the review was started and the tactics employed by the committee chairman.

The committee, which was appointed last semester to review Student Advisory Services, University Housing, Food Services, Student Union Building Operations, and University Health Services will report to Faculty Council sometime this semester, according to committee Chairman Roger Wallins. The council, which originally appointed the committee, has requested that the committee report back by the end of the spring semester.

According to Ken Buxton, student council member, it will take until March or April for the committee to compile a report.

Buxton charged that the review was not spawned in an attempt to improve student service programs, but instead was begun by some faculty members who were "jealous of the amount of money allocated to student service departments.

Buxton made several charges concerning Chairman Wallins' conduct of the review, most of which were answered by Wallins.

He said that during the course of the review, Wallins had withheld pertinent information from committee members and had been "too cautious" in his conduct of the review.

According to Buxton, Wallins didn't inform the committee when he learned that A. Jean Hill, dean for Student Advisory Services, intended to resign at the end of this school year. Hill, however, told the Argonaut that she was not resigning, and will be returning next year.

Wallins said he had only heard rumors of Hill's possible resignation and didn't think he should spread them to the committee. He added that the committee "generally seemed to agree that it wasn't something relevant to the review."

He added that he thought he had made the right decision, because the rumors about Hill's resignation were unfounded.

No meetings have been held since March, according to Wallins. He said he has yet to get second semester schedules for committee members and that he had "no idea" when the committee would formulate final conclusions to submit to the council.

Some conclusions, according to Buxton, could be reached through an opinion poll of students to determine their attitude toward student service programs. Buxton said the idea of such a poll was vetoed by Wallins, "although a majority of the committee supported the poll.

Wallins said he had postponed a student opinion poll early in the review until the committee preliminary work was completed. He added that the poll idea was only "briefly discussed" at the committee's last meeting in December, and that Buxton was not present at that meeting.

Within Student Advisory Services, Dean Hill made staff appointments and formed an administrative council. Hill had claimed that this was inappropriate, and that Hill should have waited for the committee's recommendations before making the appointments.

Hill said she has been reassigning personnel in her office, and that the office didn't "have to do with anything."

She added that she has received "no feed back from the committee" since she was interviewed last semester.

The committee had been optimistic in trying to complete its review by the end of the first semester, according to Tom Richardson, Vice President for Student and Administrative Services. Richardson said he had urged the committee to take time to look into each department and was pleased it was doing so.

Faculty Council Chairman Tony Rigas said that he realized "there is a lot more involved," in the committee review than he had previously thought, and for that reason the committee would get a deadline extension. The length of the extension, according to Rigas, will depend on the council's reaction to an interim report submitted in the near future by Wallins.

Richardson said he thought the committee might try to wrap up its review by late February or early March, when University budget hearings will begin.

Subcommittees have been conducting interviews, according to Wallins, and the whole committee must evaluate the interviews before a report will be submitted to the council.

The interviews, according to Ted Argyll, a student committee member, have been conducted with department heads and Staffers of student service programs.

Interviews with students will be part of the committee's deliberations during second semester, Buxton said. He added that he hoped the committee report would be a "consumer report from a student's point of view."

Conclusions reached by the committee should be designed to make programs more "student oriented," according to Buxton.

He added that the Health Services department is presently the most student oriented, and most cooperative of any of the committees that have reviewed.

Wallins said all data had to be compiled before the committee could make recommendations. He added that at present, it is too soon to speculate on what conclusions the committee might reach.

A special meeting this Thursday noon in the Sawtooth room will discuss the job description of the manager.
New forms aid registration

"Better than anticipated" was U of I Registrar Matt Telin's reaction to last week's registration. He also said that there were no serious problems and that he was impressed with the new system and the student's reaction to it.

Faculty council looks at bookstore discount

A 13-year-old policy of granting discounts to students and staff at the University bookstore may be on its way out.

David Warnick, student representative to the Faculty Council, has submitted an agenda item to the council calling for the elimination of University handbook subsection 6310-E-2, which tells who will get discounts and what percentages.

The present range of discounts range from 10 to 20 percent, depending on the retail cost of the texts and their markup.

In a memorandum from the Faculty Secretary, the secretary stated, "As nearly as I can determine the discount was initiated in 1962 by the then manager, Chester R. Kerr, of the bookstore and former financial vice-president. It certainly is not an action by a faculty body. It was an administrative act taken in light of administrative considerations.

The memorandum continued to say, "It would seem to me that if the Bookstore is having financial problems, then the administrators responsible should take corrective action. I really doubt that the Faculty Council should get into the picture unless there is some overriding reason to do so."

According to Warnick, "The present policy is discriminatory.

Praising the students, Telin said "Two people could carry on a conversation thirty feet away. It was very quiet and orderly." He said there were no long lines Wednesday afternoon when many students registered late. "Many people were stuck out of town until the last day," he said.

Students seemed to pass through the lines more quickly, he said, largely because the new system involved fewer card checks and one less station to visit. Also, less time was spent by staff at the class booths sorting the cards.

The problems that did develop, he said, are expected to be corrected next semester. The two registration forms students received did not have places to list lectures and lab classes. Some students filled the spaces unaware of this, Telin said, and some problems could result.

Another problem on the computer form arose when many students did not understand the category "ora no." Telin said, after looking over a few forms I knew that this category would have to be clarified.

Both problems, he said, would be cleared up next semester.

Although the new system costs about the same as the old, Telin said it is much more efficient. "Before, it took two weeks to make up a packet because it all had to be done by hand. But now it takes a few hours for the computer to print out the forms."

The only additional labor expense of the new system is the alphabetizing of the forms once filled out. The old cards, he said, could be filed by computer, but the paper sheets must be alphabetized by the staff. "The fact that people turn in their forms in alphabetized groups helps," Telin said.

The new Registration procedures emphasized speed and elimination of hassles. Whether or not it happened, the intent was there.

Once energy was mostly elbow grease...

Today, we just step on the starter. Energy to power factories and assembly plants has made our modern streamlined automobiles possible. Here and in a thousand other ways the demands are increasing. If we are going to keep our society moving, we’re going to have to keep that energy coming.

We can do it. By saving and sharing and pursuing the intelligent courses that will insure a continued supply.
An improbable mission

Good morning, Mr. Phelps. You're probably wondering why you have been summoned to the Men's room of the UCC (third stall from the left). Your mission, should you decide to take it, is of the gravest importance if this task force is to safeguard the sovereignty of our judicial system.

The Department of the University of Idaho has been infiltrated with electronic surveillance equipment by agents of the people. This group of spies has taken to the code name 'students' and centered their attention on that paragon of virtue, O. Murphy Patrick.

Prof. Patrick's lectures have flagrantly been taped without his prior knowledge or approval. I'm sure you are aware of the grave threat to our country that lectures on "Contemporary Literature for Non-Majors" and "Modern English and American Drama" could pose should these tapes fall into enemy hands.

Just think Mr. Phelps, what other 'students' could do with such tapes. Those vile creatures might use these tapes to prepare compositions; perhaps the secret tapes might even be given to other 'students' should they happen to miss a lecture due to accident or illness. What horrore! Why aren't 'students' with physical disabilities be able to get their subversive hands on such valuable tapes.

Of course the gravest implications of the whole "Sony snitchin' affair revolves around the copyright question. It has been rumored that these tapes are at this very moment being prepared for publication.

The tape-dealing scoundrels stand to make millions from this plagiaristic action capitalizing upon the life's work of our champion, Prof. Patrick. It is possible Mr. Phelps, that in your scouting mission to the classroom, you have noticed the tremendous literary wealth of Patrick's lectures, and why 'students' would attempt this scheme to steal this great man's material.

It seems that Patrick has been subjected to threats also. If there continues to be rampant taping of the professor's lectures, a record of his conversations could be obtained.

Think of the consequences—was Patrick was confessing. He might spill his meditations on those little black boxes, expose himself, and every word he said would be captured, and then sold.

Don't be seduced, your only link to the VA and quick results is the VA representatives we have on this campus. They're here every day but Wednesday and we are working hard for five days a week.

Find out for yourself. Go see the office of Veterans Affairs and ask them what the VA Representatives can do. Then you, too, will know that the Veterans Administration representative is the best thing the veterans have to work with.

Some comments on the 'new' SUB

To the editor:

Upon returning to school, I happened to notice what appears to be a slight mix-up in the area that used to be the SUB cafeteria.

I have derived a few theories that I am clinging to while awaiting the real (more bizarre?) truth:

1. Moscow has an outrageously amazing carpet salesman, (so why should he be interested in a lucrative offer as a footloose hot dog salesman?)
2. Moscow is to become the "Reno of the inland Empire."

To the editor:

As I sit in the newly-remodeled SUB my mind is full of reactions to it and to the use of it.

May I first say that it's nice—I'm afraid that is as high as I rate it.

Secondly, my only major objection to the SUB is the use of it: who gets to use it, who has the right to use it and who actually uses it. I go there without saying the SUB is for the students of Moscow. I also goes without saying that it is for students families (to some extent).

To the editor:

Is Liberace coming?

3. Construction is not complete, there is more cement to be poured.

5. Liberace is coming.

Who knows? Maybe if there was more money...

Rod Spidah

Keep out the teeny-boppers

But, and here goes the gripe, it is not now, and probably never will be for the students of Moscow's Public Schools. The SUB has been open for about three and a half hours, and already in the hours I have been here, I've counted no less than 15 teenagers and pre-teens.

This is the UI of Student Union Building. But, for the University of Idaho, not for the snackers of Moscow's Public Schools.

Ted Clement
It was July, 1947 and the U.S. Senate was debating World War II price controls and whether they would help stabilize the economy which was in the tumultuous upheaval of a conversion to peace time production. Homer Capehart, a Republican senator from Indiana had the floor and was bitterly attacking the Office of Price Administration (OPA), which had checked inflation during the war. The current rise in prices, he said, was temporary and must be accepted. It was time to return to the private enterprise system, a not altogether unregulated system, which had caused the great depression.

The Democratic senator continued his emotional reply at the microphone in a语: "I should like to use stronger language if the rules of the Senate permitted it, the rule of law and devil take the hindmost... In those dark days when Mr. Hoover was exemplifying rugged individualism to the young farmers and businessmen, we say, "We are not going to stand for this much longer.""

The speaker was Illinois Senator from Idaho, Glenn H. Taylor, who in the third year of his Senate term had already established himself as a vocal dissenter, a renegade on many issues. Indeed, by 1948, so critical would Taylor become of all of the price control, civil rights and foreign affairs, that the Idahoan would bolth his Democratic party farther away and agreed to be the vice presidential candidate of the newly formed and leftist leaning Progressive Party of America, under the leadership of Henry Wallace.

It was 30 years ago this month that Glenn Taylor, a “born again” into a new party or, as United States Senator from Idaho, he would hold for a single stormy six-year term. Though the passing years have grayed his hair and taken most of his time, never once has he been removed from the limelight, the “Red Devil of Idaho,” as he was once called, still speaks with a commanding voice and marshalls facts and logic into a presentation that captivates the listener.

He lives outside of San Francisco now, running “Taylor Toppers,” a wig-making company he founded in the fifties. This writer, researching Idaho history, recently met the former Senator there and in the course of several hours of discussion found himself unfailingly drawn into the spell this master orator can still cast.

I had heard the stories of course, of how Taylor had been a country-western singer who traveled the West with an act featuring the depression, making a living out of his baritone voice and a guitar. He was the kind of man who rather than offer any constructive solution to racial problems, took advantage of the situation and used it to further his own career.

Sen. Bilbo, Taylor continued, offered not material or social progress but “the delusive sense of feeling superior to someone else, the cheap thrill of membership in a master race, the joy of kicking someone else around.”

In areas of foreign policy, however, I found myself disagreeing with Idaho's Senator Taylor. There seemed, from reading the old Congressional Records, that there was much of an unspoken acceptance of Soviet Russia as a peace time ally following World War II. Even in light of Henry Kissingers recent detente, I found myself thinking that should ever shake hands with a Soviet diplomat I would counter with my fingers. Taylor, I felt, placed too much trust in the reliability of the Soviet Union. So it was with a mixture of respect and curiosity that I met the former Idaho Senator in San Francisco this summer for an interview from which the following segments were taken:

Mr. Taylor, you've had an unusual career. How did someone with your background ever get into politics?

"Well, you know, I had that little singing group, the Glenda players, and we used to go all over during the depression days, playing for a buck to a street corner. People would come and want to pay their admission with a sack of flour or a chicken because they didn't have any money. They just didn't have any money at all."

"Well, I was my own advance man and I used to go on ahead to the town and book us in at the local theaters. And one day, in a city a little bit ahead, I had made up my mind that I didn't want to get involved in politics."

"But this guy, Joe Bilbo, I watched him and I thought, 'Why all this guy is doing is putting on an act. He's just giving them a show. And he's an amateur while I'm a professional actor.' So then and there I thought about running for politics."

Senator, you bolted your own Democratic party in 1948 to run with Henry Wallace, as the Progressive Party, an organization many said was too liberal or even controlled by the Communists. What led you to join the Progressives?

"Well, the atom bomb had been recently dropped and I felt the world war would destroy civilization. And Truman was completely enamored of the military. I simply turned the foreign policy over to them."

"It was absolutely idiotic. The Russians had gotten through our main lines, you know, our gallant allies and heroes of Stalingrad, and by God I didn't want to hear Hitler was done in the whole propaganda line changed just overnight. Here are the heroes of Stalingrad when we go to bed and the next morning here come the villains of the Kremlin. Just complete bastards."

"So I went down and talk to Mr. Wallace for about 15 minutes, at least three or four times, he said 'All the Russians understand is force.' Just like I had to."

"So it was that meeting with President Truman that really led you to leave the Democratic Party?"

"Yes, I admired Henry Wallace and his peace proposals, and when he asked me to run with him then I thought I could be able to do some good. And I didn't see Truman as working for peace at all."

"Indeed, I finally joined the party because I wanted to be able to look in the mirror and say 'You did the best you could.'"

"You know Richard Nixon, when he was still a Congressman and a Senator: What did you think of him then?"

"About what I think of him now; a son-of-a-bitch from the very beginning. I had followed him in the career of California congressman, a California congressman, a good liberal congressman. And Nixon started right in the middle. His first campaign he started right in on the red deal."

"Then he ran against Helen Hagahan Douglas. She was a woman, but he got her too. People would call up the day before the election, all over the state, and say 'Mr. Nixon, Mr. Nixon.' I just called to see if you were registered to vote and if you had transportation to the polls and voted."

"Then a few minutes and then say 'Be sure and vote for Helen Hagahan Douglas, will you? This is Community party calling. be good.' Then they hung up."

"Nixon did that to her. He hired people to do that kind of thing. If he'd been such a man, he'd have been a great man. She got the day, but he got the red deal."

"You were active in the 1948 presidential campaign, in which you lost the Democratic primary by less than 200 votes to a young Boise lawyer named Frank Church. What was your opinion of Senator Church today?"

"Oh, he's not too bad. He came out against the atomic bomb. This thing was, I was against the war in 1945. It wasn't even Vietnam then, it was Indo-China. And I think for sure that he should get out and let the Vietnamese take care of themselves."

"I spent perhaps four hours with Glenn Taylor but I bet that in 40 hours I couldn't have proved the depths of this campaign. Idaho in the United States Senate from 1944 to 1950. From a country western singer, to United States Senator, to a vice presidential candidate of a third party, to a professional and intriguing niche in America's political conventions."

"To be sure, today's strike many remember Worlds, and Idaho as well as the rest of the nation might profit by examining more closely the record of Glenn H. Taylor, who thirty years ago this month was sworn into office.
The commons building - new SUB or cafeteria?

By DOUG CARR

In a recent letter to the Board of Regents, Sherman Carter, financial vice president, proposed the establishment of a $5 million commons building. He stated that space was to be transferred $17.50 per student per semester in SUB fee bonds to pay for the new building.

Carter stated that the original planning for the Commons Building was done in 1968. He said that it was planned to be both a food preparation area and a dining area for all dormitory residents. He recognized the inadequacy of the library and wanted to increase it to $17.50 per student per semester.

The building would also have a lounge, and game rooms. He said that the building would be helpful to the University's goal of phasing out the Gault cafeteria.

According to Bernice Morin, director of food services, a new cafeteria system could provide many additional services which could not be provided now. She proposed the establishment of a cafeteria system similar to that of the University of Montana with 5 different meal plans offered. The building would have a fast food and sandwich line.

She noted that the cafeteria is open from 7 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. and from 5 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. with a short 15-minute transition period between breakfast and lunch. A new cafeteria could also provide a coffee shop, although this may not be enough to finance the building. He expects the funding to come from other sources.

Morin said that the primary reason for the creation of a single dormitory cafeteria is that it would serve at least $95,000 annually in reduced labor, management, and equipment costs. She added that the Gault cafeteria was established in 1954 on a temporary basis and was designed to serve 330 students. The cafe handles 650 students, in order to serve that many students, the lounge area was utilized along with that of the kitchen area.

There is no longer sufficient room for salad preparation. Morin said, and the baking for the Gault cafeteria must be done in the Wallace Complex Kitchen. There is also the problem of the backlogging of dirty dishes. It has long been the University's goal to phase out the Gault cafeteria.

The phasing out of the Gault cafeteria would cause additional problems she added.

Although the complex cafeteria is able to handle the increased population on weekends, it could not handle the load on a Monday to Friday basis, for its storage and kitchen facilities are inadequate to do the job.

In fact, the Complex kitchen area is currently too small for further increases. Therefore, the new Commons building must be built, or the existing Complex cafeteria must be expanded.

Tom Richardson, the vice president of student affairs, agreed with Morin's conclusion that the current food service system is expensive and inefficient. He noted that a revolution in food service techniques, dealing primarily with frozen foods, has taken place, which has made the Gault cafeteria financially unfeasible. However, his concept of the commons building is that it would be more than a cafeteria. He mentioned that with the completion of the stadium and the Performing Arts Center there will be a large increase in the demand for food and related services on that part of the campus.

Richardson also mentioned that the bookstore additional space and that some ASU offices may need to be relocated in the Commons Building. He also mentioned that there would be additional space and that some ASU offices may need to be relocated in the Commons Building. He also mentioned that the Commons Building did not become another SUB, and has the opinion that the Commons Building would not become the SUB for the Independents.

Commenting on the feasibility of expanding the Complex cafeteria to handle the increased load caused by a closure of Gault cafeteria, Richardson said that is feasible for a bookstore or ASU offices.

Richardson said that he will be proceeding in two directions in the preliminary work for the commons building. He will be seeking authorization to bring in an architectural planner and will be canvassing different groups for input on what kind of facilities are wanted and needed in the commons building. He added that high construction costs may limit the size of the building, but he feels that the Commons Building should still be more than a cafeteria.

GRAND OPENING
Presenting the new Blue Bucket

By DAVID WEEKS
of the Argonaut staff

"It was only more centrally located..."

This seems to be the only drawback, other than the usual funds problem, of the renovated snack-bar in the SUB. Perhaps we should have made improvements first in the Satellite SUB.

Anyway, since the changes have been made, we should try to describe the Blue Bucket's new personality.

First of all, I can't quite agree with SUB General Manager Dean Vettrus that the Blue Bucket might convey a coffee-house-type atmosphere. You'll simply have to go to O' Joe Hall for that.

On the other hand, there are several ammenities which create an enjoyable atmosphere - the TV, stereo, fireplace, and table. No longer appear to be late additions to the food facilities.

There is a harmony, though certainly not the low-down type. Maybe the feeling is more like a coffee-house, without guilt. One course or tennis courts, or, particularly, bar. If the SUB does get a lounge area, it will be in the Dipper anyway.

Aging, you walk into the front of the Blue Bucket and you're immediately impressed, one way or the other, with the colors - dark red and dark blue (carpeting) and green (plants) - covering everything but the ceiling area. There are no moveable seats (positive factor in maintenance), but you sit on floor level with your feet tucked under lower tables.

"Students like to keep their feet up," says Vettrus, probably.

Secondly, though it doesn't immediately dawn on you, there are structured areas - private (the most comfortable), semi-private, and public.

If you were a visitor to the SUB, you'd probably notice the TV is no longer near the fireplace, but more toward the center of the wall adjacent to the book store. It comprises the "continuity and elegance" aspect of the new SUB look.

Then comes the practical aspect, the real seating point - the snack bar. For those who might know, the facility is "basically a self-service system with straight-line characteristics."

Anyway, the student should now find some flavor and faster combinations.

We have, for example, self-service sandwich (approximately 48 cents), three (previously only one) front display sandwich areas, new refrigerated units which keep food fresher, a quarter-pound hamburger broiler, 12 (instead of six) ice cream flavors, a radio range, new and expanded self-service soft drink machines, and, in keeping with established policy, the usual selection of homemade pies and ice cream.

Customers pay at a new cash register, located where the napkins and condiments used to be.

As you sit down to contemplate your new surroundings, you might wonder how all this happened and why.

Well, three years ago the Student Union Board voted to remodel the snack bar with seven-member student board setting policy and guidelines for long-range operation of the Student Union.

This semester, the board will consider such items as further expansion of the SUB, remodeling of the Satellite SUB, and the addition of cut-pile carpeting, similar to that already installed in the Schmidt Lounge area. As Vettrus explains, "No matter how great the food is, or how great the cook is, without atmosphere you can't have a really good meal."

On Friday or Saturday, an open house is planned, if the weather permits.

The SUB snack bar will be officially named "the Blue Bucket" at the dedication ceremony Thursday at 11:30 a.m.

The Blue Bucket, just south of the cafeteria that was used last semester, is remodelled with both open and private spaces in a warm and comfortable atmosphere. Student Union Chairman Gordon Styler said, it will be open during the same hours that the building is open.

The Blue Bucket derives its name from old Idaho lore, Styler explained.

A lone pioneer journeyed through Idaho on his way to Oregon, the legend goes. He camped one night on Paradise Creek near Moscow and saw that the water was rich in gold. But being more interested in farming, he continued west.

After trying farming in Oregon, he returned in search of the bucket he had left behind. The rich placer deposits it promised. He never found the Blue Bucket Mine, nor has anyone else.

The original Student Union Building on the U of I campus was called the Blue Bucket and the name has survived to the present.

Sincerely,
Gordon M. Styler
Chairman, SUB Board

Dear students:

We've been busy at the SUB since last September remodeling and giving the Student Union a "new look".

With the beginning of this spring semester, we will be moved in and ready to go in the Blue Bucket - what used to be the Snack Bar. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday - January 23, 24, and 25 - are scheduled as the grand opening of the SUB and its new facilities.

A special dedication ceremony beginning at 11:30 a.m. Thursday (January 23) will kick the celebration off.

If you're invited to attend the dedication ceremony that morning, all menu items in the Blue Bucket will be half-price for the grand opening, and soft drinks will be served Thursday at noon.

We're happy to help and we celebrate our grand opening at the Student Union.

Sincerely,

Gordon N. Styler
Chairman, SUB Board

Foosball tournament

On Saturday, Jan. 25, the Associated College Union of Interfraternal Fraternity will sponsor a Foosball tournament.

The tournament will be open to all Graduate and undergraduate full-time students of the University and the registration fee will be $1.

Registration forms are available at the SUB information desk and those wishing to enter the tournament need not have a partner to do so. Registration must be completed by 5 p.m.

Thursday, Jan. 23.

The tournament will be held in the Balcony Ballroom in the SUB at noon Saturday and the form of competition will be double elimination.

The tourney is being held to determine the regional champs and a trophy will be awarded at the end of the tournament.

The regional champs will then go on to the Playboy Towers Hotel in Chicago on April 24 and 27 to compete for the National title.

Idaho Senate clouds Sunshine act

The first attempt to amend Idaho's new Sunshine laws was stymied in a Senate committee Monday, despite the fact the proposal came from the man who launched the successful Sunshine Initiative last year, Sen. John T. Peavey, R-Rupert, attempted to win approval from the Senate State Affairs Committee for a one-word change in the new Sunshine law which he authored. The proposals won overarching approval from voters in an initiative election last fall, after the Senate killed similar measures in last year's session.

Peavey asked that the word "individuals" be changed to "persons" in a section dealing with reporting expenditures for political campaigns.

"I'm not going to vote for it," said Sen. Phil Batt, R-Wilder. "People keep telling us we should give the Sunshine laws a chance to work; yet they also tell us we should make changes to improve the laws."

Batt served notice he will vote against all attempts to change the Sunshine laws.

Sen. James Ellsworth, R-Leedore, said it is possible there will be other efforts to change the new laws. He suggested stalling Peavey's bill in committee to see if any more proposals come in.

Ellsworth finally agreed to holding Peavey's bill until Feb. 1 to see if other changes are proposed. The committee approved that by a 7-3 vote. The action highlighted a busy day of Senate action Monday, following relative quiet last week.

Sen. Lyle Cobb, R-Boise, chairman of the Local Government and Taxation Committee, said a bill to allow public utilities to receive automatic rate increases will be presented to the committee Wednesday.

Cobb said the measure was requested by a representative of Idaho Power and Light Co. He said it would allow automatic rate increases as soon as a utility files a request with the Public Utilities Commission.

The measure also would require the commission to issue rate increase decisions within six months. Utah Power and Light last week was granted a rate increase for its Eastern Idaho customers, 13 months after it filed the request.

It's possible to graduate well up in your class...then flunk launching your career.

Robert Mohr's success story: When Bob was a graduating senior in Industrial Engineering at Oregon State, he was faced with the same important decision which may be confronting you today...where to start your career. Bob chose Kaiser Aluminum. Today, he is Senior Process Control Engineer at our Tacoma plant facility. His job...to develop strategies and programs for continual improvement of our new aluminum reduction line. He is currently involved in key environmental projects related to clean air...and he likes it. Bob is just one of many young engineers who have proven that the chance for advancement is better with Kaiser Aluminum than with many other companies.

That's because we're young, diversified and growing. And we know that young people can take responsibility.

Don't flunk the first year of your career. It could affect the rest of your life.

That's why you too should make sure you pick the right company...the first time. If you're a senior in engineering (man or woman) who is interested in putting theory into practice—fast. And if one of your goals is to advance into a decision-making job—fast. You should talk to one of our regional recruiters. He'll fill you in on the current job situation—fast.

Away from home. For the first time or the fiftieth time. You can always use a friend.

If you're from one of 102 cities in the Mountain Area, chances are First Security is your hometown bank.

When you come to school in a strange town, as far as we're concerned, we're still your hometown bank. Just as friendly, just as anxious and willing to help you as the bank you grew up with. We call it person-to-person banking. But it means we just want to be friends.

Come in and see us.

You have a long way to go. We want to help along the way.

First Security Bank of Idaho, N.A.
“Students did suffer, especially in the 103 test,” said Freshman English Chairman Teoman Sipahigil. He was speaking about the English 104 Diagnostic Test conducted in the Administration Building Auditorium.

Students reported that there were too few seats, too much noise and laughter, the lighting was poor and once, the lights even went out.

The incident began, said Sipahigil, in an attempt “to save a lot of hassle for the students and faculty.”

Sipahigil also said there was so much noise before the test started that he had trouble communicating to the students.

“Rather it was very crowded,” he said. “Some students were even seated on the floor.” Many turned in their papers after 40 minutes, despite the fact that it was a two hour test.

Lines formed and grew, winding around the seating area as students queded up to turn in their papers.

In spite of the disorders, the instructor said the tests were probably fair. “Everyone was in a fair and convenient way, more such tests overall are smaller, so even if test scores overall are smaller, they seem likely to be a throw down from here.”

Choir on tour

Some 34 of the 40 University of Idaho students currently on a tour of South America in the Vandaleer Concert Choir are receiving special topic credits for music and sociological study in connection with the trip.

Study tour leader is G. Ellis Burcaw, University foreign study director and director of the campus museum. Burcaw accompanied the Vandaleers in the same capacity during their European tour three years ago.

The Vandaleers—students from many disciplines at the university—are visiting Ecuador, the sister country to Idaho in the Partners of the Americas’ program, as well as Colombia, Panama, Guatemala and Mexico. Some 17 concerts and workshop demonstrations are planned. Glen Luck, a professor of music and Vandaleer director for many years, is tour director.

He also said that next year a new way of taking the 104 Tests will be found. “We have to make sure to study from here,” he said.

Just look ‘em

State Senator Orval Snow, whose district includes the University of Idaho, said that student abuse of the Idaho food stamp program needs to be investigated.

Snow made his remarks when addressing the Senate Health, Education & Welfare Committee. He said, “I’ve been against use of the program, but I don’t want abuse. If a student needs help this way get his or her money should be available.”

Snow suggested no changes, but mentioned the problem so an investigation could be made into the program to devise a more efficient means of operation.

“Some will be abuse in any program. I just want to bring it up to be looked into and try to change the program so the abuse is less likely,” said Snow.

Increased drop outs attributed to increased student charges

There is a direct correlation between increases in fees and increase in drop out rates at universities, according to the director of the Idaho Student Lobby (ISL).

In a presentation before the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee of the Idaho State Legislature, Mick Meyer, director of ISL said, “for every $100 increase in the cost of education, about two percent of the college population is forced to drop out for economic reasons.”

A $100 increase in fees might result in a total decrease of over 500 students at Idaho’s state supported institutions, Meyer told the committee.

Students oppose fee increases, Meyer said, because they doubt that such increases result in “any appreciable increases in the quality of education.” He added, “No fee increases will be accompanied by a reduction in financial support from the legislature.”

“Too often fee increases have been routed into athletics, or have simply disappeared inside administrative offices,” Meyer added.

Out with the old, in with the new

A revised ASUI Constitution will greet student senators tonight at the first Senate meeting of the year.

University of Idaho President Ernest Hartung, who has returned from a six-month sabatical leave, will talk to the students.

The new constitution will provide for staggered terms of ASUI Senators and would have the ASUI President elected at the end of the fall semester, taking office at the first of the year.

It passed by the senate, the revision will then go to the students in the upcoming ASUI general election for approval.

The present Constitution was approved by the students four years ago, but never submitted to the Board of Regents for concurrence.

The proposed revision will be sent to the Senate Rules & Regulations committee, and probably go through a series of hearings.

Also on the agenda are bills calling for appointments to student advisory committees and to fill a vacancy on the Communications Board. Financial bills for Argonaut and the Entertainment Committee will also be considered.

CLASSES ARE STILL OPEN.
Intramurals begin

Intramural sports have started for the Spring Semester with "A" basketball while the pool sharks and bowling aces are finishing with playoffs this week.

Leagues and schedules were drawn up last week for "A" basketball, but for those still lacking for cage action, "B" basketball is open to any living, The pool champion will be decided this afternoon in the SUB game room and bowling playoffs begin Thursday afternoon at the same location.

Later this spring there will be tennis action, both doubles and singles. Also on the agenda are weight lifting and that coveted ski title, which will be held at North-South Ski Area around the first of March.

Scheduled to begin sometime after Spring Break are: softball, paddleball, track and field you partial athletes-horse shoes. According to Clem Parberry, director of men's Intramurals, his going to be tough getting all these activities in during the semester.

Women handle the ball

The U of I women's varsity basketball team opened its season with a 1-1 record in the two home openers over the weekend.

Friday night the home team defeated the WSU "B" Squad in front of a good home crowd. After a rather slow start, the U of I women pulled ahead to a steady 10 point lead throughout the game, winning it 39-29.

The game's high scorer was Idaho guard Annie Williamson with 14. Darcy Aldrich added 10, LuAnn Hanes 5, with Jeanne Meyer and Judy Wilford each adding 4.

Saturday morning the home team lost to Flathead Valley Community College from Kalispell, Montana, in a hard fought game. Trailing by 22 points at one time, the Idaho team rallied to within 8 only to fall short in the final score of 59-47. High scorer for U of I were LuAnn Hanes with 22 and Darcy Aldrich with 10.

The team travels to Spokane for two games this Thursday. They face Eastern Washington State this Friday at home at 4:00 in the WHEB gym.

WSU basketball

Tickets of the annual renewal of the Idaho-WSU basketball game go on sale Wednesday at the ticket office in Memorial Gym. The game will be played Tuesday, Jan. 28 at 8 p.m. in the Performing Arts Coliseum at WSU. The price for Idaho students will be $1, and $4 for adults.

In Idaho's roundballers jinxed

Idaho's roundballers seem to be jinxed when playing away from home, having dropped five of six road games this season.

The Vandals, now 7-6, will have two serious stumbling blocks to overcome this weekend coming off a three game losing streak and facing powerhouse Idaho State and Boise State both out of town.

Idaho beat Gonzaga a week ago 63-61 in Memorial Gym, but the Bulldogs came back to down the Vandals 73-63 last weekend. Portland State stole a pair of victories from the silver and gold cagers, the first an 85-75 win in Moscow and the second a 110-84 thrashing at Portland Saturday night.

Coach Jarvis said, "Inconsistency play offensively, defensively, and off the boards were to blame for the last three losses."

He expressed optimism saying, "We didn't play bad ball in our last two games against Gonzaga and Portland State. We did miss two of our key players who were sidelined."

Senior guard Henry Harris, the Vandals leading scorer (16.4), was on the sidelines for both road tilts due to "disciplinary suspension." He'll be back for the trip to Pocatello and Boise, as will freshman guard-forward Rodney Johnson who missed the two games awaiting completion of work for a first semester course.

Vandal cage fans can expect some changes in the starting lineup when the squad travels to Pocatello. Coach Jarvis said any of eight players may start, probably Steve Weist and Gene Stroebel will be the guards and forwards may be Rick Nelson and Ev Brown, but Rodney Johnson, Chris Price, Roger Davis and Henry Harris will be in equal contention for starting berths.

Stroebel might have won a permanent starting slot for his performance last weekend, tallying 24 points. Weist who averages 16.3 points per game lacks only five points to boost his career to 300 points. The 6'2 junior from Santa Barbara, California has been on the varsity since the middle of his freshman year.
Library security or a case of beeping books

Attention bookworms and the like, the U of I Library has made innovations for book safety, book location and material access.

According to Richard J. Beck, associate director of libraries, the U of I Library has installed an electronic book security system which, when activated, will lock the exit gate. The system was installed Jan. 6, but was in the planning stage for several years. Beck approximated a day and a half for installation and a few days more for testing.

The book theft detection system marketed by Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Company (3M) is designed to improve library service by reducing theft and encouraging careless removal of library materials.

Beck said the system is to remind users if they have forgotten to charge out at the circulation desk and will remind users if they have materials such as reference books which do not normally circulate.

The alarm is a 'gentle reminder' sounding much like the soft gong which precedes an announcement on a paging system at a department store, according to Carolyn Hagen, U of I Library Secretary. The reminder is done in a pleasant way, not like a burglar alarm, noted Hagen.

No penalties are given, it is just a subtle reminder, added Beck.

Beck will not divulge how the system operates, but he was warned by the 3M Company not to for protection. He said the company points out how ridiculous it is to invest money in something and then tell how it works. He used the analogy of a firm buying a safe, then broadcasting the combination. Beck also remarked that he purposely tried not to understand the technical aspects of it for he was elsewhere when the system was being installed.

He did reveal that the books had to be sensitized in the racks every so often and desensitized when checked out.

The U of I Library estimates its losses at between 225 and 200 books per year, which at an average cost of $15, would amount to $3,525 to $4,500 annually if all material were replaced. This amount does not include the staff time spent in searching for missing materials and replacing them or the "immeasurable frustration" experienced by persons who are not able to find the materials they need.

As other libraries have experienced, students and faculty like this system better for they are not being searched by another human being. It is less personal.

Beck forsees no disadvantages to this $1200 mechanism. He comments on some question like "does it harm a person who has a pacemaker"—no is the answer.

Beck noted an article in the December 1974 Administrator's Digest pointing out a study made by a 16-year-old Mary Hove, a high school student in Tucson, Arizona who spent 450 hours finding out how effective a detection system is. Nervous questionnaires are for high school and college students who use libraries with electronic systems and others without detection systems. She found, on the average, respondents estimated that their book detection system would pay for itself in three years.

The average number of volumes missing per year prior to the installation of a system was 1,584 volumes; after installation, the number dropped to 5.

For years the library has been issuing a comprehensive library handbook which has proven costly and constant change in library practices requires regular updating. Therefore, the U of I Library will discontinue the handbook and issue single sheets on specific aspects of services or collections, noted Beck.

Beck believes that by making the pennants the library saved money and better signs were produced. The materials cost only $16 while commercially it was estimated to total at least $100. However, he did not know how to discount the time the staff spent in making the signs, except to say it was fun.

A gigantic chart depicting how to find a book, how to read a card catalog, floor plans, and what the library has for the user is set up on the side wall along with books, 120,000 volumes of periodicals; 300,000 government documents; 10,000 items of phonodiscs, cassettes, and photos; 53,000 maps; 117 newspapers, 10,000 volumes of microfilm (card and film transparent card), microcards, and microfilm. These micro mechanisms save space and do not deteriorate as fast as books commented Beck.

The self-guided tour is also offered in cassette tape for those who like to listen rather than read, said, Beck. Also an updated 1973 checklist of professional papers, theses and dissertations is available.

The Open Invitation for University Students

With the commencement of the new Spring Semester, we wish to extend to University students an invitation to take advantage of classes at the L.D.S. Institute of Religion at 902 Deakin St. It is possible to take several courses for University credit under the Religious Studies Department in the General catalog of the University. Some of these classes apply towards Humanities, religion and philosophy credit. The classes taught are in Religion and Marriage, Old and New Testament and Science and Religion. U.S. doctrinal courses are also available for no credit at the University.

The building is open to all for their use as there are study areas, a library, T.V. game room and gym for student use. There are also social activities such as games and dancing on most weekends. Church services are held each Sunday.

All students are invited to participate in any or all of these events.
