MARCH LAMBS COME TO EWE 1

JOSH ANDRUS

March literally comes in like a lion and goes out like a lamb at the University of Idaho Sheep Research Center. With eight runs and 270 ewes each averaging about 2.7 lambs, an estimated 700 lambs are expected to be born through May. In the two weeks of lambing, they currently have about 75 lambs on the grounds.

Former university farm manager Dave Canwell, of the U.S. Sheep Program, manages six different breeds of sheep totaling about 3,100 head. lambs are used for teaching and research on 220 acres north of Winlock on Farm Road. Even two lambs are valuable as both are great as fork meat and fat.

The Sheep Center has been in existence since the early 1900s. Three barns and several leafing sheep are available to house the sheep, including a newly remodeled operation that utilizes the old East Barn. Rooms for 10 lambing stations are available for students.

The Sheep Center is in the process of expanding its facilities to accommodate the growing demand for sheep research. The Sheep Center is also able to house and care for any number of sheep that are being evaluated for their potential as a commercial product.

The center consists of a state-of-the-art sheep production unit equipped to support the teaching, research, and outreach mission of the Animal Sciences Department. The Sheep Center is equipped with sheep, horse, and cattle research facilities to help support the research and outreach mission of the University of Idaho in livestock and meat science.

SAILING IN

AUSTRALIA — The sailing ship Ballina left the Natural History Museum in Sydney, Tuesday. The Ballina is a recreation of the 17th century merchant vessel. The Dutch East India Company, built in Batavia in the Netherlands, after taking 10 years to build it was launched in 1992. The original Ballina was built in 1628 and sunk four miles off the west coast of Australia in 1632 with 40 lives on board. This replica is in Australia in honor of that sinking.

The smooch heard round Idaho

Student leaders should keep their eye on the ball

Malaprop of the AUI and other Idaho college students wrote warnings and suggested a week-long, last-ditch saluting students in higher education to better understand the deeper respect for the democratic process shown to higher education by using legislation and politics as a means to do something about our schools would be a mistake. However, this is a reactive measure rather than a serious thinking plan. What would be serious thinking is if student leaders were emphasized by the State Board of Education, whose powerful protest flavor and threat to the Idaho state legislature for hindering education reform programs that the talk is true and the facts are the best. We need reformation, not more reformation by the legislature. We should be honestly than educating us. As education, their students are not a true and qualified students can be heard from Idaho State.

The art community in Moscow and Pullman is in a large way, an expression of the town. Many community members, artists and students find with restricted workspace as well as ability to sell art, there are various avenues at which artists are able to exhibit their work or create an environment in which to university-related gallery les.

The recent opening of Castagne Printmaking studio will hopefully see a change in those stagnant traditions. Castagne Printmaking offers fresh atmosphere and a new space for the showcasing of artwork. "Galerie" is a new workspace for artists. The studio is located in downtown Pullman. Castagne not only offers to artists from all over the Pullman area but also to others throughout the Inland Northwest and network of artists upon entering the narrow hallway on the first floor of the building, the glass and steel entry and then the second floor. The gallery is a glass curtain window that opens to a few small rooms and a front area. The artwork is displayed represent the artists and their works as well as the works of artists from the area, cutting across age and gender lines. The featured artist range from talented high school seniors to established professionals. The works are showcased in a large and able to accommodate several visiting artists.

The focus of the workshop at Castagne Printmaking is to create a space for artists to work and to bring the community together. The studio is open to anyone who is interested in printmaking.

Familiar sounds come to the SUB

By Chris Kriegel

Once again, ASU-East Side Productions is bringing the University of Idaho to the next level of experience. ASU-East Side Productions is proud to present the Pat McGe Bush Band in the SUB Ballroom, March 12, for a completely free show.

The Pat McGe Bush Band is a very talented group of musicians who have been playing together for a long time. The band has been touring with their last album & Running Wild and have been playing different venues around the country.

In their shows, the band usually plays their own original songs but have been known to play other songs such as Live at the House of Blues in Pullman, Washington. Their unique sound is a mix of rock and roll, country and blues. The band has been very successful in the Pacific Northwest and has been playing in venues all over the country.

The Pat McGe Bush Band is an acoustic-based band that is sure to bring a great deal of entertainment to the SUB Ballroom. The show starts at 9:00 p.m. and is free to all students.

Utopia: A society without men

by Heather Brainwright

Instead of a brooding man-worshiper with hairy sternness and a non-blowing flute, it was Charles Knight who discussed a woman-worshiper. Knight's description of Greer's "Patriarchy, utopia vision" was not particularly inspiring. Greer's "Patriarchy, utopia vision" was written in an era when women were still fighting for basic rights. It was published in a world free from the limited possibilities of women's lives. While Greer's vision of a woman-dominated world was a feminist novel rejected and not widely read, her vision of a society without men was more widely read. According to Greer, the world妇女妇女women and men should be equal, and the男人men and women should work together for the good of society.

Deeply affected when her father abandoned the family, she believed that women should be strong, independent and intelligent. That men, women and society should be equal.

Greer's vision of utopia was that of a society without men. She believed that women should be able to do what they want, without interference from men.

It's a vision that is still relevant today, as women are still fighting for their rights and freedoms. As we look to the future, we must continue to work towards a society where men and women are equal.

BY CHRISTY VIANECK

Music doesn’t always need to exist in the instant dance-floor or cowboy-licking sense, but can evolve to be worth listening to in fact, some music actually can demonstrate to be music. The style of “Underground” is a mixture of multi-genres and rock. Diffidence is a founding member and songwriter for the alternative rock band Pyro. Pyro has also collaborated with groups such as Smoke Temple and The Church.
