Bites taken at Shark Athletic Club
Tassler sentenced to five years in prison for illegal activities

Editor’s Note: This story is the second of a two-part investigation into the Shark Athletic Club. Some sources were granted anonymity.

The club still doesn’t offer any of the aerobic classes that led her to join the club. “They are not every really open. The locker room and spa are still...” Shari said when pressed to get more money out of her.

University of Idaho student Tiffany Hymas said she joined the club last April to take advantage of the 40 aerobics classes the club promised to offer.

“...They just kept saying ‘It’ll be two weeks. It’ll be two weeks,’” said Hymas. She tried calling and going downstairs to get her money back after realizing they weren’t going to open, but “...we just gave up until the door was locked.”

Hymas wrote the fact the club opened over five months later than promised. Hymas said she manager refused to give her a refund. “It’s hard to make me feel guilty for not wanting to pay,” she said. He pointed out to her the fine print on the back of the contract she signed for her membership which said the contract had precedence over any other oral or written agreement.

Former employee Kathy said she was the only one aware of the fine print on the back of the contract. “They (Shark Club employees) were not supposed to point out the fine print on the back to tell them how you could get out of a contract.”

“I feel like I can’t get my money’s worth. I’ve been here for two weeks.”

She added even though she had to pay the $30 down payment and the rest of her monthly dues, the club still doesn’t offer any of the aerobics classes that led her to join the club. “They are not every really open. The locker room and spa are still...”

Marble to pass Senate code of ethics

J. Richard Rock

Staff Writer

When ASUI student leaders voted to pass senate bill #19 last Wednesday they voted to bind themselves to a strict new code of ethics. ASUI Senators Scott Wilson and Kristen Brannen, both authors of the legislation, felt it was time the ASUI recognized its responsibilities and duties. Wilson pointed to the fact that many public organizations have developed code of ethics in order to set basic guidelines for acceptable behavior.

“We deal with a million dollar budget and we don’t want anyone to perpetuate the programs we are responsible for,” said Wilson.

The language of the ASUI’s new code of ethics has in most cases the Associated Students of Washington State University’s code of ethics. “I don’t pretend to take credit for the wording of this document,” said Wilson, “most of it comes from WSU.”

Wilson first started thinking about a code of ethics for the ASUI when he heard about an incident at Montana State University. Apparentlly the MSU student body president was caught on video tape, stealing $300 from a fraternity.

MSU’s student government could not determine whether or not they had the authority to impeach their president for his apparent breach of ethics since it was not a violation of ASUI’s rules.

“That is kind of sad that the things you learn in Kindergarten have to be written down,” said Wilson who felt that action against the MSU student body president was clearly indicated.

The nearly four page document, which ASUI Student Defender Chuck Murphy has helped to write, is primarily intended to make some violations of Federal, state and local law, as well as violations of the University Judicial Code, impeachable offenses.

The bill provides for two levels of consequences for breaking laws other than the ASUI. The first step is a reprimand which can be issued according to the process laid out in the ASUI Rules and Regulations after an official "statutorily, intentionally, or repeatedly (after a warning) violates the principles and/or mandates of this code of ethics." The second step, according to the text of the bill, comes after a "serious" violation of Federal, state, or local law. Violations of this type..."shall/may be grounds for impeachment..."

The bill goes on to define examples of these offenses as a "Fraud, Embezzlement, Sexual Harassments, DUI, DWI or other crimes that would carry the same punishment from a lesser crime.

"I think any leader, but especially student leaders, who are given the public trust should be held to a higher standard," said Wilson when asked to justify the new rules.

ASUI President John Marlin stated that he felt the new code of ethics helped to round out the rules and regulations and would prevent problems in the future. "It does set high standards for the University of Idaho, but we should have high standards," said Marlin.

If a student leader were to be indicted under the new code, legislation would have to be written which called for the impeachment of the offending officer.

After the bill was written it would be turned over to the ASUI Attorney General who would conduct the investigation and be responsible for prosecuting the official and seeking a two-thirds affirmative vote of the senate to impeach.

Under the old rules which governed the ASUI, elected officials could only be impeached if they violated the ASUI’s rules. The only concern raised, during a special senate pre-session meeting, regarded the way new senators would be introduced to the rules of expected conduct. Senator Bennett repeated that even though no one is being asked to sign anything, senators are expected to have read the rules and regulations as a part of their training.

When the bill was finally voted on during the senate meeting there were no questions and the measure passed with unanimous consent.

ASUI President John Marlin is expected to sign the legislation into ASUI law some time today.

Fraternity sign causes problems

Sigma Nu's fraternity sign was taken from its rightful home, members believe Theta Chi took it

Shari Ireten
Reporter

Last weekend a fight broke out on the University of Idaho campus over a fraternity house sign. Members of the Sigma Nu house went over to the Theta Chi house last Friday at 10:06 a.m. to look for their missing house sign. Words were exchanged, a fight broke out between two members from each house. Lt. Jake Ken뮹nik, of the Moscow Police Department, said "no charges have been filed against any members of either house and the case is being reviewed by the city prosecutor." The sign was never found in any of the houses. At least 1:15 p.m. UI freshman Matt Youall was cited for theft of services for using a gold university parking permit.

Several thefts have been reported on campus, including a backpack stolen from the UI Bookstore. Eric Hudson reported his pack stolen from the shelves where students must leave their bags Jan. 20 at 1:50 p.m.

Alumnus gives $15,000

Tim Helmke

The University of Idaho has now received a $100,000 Award for Academic Excellence from Roy and Miren Eiguren with their $15,000 gift to UI officials last Friday in Boise.

Roy, a UI alumnus, said proceeds from this endowment will be put towards the Roy and Miren Eiguren Teaching Award in the UI College of Letters and Science.

Roy is a longtime Boise attorney and a partner at the Gavens, Funken and Funken law firm. The gift from the Eiguren's was announced Friday at a joint meeting of the UI Foundation Board, UI Alumni Association Board and UI Vandal Booster Board.

"We have very strong feelings about excellence in education and are certain that in a small way we can enhance the program at the university because of the important role it has played in families members' lives." Dean of the College of Letters and Science, Kurt, said, "The Eiguren's generosity will enable the college to further enhance its efforts to develop communication and critical thinking in undergraduates.

The highest priority at the university is that of maintaining excellence in all aspects of undergraduate education," said Olson. "A quality liberal arts education (illuminates how the arts, humanities, natural sciences, social sciences and technology are woven into the fabric of human history and development.)"

The Eiguren Teaching Award will pay for teaching resources and time for curriculum development by UI faculty. The award will be presented on the basis of proven teaching excellence in the area of humanities. Eiguren earned his bachelor's degree in political science at the UI in 1974 and graduated with a law degree in 1977. He and his late brother, Alfred, both received degrees from UI in the first generation in their families to do so.

Roy served as ASUI President in 1972-73 and was the recipient of the Theophulus Outstanding Senior Award for Academic Excellence and University Service in 1974. Miren Eiguren, an adjunct professor of Spanish at Boise State University, has also been a bingo supporter of UI.

The Eiguren's are staunch supporters of the arts and humanities in Boise and throughout Idaho. The Eiguren's have given $50,000 to the Boise Philharmonic Symphony.

Roy also currently chairs a task force for the Idaho Commission on the Arts working on arranging an exchange of original art between Idaho contemporary artists and artists in the Bosphorouste State of Europe.

The National Endowment for the Humanities will match the Eiguren's latest gift as part of the college's challenge grant to create a $1.25 million endowment in support of teaching at UI.

The Eiguren's have been donating money and time to the UI since he became an alumnus. Alumni office staff said they applaud alumni who donate to the university. One official in the office said it is also encouraging others to get involved and to donate not just money but time in the university after their college days are over.

Advertising puts in grant request

Jill Pittmann

The department of Art and Architecture has requested a grant for $3800. The grant has been requested because each year the students who take Arch 385: History of Architecture-Premodern World/The Western Tradition and Arch 386: History of Architecture II-Modern World, have been hindered in their ability to comprehend and retain information and concepts provided in the course. There is a need to address several limitations in the traditional methods and technologies used to teach the courses.

Students in these courses must begin to learn how to analyze visual images related to the experiential formal and structural qualities of architecture. The importance of using visual images in support of the learning process has a long history in architectural education. According to Brian Symposium, Professor of Architecture, "slides are presented as the primary visual media in the classes, but even though these slides are valuable, they cannot begin to explain the complexities of ideas such as the construction of old buildings such as the Byzantine Orthodox Cathedral." Symposium claims computer solid modeling would offer the potential for gaining new insight into important architectural issues.

August. He said they were offering two basic types of memberships, one for a year for $250 and one on a monthly basis.

The monthly membership, which typically purchased, required an initiation fee of around $50 and then monthly payments of around $20.

Kathy was also told, if asked about Barry Tassler, to say "he does not own the Shark Club, he is not the manager." Both Kathy and John were new to the Palms and didn't know who Tassler was.

"About 80 percent of the people I approached on the street said 'I won't even deal with this place,'" said Kathy. "It was my first semester and I had no idea who Xenon was or who Barry was."

John said he was "also told not to tell anyone Barry was associated. They said 'Don't say anything about the connection between the two.'" John said "Barry did have something to do with it. He was helping get set up and get things going."

While Tassler has been associated with ownership of the athletic club, the Shark Club and Xenon are owned by WPR Corporation, which is connected to Tassler's father, Benjamin.

Barry is the former manager of Xenon and management of the Shark Club was turned over to Andy Rockenfield, who has left the club.

"I think they were just doing it that way because Barry was in trouble," said John. Tassler was sentenced Monday afternoon to five years in prison for grand theft.

Prosecutor Bill Thompson, Jr., was quoted in the Moscow-Pullman Daily News as saying at the sentencing Tassler is a "career, professional criminal."

Tassler has three felony convictions (dropped to misdemeanors), eight misdemeanor convictions, 22 traffic violations and two failure to appear warrants.

When asked about the reasons for the club opening so late, John said "I often wonder about that. The only thing I can think of is they didn't have enough money. They didn't have any of the locker rooms done. I think they needed to generate enough money to finish the building."

"I think they had a good idea. There is a need for a better athletic club," said John. "But, I personally wouldn't invest my money into the club, even if they have good equipment, just because of the way the business is being run."

Shark Club manager David Mortensen declined comment on the allegations made against the club.

They are soliciting nominations from departments in each award division. Award winners will be selected by the GSA Teaching Enhancement Committee.

To nominate TAs, a department must submit a letter of nomination to the GSA for each TA they wish to have evaluated. Each letter should address the nominee's teaching abilities according to certain criteria.

Departments are eligible to nominate as many students as they deem necessary. Departments with less than 20 TAs are eligible to receive one teaching excellence award per division and departments with 20 or more TAs may receive 2 awards per division. Departments should be careful to provide additional $50. Department letters should be submitted to GSA by March 1.

Each nominee will be notified upon receiving the letter and will be asked to submit a second letter of nomination from a person of their choice. This second letter must come from someone who has first hand knowledge of the abilities of the nominee and can address the student's teaching abilities.

Deadline for receipt of these letters is March 21.

Evaluations of these nominees will be derived from the nomination letters. The GSA Teaching Enhancement Committee said the judging criteria is weighted equal and it is unlikely any one candidate will exhibit outstanding proficiency in all the categories. Letters of nomination should therefore outline the nominee's strong points.

The areas to emphasize are: amount and variety of teaching experience, clarity of communication, academic quality and fairness, enthusiasm, ability to motivate students and creativity/innovation.

Greeks plan leadership conference

"It's not a typical 'don't drink' type of program. I feel it will be an excellent addition to the conference."

-Rachel Turner

The annual Order of Omega Leadership Conference will be held Feb. 5 in the SUB from 9 a.m. until about 1:30 p.m. The conference is open to all members of the Greek system.

This year the theme of the conference is "Getting Back to the Basics." According to Rachel Turner, president of Order of Omega, this year's theme was carefully chosen to fit the needs of the campus.

"We thought since Greeks have received so much attention, we would like to tap the resources here on campus because the basics are just as important to our Greek System as the national attention and direction that has been given to this year," Turner said.

All of the speakers for the conference are from WSU, WSU alumni, and community. A keynote address will be given by this year's WSU Greek Advisor Anita Frid. Turner said, "We are very lucky to have Anita here this year. She will be giving a presentation on the successes of the women's chapter at WSU, illustrating how they have adopted and faired with their freshman class living in the residence halls."

Turner claimed this topic has come up repeatedly in Panhellenic meetings and she feels if the women's Greek chapters ever want to be in this type of system, "there would be less resistance to change, conflict and a smaller amount of idle time wasted in transition problems if the education process regarding this issue is made available to our Greek population now."

There will also be a presentation on Our Chapter, Our Choice given by Assistant Greek Advisor, Chris Wathrich. Our Chapter, Our Choice is a nationwide endorsed program by the National Interfraternity Council that allows chapters to explore what alcohol centered their chapter may be. By seeing where priorities lie, it gives a chapter a choice to either keep goals the same or make changes.

"Turner stated, 'One thing that was a necessity to get away from was over programming and saturation of our Greek Officers regarding alcohol related issues and the alcohol policy. We wanted to include some type of program that would aid their members to control their alcohol use."

Our Chapter, Our Choice is a unique intervention/promotive program. "It's important that chapter officers know this program is available to them and to learn exactly how it works. It's not a typical 'don't drink' type of program. I feel it will be an excellent addition to the conference," said Turner.

Other highlights of the conference will be presentations on Greek Liability Issues, Men's Fraternity issues, which will be presented by WSU Men's Greek Advisor Dan O'Connor, Creative Social Programming, Community Service, and Group Communication.

Order of Omega is a Greek Honorary comprised of Greek Officers from Greek Chapters who have met or exceeded the Greek P.F.A. On the top 15% of Greek officers are asked to join.

Applications are open to second semester sophomores, juniors, and seniors. There will be a membership drive this spring.
Wilkins’ sense of humor stays up

Tim Helmk
News Editor

The humor is moaning his friends is still with Jason Wilkins even though the fall from the third-floor window of a University of Idaho residence hall broke his back.

"It was more embarrassing hitting the ground without my underwear on than anything else," said Wilkins, who is hospitalized at Heritage Medical Center in Saltie.

Wilkins had been attempting to moon his friend Saturday evening from a third-floor window in Wallace Complex.

He had climbed up on a three-and-a-half foot hanger and pressed up against the window. The window gave out under the pressure and Wilkins fell through it to the sidewalk below.

Alcohol was not involved in this case according to university officials who have been looking into the accident. Wilkins said he had not been drinking at the time of the accident.

Kathy Bernard, UI spokesperson, said, "There really is no evidence that anyone was drinking, in much as you’d hope somebody wouldn’t do that sort of thing sober."

Wilkins stressed that he was just a prank that went wrong. "This is just a freak accident. I had seen lots of guys doing it all the time on the window. The window just gave way.

Wilkins was on his way to dinner with two friends about 5 p.m.
Saturday when they recognized some friends outside and decided to moon them. Wilkins stood on the ledge above the heater, pulled down his pants and pressed his buttocks against the window. Wilkins said that is when the window gave out on him.

As he was falling through the window, Wilkins hit his left hand, plastic and ring finger to the floor as he reached for something to grab hold of. "Just before I hit the ground, I said, ‘This is going to hurt.’ Then I hit the ground and saw the cut on my hand," said Wilkins.

Wilkins fell on his rear end which distanced his lowest four vertebrae and fractured the fifth.
He could still move his toes indicating no nerve damage.

"One doctor was telling me some kids were mooning from a car and he hit a signpost at 70 miles an hour,” said Wilkins in nurses and doctors have been finding humor in the situation and is keeping Wilkins’ spirits up.

Wilkins was able to put into a body cast to help keep his back from moving so it would heal properly.
He is not expected to return to the UI this semester but is hoping the be back in the fall. He will reenroll from the fall at his home in San Jose, Calif.

University housing officials have been meeting with residence hall students going over how to prevent future accidents such as Wilkins’.
Pranks can be fun as expressed by one official but there is always the danger it will go wrong as seen in the Wilkins prank.

Wilkins said he has seen people moon others like the one he attempted and they were fine. "I have seen three or four guys do it at once," said Wilkins. What was different in this case, he pressure on the window was too much.
Wilkins became a victim of unfortunate circumstances.

Returning books to the brand new University of Idaho library can be a royal pain in a student’s posterior area.

Often a student’s only trip to the library is for research information, and once found, students aren’t in the mood to head back. Consequently, books have the tendency to sit on kitchen tables or hide in backpacks while waiting for a good opportunity to return to the library.

When a student’s closest class is 300 yards from the library, and there is a choice between returning some books and having lunch... well, it’s really not a contest. The books slip unnoticed into “overnight” status.

To combat this problem, UI needs an enhanced book return system — one that would go nicely with the green-glazed clock tower. The existing system is basically based on the “pack it in, pack it out” mentality; while it works well for national forests, students need a more user-friendly service.

A drive-by book drop would help not only UI students, but the public. There also should be a drop box on the other end of campus, perhaps at the Student Union Building where hundreds of

Criticism

Get it straight: Idaho has plenty of parallel parking space

F or most students who grew up in Idaho, parallel parking was a mandatory lesson in driver’s education. Driver’s education was mandatory if you wanted to receive your license before you were 18-years-old.

I am among the older generation of Idahoans who were able to receive their license at the early age of 14. I’m about five feet tall and this fact made my father nervous. He was worried I wouldn’t be able to see over the steering wheel. Like most kids who grew up in a farming community, I knew how to drive before getting behind the wheel of the sporty driver’s education vehicle and in no case a wonderful red four-door 1989 Chevy Citation.

These came equipped with every thing, including the emergency brake, located directly under the instructor’s foot which he so delicately seemed to apply every time any turn was over and I was pulling into the parking lot where he thought the class was ending. As the deli tate age of 14, I was transmitted by this embarrassment in front of my friends.

My driver’s education instructors split their time between their classroom instruction and on-the-road instruction. One Superintendent, Mr. C was our classroom instructor.

Obviously, he had a higher position with the school system and wasn’t going to risk his life in a car with a bunch of students who could barely see over the steering wheel. In the passenger seat sat Mr. L, a very unfriendly man who enjoyed obnoxiously seeking offensive cough drops. He seemed like a childish cough drop-seeking man who liked to strong his emergency brake.

We, the class, knew the day began on a bad note when Mr. C stepped out from behind his podium at 7 a.m. and tied a noose around his fly. We all noticed, but weren’t sure if we should raise our hands. We had been told that in all the classes, Greg, a classmate, who had hung himself a little earlier in the situation. A red-faced Mr. C stepped back from behind the podium and continued with the lecture on parallel parking while slowly pulling up his zipper. (He thought he was being discreet about the ordeal, but we could hear the fit- tings clunking together.)

After being told how to parallel park, we all entered a lesson in parallel parking that afternoon. My attempt was to lean into the Leviathan at the brick, 35 miles an hour Mr. L said I must be within one foot of the curb to pass. That was the one and only time I was required to parallel park in dri er’s education. Years later, when my boyfriend lived in Portland, Ore., I picked him up at his dorm and we decided to drive downtown. I drove. It was the second time in my life I was expected to parallel park. Once again, I failed.

He had lived in large cities all his life and he made me learn the parallel park right there, in downtown Portland. I thought I was going to total my car and the 20 or so I had waiting to get around me. But, I learned to parallel park.

Maybe those drivers who take up three parallel parking spaces on the hill behind the Kibbie Dome need to spend more time in a parallel park. Those who squeeze their front bumper right up to someone else’s rear bumper just to try and fit in front of the yellow curb need at least take notes. Practice downtown. It’s not hard in Idaho once you get used to it, these guys are usually marked about eight feet longer than anything else on the pigeon of large vehicles. All you compact car owners would have been very convenient, not crookedly.
Letters to the Editor

Cold response standard in U.S.

What do Americans respond for. How are you doing? The vast majority of them will say, “Good.” “Pretty good.” or “Not bad, how about yourself?” Now, what do Americans say when they ask, “What’s up?” They all say, “Not much.” For this last question, everybody knows the answer to why they are asking. As an international student at UI, this always has made me believe that Americans, in most, live an artificial and standard way of life. Why is that? Well, because you almost never hear anybody complaining or showing discomfort. They try to show everything is all right at the time they are not. You almost never hear a response like, “I am feeling very bad.” or “This is not my day,” etc.

The place I come from has people expressing themselves in the fullest ways. My analysis to the case here in the United States is that most while Americans descend originally for Northern Europe, a place with a cold weather that reflected on its inhabitants. Southern Europeans, however, who are much warmer in showing their feelings, may be because they live in a relatively warm area. Another thing I noted about Americans was just after I came back to town from the spring break.

Most Americans, who I was involved with in some kind of business, said after they saw me for the first time in spring, “Hi Tariq, are you coming to our next meeting for plh, plp?” This was very annoying to me especially when it came from people whom I consider as close friends and whom I was expecting to exchange some greeting with when I first saw them.

This was annoying because I first wanted to ask them about themselves and make sure that they had a very good break with a wonderful time because I care about them and I thought they cared about me as much. I’ve always heard that this is a materialistic world, but I never could have expected that human interaction could be reduced to a business only and replace feelings of friendship.

Cartoon smears priesthood

I wish to object, in the strongest possible terms, to the political cartoon recently printed in the Argonaut depicting a priest before a child with the child’s pants down.

Although child molesting by priests has occurred, it is a documented fact that the percentage of priestly guilt of this crime is extremely minuscule, much less than one percent. Thus your publication has smeared the entire Catholic priesthood, which is made up in its vast majority by men of impeccable moral character and integrity.

There is logically only one possible message and explanation of such a tasteless portrayal of the honorable (and holy) profession of the priesthood and that is your own pathetic anti-Catholic bigotry.

March for life successful

Many thanks to the 150-200 courageous marchers who came out Jan. 22 from all over the Palouse for the Annual March for Life in Moscow.

These human rights demonstrators marked the sad anniversary of the 1973 Supreme Court decision Roe v. Wade, which legalized abortion through all nine months of the United States. Especially exciting has been the growth of the number of local business owners who have decided to stand up publicly for true human rights — the kind that don’t win you any politically correct “humanitarian” awards, the kind that aren’t “easy” or “cool” to support. The Pro-Life community will not forget you.

Thanks also to the young woman who wrote the touching poem read at the march about her life after her abortion.

Thanks to the drivers by who honked their support.

atory after a family drug delivery.

A criminal’s punishment should be based solely upon circumstances (self-defense or S & M), the duration of the victims suffering (single second or sixty days), and other such related factors.

Not long ago our legal system (or special interest groups) threatened to insert a base crime footnote into the color bar by which a bad guy is tried and sentenced. “Your mind is free,” they’d say. “Thoughts are in- vincible, even hatred — all housed inside this mind — are free from government control and regulation. But commit a crime with these in your mind and you are now open to evaluate. We can now define, and we’ll judge those thoughts which led to action.”

When we allow our government to punish (not just actions but internal workings of the mind), we accept a heavy responsibility. With mind control comes retribution (or if not, it should) and I refuse to accept this burden.

Our reaction to civil disobedience is the fulfillment upon which our nation rests. If we allow our citizens total freedom — no punishment for thought or deed — we’ll drive in aarchy. If we convince them both, we flit with fascist. If we allow citizens to be incriminated by teenagers or by funda- mentalist Christians attempting to prevent a legal medical procedure; whether a child is killed by regulation of his religion or because he happened to be lounging in McDonald’s, the punishments must be identical. No amount of malleable hatred by criminals will allow my government to assess one’s motives. No amount of fascist can be declared illegal. If so, this government is worthless.

Alcohol abuse
UI way of life

The date is Jan. 21. Within an hour, thousands of students will be on weekends in Gault Hall. He explains that in an alcohol estádumal environment, the residents of this dormitory are getting "trashed" out of their minds. He is extremely concerned about the number of sober people in the dorm on one hand."

Next, as I am walking from class
I spot two obviously underage male students entering Wallace complex with around four cases of beer. Finally, as I head into the cafeteria, I pick up the newest edition of the Argonaut. On page four, I read that a 19-year-old French Hall resident is wanted for alcohol poisoning (on Thursday night).

Sadly, while all of these incidents are signs that there is a major problem with alcohol abuse on campus, they are not by any means unrelated or unrelated. Alcohol abuse is a way of life at the University of Idaho. It does not have to be that way.

Several things can and need to be done to reduce the incidence of alcohol abuse on campus:
1) I encourage Student Advisor Services need to stop making excuses and start offering alcohol and drug education programs. He has the government funding, information and manpower even, his lack of motivation and creativity suggest that such a program is not important to the university community. I say log-wash. This campus needs a comprehensive alcohol and drug program probably more than any other campus in the United States. No amount of fiction and legal rhetoric should stop the enactment of such a program immediately. Any experienced professional within the alcohol and drug field could have such a program running within one month.
Mr. Finnan has spent several times this amount planning and organizing what has thus far amounted to a phantom program.
2) Once enacted, the university must require that all Greek organizations sponsor or attend at least one, one-hour alcohol program per semester (preferably during each week). All dormitories must be required to do the same at least once a year. The university must extensively advertise the programs so that all organizations on campus will know the availability of such programs.
3) The university community must enforce local and state laws concerning alcohol. The law that we are required to, but, for the time being we are not doing. So if a person under 21 is consuming alcohol, then he or she is breaking the law. Period. Administrators, resident advisors, professors and students need to take a stand and help enforce alcohol policies. By doing so, we can help to make our dorms, living homes and campuses clean and helping to reduce alcoholism.
I am sure many people will think these suggestions intrusive and even ridiculous. Before making such a judgment, one should contemplate these things. As a person who has been involved in and studied the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse on other campuses, I can honestly say that the University of Idaho is years behind in alcohol education and enforcement. Most other colleges, including WSU, have realized that alcohol and drug abuse is a multi-faceted problem that affects everyone. Through their realizations, policies and programs have been set up to control the problems associated with abuse. I think it is about time that UI grew up and did the same. The alternative includes property destruction, costly legal involvement, lower enrollment, personal injury and death. If the university is to be taken seriously as an institution for research and higher learning, we must take measures to control alcohol — the most destructive abuse drug in the United States.

Back off the
'woe is me'...

Over the past year and a half,
I have read the Argonaut every Tuesday and Friday. Overall, I respect the Argonaut for what it is — a fairly satisfactory student newspaper that gives the students information about what is going on here on campus. However, I feel that the Editor-in-Chief's weekly writing about her husband being away has gone on long enough.

This column, dealing with the absurdity of her husband being sent to the pointals, was relevant.
Last Friday's (Jan. 21) column was unnecessary.

I am sure that Mrs. Lyons-Hodson (or if it is M. — ‘hypotensus and their appropriate stories were never explained to me) is a very good journalist capable of writing thought provoking columns. She is, after all, the Editor.
I only want to know how long we will be subjected to her weekly
"I miss my husband updates.
" I counted at least five unnecessary references, not including the graduation mess that seemed relevant, to Rick."

The worst of which were "Since my life fell apart two weeks ago..." and "I just got lonely for someone to talk to..."

I agree, it is a shame to be separated from the person you love.
My condolences and I wish you the best of lives. But what about the people who aren't fortunate enough to have met the "right person" or anyone for that matter.
You are far better off than they are.

All I ask is that you back off the "Woe is me. I am separated from my love" drivel, and instead write thoughtful editorials that are part of your job.

Congratulations!
Seduction of S. Calif., part II

This is in response to the column written on Jan. 25 by Jeff Kapostasi concerning the “Selection of Southern California.” My letter is written on behalf of all Southern California natives who are plain sick and tired of people complaining about our state.

First, I want to address Kapostasi and his questionable knowledge about Southern California and its history. He mentioned how “people have literally died to get there.” Just after the Civil War, the original version of Alice was played out when the famous Donner family got stuck in the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Well, Mr. Kapostasi, the Donner family got stuck in the winter of 1846 and the Civil War didn’t start until 1861. Don’t worry Jeff, you were only 13 years off on your delineation of history. STRIKE ONE

The second issue that bothered me is how Kapostasi can make such general assumptions of Southern California. I’ll admit it’s unfortunate that Jeff and his family had a bad experience with visiting California. He mentioned how someone stole his mother’s purse. Well Jeff, my first weekend in Idaho, someone stole my laundry from the washing machines. However, I don’t blame any Idahoans for my laundry being stolen because I don’t know who stole it and they don’t know where the person came from who stole your mother’s purse. Who knows, it could have been someone from the MidWest! Also, Jeff included in his story of visiting San Francisco and how his parents were never able to get back into the tourist bus because of the many people who wanted to take pictures of it. I think anyone anywhere would be alarmed by a van sitting back in the street, don’t you Jeff?

For your Geography lesson of the day Jeff, San Francisco is in Northern California. Maybe you should take extra Geography 100. So now you’ve not only messed up your history, but also your Geography of California. STRIKE TWO Well Jeff, it seems you have two strikes against you, and I’m not even close to being done. For example, you mentioned how “school are a cruel joke.” In my public high school everyone had the opportunity to take honors courses, which were very challenging, so each student could choose their own destiny. Fellow peers from my graduating class currently attend schools such as UCL, Pepperdine, and UC Santa Barbara. Last time I checked, there aren’t the easiest schools to get into. I choose to attend the University of Idaho and so did Mr. Kapostasi, so as far as I’m concerned, if I came from an area that, “schools are a cruel joke,” how did the two of us end up at the same school?

Does Mr. Kapostasi have a good answer for that? And about the wise crack dealing with “90210,” Wake up Jeff, it’s only television.

I hope Mr. Kapostasi reads this letter and realizes that next time he decides to open his mouth he should have his history, geography and general knowledge of Southern California straight, or simply ask someone who proudly has been born and raised in a city you know absolutely nothing about.

STRIKE THREE, GO SIT ON THE BENCH, JEFF.

—Richard T. Hale

Seduction is supported by 70% of the human people. Cereal is supported by a tiny elite of military thugs.

I suggest we compromise, and support Malval.

ON YOUR REVEALS MEANING

Bill Frasier called in after my personalized plate column ran. I missed the call, followed up, and his complaint explained it to me.

Turns out the id on your site is a fighter pilot term used to describe the location of enemy fighters, using positions on the face of a clock. Often said around fighter pilot circles, “Watch your six,” which would be the fighter pilot’s behind.

Thanks for calling in, Bill.

Pianos bashed by music majors

Jennifer McFarland

Did you say Piano Bash? What’s that? Sounds kind of like two construction workers and a wrecking ball hurtling over a piano. Wrong.

Piano Bash is the biggest and best collection of University of Idaho virtuoso pianists from the Lionel Hampton School of Music. This year, Piano Bash is coming back from the dead — the last time it was held was 1968.

Although students may not remember this event, organizers say the 1994 revival should be the “Hot ever.”

In addition to great music, Piano Bash serves a great cause — the proceeds go to the School of Music Piano Endowment Scholarship Fund.

Piano Bash is more than your average piano concert.
This concert is for young and old alike — consisting of familiar pieces presented in a contemporary fashion.
This concert is a comic performance featuring 23 student pianists. Piano Bash is narrated throughout by the talented and funny Gary Gemberling.

The unusual aspect to Piano Bash is its setup. Students wear costumes which correspond to the music they are playing.

The classical romantic arrangements include as many as four pianos played at the same time with up to three people playing on each piano.

For example, La Gazza Ladra (The Thieving Magpie) by Rossini utilizing three pianos and 12 hands (six people). That’s two people per piano. A lot of people, music, and rehearsal need be arranged.

But organizers Sandy and Jay Macshey, professors at the School of Music, don’t seem to mind.

According to Sandy, “planning takes a long time. You try to choose pieces that match your students.”
Throughout their travels over the years, Jay and Sandy have accumulated music from all over the world — arrangements of famous works which utilize multiple pianos and people.

Some arrangements are out of print, so it is unique to hear them played.

The music is “very technical and difficult which is why we titled it [Piano Bash].” “Flying Fingers,” Sandy said, “We have chosen difficult music because we have great students.”

Students began learning music for Piano Bash Mid-Fall of last semester.

Perhaps the most entertaining portions of Piano Bash are the costumes (designed and constructed by the Macsheys) and the gestures which accompany the music.

Included in the program complete with color costumes are the “gypsy” style flamenco dance from the popular Carmen Overture, the lumbering “Elephant” and the great “Swan” from The Carnival of the Animals and the selections from Grieg’s Peer Gynt Suite.

“Mascow Chains,” played to the familiar tune, “Way You Come Home Bill Bailey,” features eight people wearing rag time costumes, including derby’s, playing parts of the piece until the “referee” blows the whistle — then the race is on.

Pianists scampor around the pianos hoping to find a chair. In the end, one person plays the fragile and the other seven participants sing along.

It is hard to imagine such a physically involved piano concert.

The finale will feature the phenomenal technical display of the pianists, as their fingers fly through Liszt’s Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2.

Listen to 120 pianists all at once flying over the keyboards, not to mention the 120 tongues panting at the same time.

The program will be performed twice on Sunday, Jan. 30, at 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Lionel Hampton School of Music.

Purchase your tickets early — they have sold out quickly in the past at this popular event.

Admission prices are $3 for undergraduates and senior citizens, $5 for adults and $12 for families. Tickets may be purchased in advance at the School of Music or at the door.
Spielberg's masterpiece
Schindler's List touched famous author director's heritage, future.

Mark McReynolds Contributing Writer

Schindler's List, the epic black and white Holocaust film by Steven Spielberg, is a story of human weakness. This is the story of Oskar Schindler, a self-proclaimed "member of the Nazi Party, manufacturist manufacturer, profiteer of slave labor and criminal." This is also a story of a man whose interests are intricately intertwined with Nazi enslavement and extermination can be seen as a hero. The first image of Oskar Schindler (Liam Neeson) is his gold Nazi lapel pin and the trapgoof of power. From that moment on, Spielberg has portrayed the complete stripping of human value from the Krakow Jewish community against Schindler's palpable pursuit of wealth. For the first hour of the movie we see Oskar Schindler, the pure businessman, imaging amous and indifferent to the sufferings around him.

He negotiates to exchange fance goods for Jewish money, takes over an enamelware factory and moves into the luxurious apartment of a wealthy Jewish family, just as the S.S. has kicked them out. Meanwhile, the cries of a young polish girl, "good-bye Jews, good-bye Jews," resonates through the theater. For the duration of this first sequence, the film imposes the audience from the violence. However, this changes with the arrival of Amnon Goeth (Ralph Fiennes), the construction of the Plaszow labor camp and the lidation of the Krakow ghetto. From this moment on, the movie proceeds a very clear course for violence, and the two sides of Oskar Schindler emerge.

There is the side that operates finely and with proficiency within the realm of the Nazi oppressors and the side that attempts to protect and ease the suffering of the Jews. What follows is the story of the tension between the two sides of Oskar Schindler. One represented by the relationship with Amnon Goeth, the other by his relationship with Izhak Stern (Ben Kingsley).

In this tension within the film, the forces of the audience, is some small way, to come to terms with the Holocaust. To answer the question, "Why?"

First, there is the relationship with Amnon Goeth, the Kommandant of the Plaszow labor camp. The character of Goeth is Nazi sadism incarnate. He seems to kill to justify himself, and views control as power, at one point saying, "We have the power to kill them, that's why we fear as Schindler responds, "We have the power to kill anymore. That's why we fear war.

More importantly, there is the relation between Izhak Stern (Ben Kingsley) and Schindler.

Stern is recruited by Schindler to run his business in the film. There is continual friction between the two — Schindler speaking in terms of business, profit, and success, and Stern who believes that one can speak in such national terms in a world over run by the irrational.

Here there is the constant problem of communication between those speaking from the world of the victimized and those speaking from the world of the victimizer. This culminates in an argument over the phrase "special treatment." In humiliation Schindler backs, "Do I have to invent a whole new language?" Stern responds quickly, "Yes, I think so."

SEE LIST PAGE 13

Ultimately, the bond that has grown between Schindler and the Jews in his factory is too powerful to ignore.

They are no longer "labor," but individuals, men and women with names and faces.

As the war comes to a close, Schindler makes a choice to use the wealth that he has accumulated to protect the lives of those who helped him make it.

In the process, Schindler, the consummate businessman, spends millions of Reichsmarks to bribe "his" Jews out of Auschwitz, to construct a new factory in Czechoslovakia to ensure their survival.

This is a story of human weakness, but it is also a story of heroism. Schindler's heroism is that he acted humanely in a time of great inhumanity.

That he did not permit himself to remain indifferent to the world around him, and in doing so renewed confidence in the "autonomous, dignified human."
Rub-a-dub-dub in a rental tub

Dave Lewis
Staff Writer

Even if you don’t want to spend big bucks to buy a hot tub, you can still bubbly your bones. It is now possible, in Moscow, to rent a tub for the night.

Ron Tsch, owner of Hot Tubs To Go with a franchise based in Pullman, will deliver and set up a portable rental hot tub at your home. The homeowner must provide the water, $110 volt electricity to operate the pump and the people to enjoy the tubbing experience.

Tsch and his manager is Pullman, Wes Clemont will do the rest. A nine foot tub was set up Tuesday afternoon at Delta Tau Delta fraternity as a promotional tactic. All UI living groups’ names were placed in a drawing, with the group drawn winning free use of the tub for two days. Clemont used two garden hoses to fill the tub, starting at about 12:30 p.m. The tub holds about 900 gallons of water and wasn’t completely full at 3:30 p.m.

I checked the water temperature at that time. It was surprisingly warm, almost hot. This fast warm up is because the water is circulated through a high efficiency propane heater even while the tub is filling.

Delt member and sophomore advertising major, Matt Moen, inquired as he waited for the tub to fill. “Did we really get drawn, or did we just have the best vibe?”

Tsch started renting hot tubs in 1985 at Penn State.

He designed and builds the lightweight tubs that come complete with an electric pump to provide bubbles, and a propane heater. Tsch calls the design of his tubs “rocky-proof.”

The tub is made in sections and is constructed of the same soft but strong materials that hot doggers boards and better concrete covers are made from. A liner is used to keep water from leaking at the seams. One of these rental tubs is quite inviting and strong enough to allow users to sit on the edge if they need to cool off.

A six foot tub is light to carry, about 57 pounds. The heater and pump are not inside, as in a residential tub, but sit on the ground next to the tub and are connected by plastic pipes. Even a nine foot tub

Vocal duo to take stage in Vandal Cafe tonight

Coffeehouse brings favorite Dalton back to town

Tristan Trotter
Staff Writer

Tonight at 8 p.m. in the Vandal Cafe in the Student Union Building, the varied, virtuoso sounds of Jim and Maggi Smith-Dalton, a husband-wife string/vocal duo, will fill the stage. ASUI Productions is pleased to welcome these performers, who live and work locally as musicians and teachers.

Their music is a colorful combination of blues, folk, pop, and original material. Jim Smith-Dalton creates these sounds on a ten-string guitar and augments it with his rich, supro voice.

The Daltons are originally from the East. Both natives of New Jersey, the pair met through a mutual acquaintance and have shared a life of music ever since.

From 1984 to 1992, the duo lived and performed in Connecticut, using the name “Chastened.”

They also appeared on public television and radio, and taught classes at various universities.

Their life in the East had fostered the belief that it was the “only place to live and play music.”

But in 1992, they moved to Moscow, having realized that there was a whole country to be musically explored.

Besides performance, the Daltons also devote a great deal of time to teaching. In the October 29, 1992, issue of The Edithionist, Smith-Dalton indicated that, “The educational work we do in schools is important. . . . For many students it is revealing because there is no light show or booming amplifiers. Some are amazed that we can make music with just a guitar and voice.”

This is certainly verified by the pages of praise the duo has received from the media throughout their years of performances.

Critic Denise Wilson, who saw the Daltons in 1991, expressed her typically strong appreciation of any group’s attempt to play too many different kinds of music.

After experiencing the Daltons’ presentation, the results “proved that [her] assumptions were wrong.”

Frank Morkling, of the newsletter “artlift,” referred to one particular Dalton program in June, 1990, as “the Victorian parlor show, popular family entertainment in a gentle time before records, radio, television, and the movies.”

Maggi and Jim Dalton have made several recordings, including Wayfarer Stranger: Songs of Yearning, and Wild Reckless Waves: Songs of River and Sea, both released in 1989.

The duo’s other contributions in the name of music and education range from a history in directing children’s choirs, to research on the quality and influence of music throughout the world, to developing music therapy programs in schools for the multiply-handicapped.

They have created a variety of tools for teaching music in schools and offer a number of courses and seminars at various times of the year.

Don’t miss this opportunity to expose yourself to an evening of musical excellence: come share the sounds of Jim and Maggi Smith-Dalton tonight, at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

Jim and Maggi Smith-Dalton are famous for their folk music.

Choral festival unites Washington students

More than 250 students from five Washington high schools and Spokane Community College will perform in the 1994 Choral Festival Saturday at Washington State University. The event is being sponsored by the WSU School of Music and Theater Arts.

As a result, this year’s festival will feature a number of choirs, including the WSU Madrigal Singers and the WSU Vocal Jazz Ensemble and Crimson Company.

An evening concert at 8 p.m. in the Kimborough Hall Auditorium, it will include a number of selections performed by the group’s choirs: “Adoramus Te,” by Quinon Gaspard, “El Vino,” arranged by Mark Wilburg; “Kyrie,” from the Solemn Mass in A by Simon Sechter; “Come to Me, O My Love,” by Allen Peter; and “God is Come Up With a Mighty Noise,” by James McCray.

WSU faculty members Lori Wist and Paul Klemme will direct performances and sessions during the festival.

Visiting choirs include those from Pullman High School with director Don Bruce, Redmond High School with director Gino Hartill, Shadle Park High School with director Randy Funk, Thomas Jefferson High School with director Laird Thornton, Weston High School with director Don Jackson, and Spokane Falls Community College with director Charles Zimmerman. Both the evening concert and all concerts in Kimborough Hall throughout the day are free and open to the public.

can easily be stored in a standard size pick-up. Tosh said his company has placed a six foot tub on the balcony of an apartment complex. Plans are being made to produce an intermediate size tub to complement the already available six and nine foot models. The new tub will be seven and one half feet in diameter. Clement said, "We have the plans to build a twelve foot tub but we would only do so if the market demanded it. That would be a very large hot tub."

Hot Tubs To Go can usually deliver a tub with only one day notice although two days would guarantee delivery. One tub was delivered when ordered at 9:00 p.m. Tosh said, "We just went out and set it up. I think they must have talked all night."

The cost of a six foot tub for one night is $125. A nine foot tub is $230. Tosh says "The price doesn't seem so high if you figure that seven or eight people sit comfortably in the small tub. The record is 15. With the nine foot tub 15 are comfortable, but the record is 30. If you divide the money between that many users, it's really quite affordable."

Canadian band wows U.S.

Jennifer Karlen

They met on a school trip to a pig-calling contest and recently their first cassette passed the platinum mark in Canada. Mosy Frivous is the band and most of the songs from their connection causing cassette are on the album Bargainville which will be released in the U.S. Feb. 7. Mosy Frivous is made up of Mike Ford, Murray Faster, Jean Ghomeshi and David Matheson. It was a few years after that anonymous pig-calling contest that the talented group dropped the name "Mosy Frivous" and started performing on the street and in pubs. They released their first cassette in 1992 which secured number one on the Canadian Independent Charts. That summer they opened for Bryan Adams, Bob Dylan and other artists.

They describe themselves by saying, "We came after the baby boomers but before the computer revolution, somewhere between the second season of 'Welcome Back Kotter' and first season of 'WKRP.' The entire career of 'Sly' took place in our lifetimes."

Now they are releasing their debut album in the U.S. through Atlantic Records. Proudly produced by themselves, Bargainville really does have something for everyone. Full of wit, political satire, comedy and dark humor Bargainville takes the listener on a ride through the problematic, emotion filled '90s.

The lyrics are to the point and usually thought provoking. The band speaks to you clearly through their songs, within their most popular bands today where one has to wade through a lot of fluff and personal symbolism to understand the meaning of the song.

The music, in addition to the lyrics, is unique. The band draws from a musical library of selec-...

Jason:

Jason just wants to make it perfectly clear from the very beginning that he is in full support of the do-it-yourself appendage removal. Hey, if your significant other is bothering you, don't try to talk it out and certainly don't try counseling — those never work.

Now about the question of what to do with the stumps. This is a serious matter indeed, and one that requires thought and planning. First of all, timing is important. You have got to do it when the stump is least expected it. The appendage has to be vital, but not too vital. You have got to make him think about the cost of his ways every day for the rest of his life. Even if you have only been dating a short while, remember he deserves it and you're worth it. Jason would suggest a nice candle light dinner, a slow dance and then getting down to business. Make sure he doesn't have any wine during dinner so that may dull his sense of pain. You want him completely aware.

Now the question of what to chop. The penis is old news, the leg has been used and Van Gogh did the ear. It's time to be original. Jason would suggest getting a can of pepper spray that bothers cats on beans. I'm sure any cutting outlet would have it but the budget conscious mungler would always check discount store. So, you get him with the pepper spray to dawn him and let the carving begin. Jason would have to say the nose. Go for the nose. The nose is special because he'll look pretty silly without it, and it's something that can be kept in a small box for enjoyment later on. A bonanza of sorts. Be sure and use a sharp knife so you get a nice clean cut. Jason sees no point in having a ragged and jagged trophy. After the attack, be sure to act icy and drive him to the hospital, this will be good for the pending trial. Of course, this advice goes for any disgruntled spouse. If your special someone just isn't getting the job done anymore, make 'em pay. Lorena did and all she got was a private counselor. It's time to take charge. It's worth it. Lorena did it, and so can you.

Responsible hunting bags elk

Dave Lewis
Contributing Writer

I was putting a new door on the laundry room when my wife said, "Dave, the phone's for you." The caller was my friend Dana. He asked my son Chad and me to go elk hunting.

Dana know where we might get an elk. Since both Chad and I had cow permits, and Dana didn't, he proposed we hunt as a sort of team.

After hanging up the phone, we immediately grabbed our rifles, jumped into the pick-up and went on our way to meet him. My wife didn't seem exactly happy over the quick change of plans, but she has always been practical. I promised to finish the door as soon as I got home.

It was only a few miles to the area where we hoped to find a wild elk. There we met Dana and his family. We agreed they would hunt slowly through the patches of wood and brush, and we would wait near an opening. If we were lucky, one of us just might get a shot. I figured we had a good chance to get an elk that day.

I was anxious, because I'd shot just one elk in my life. That was many years before. I'd shot elk every year since, but had that far been unsuccessful. The elk I managed to kill was the most unlucky animal I ever encountered. Proof of this is the way it met its demise.

I had been hunting hard for about three hours at the Turnagain Mountain, east of Seward, Idaho, when I lost interest in elk hunting and started thinking about my girlfriend.

It occurred to me I should save her inaids into a tree to prove my undying love for her. I was nearly finished with my devotional when I heard a noise. I looked around the tree to see the object of my dreams. A large cow elk was running through the trees and brush some distance away.

I could think of was to shoot quickly and often. Aiming wasn't my priority. I lighted the flashlight on my rifle and pulled the trigger. I don't even remember seeing the crosshairs. Not waiting to check whether or not hit the animal, I leered another shell into the chamber for the second shot and tried to find her in the scope.

I was disappointed. With or without the scraps I couldn't find the elk anywhere. The big cow had vanished without a trace or a sound. It was the very absence of sound that kept me from wasting the elk even then in the threats of death. I was sure I'd missed.

However, I couldn't hear it running through the brush anymore, and I distinctly remembered what my dad had told me many times before: "Whenever you shoot at game, or even if you think you missed by a mile, always go look for blood."

I walked over to the spot, where my eternal surprise I found a dead elk. One shot to the head did it. I still can't believe the luck of that shot. I never did finish carving those initials. Three years later, however, I did marry the girl.

As I came back to the present, I saw Chad standing at the edge of the field where we hoped the elk would come through. I was in the middle of the field, in plain sight, wondering if I'd ever stupid to aim elk in the area, and to my son.

I didn't have the urge to worry, because very no cow elk emerged from the woods, saw me, just as I knew she would, turned and ran on an angle away from both Chad and me. Chad's shots rang out, followed a fraction of a second later by mine.

The ground was dry that day, so the many bullet holes missing the elk made the dust fly where they struck the ground. The elk, with the impetus of death behind her, was running even harder now. She was kicking up even more dust. Until the shooting stopped, it looked and sounded like a battle raging in a clearing.

Chad had fired eight shots. I'd fired seven. By the time we finished, the elk was dead but it was a tour-up which one of us had killed it. I secretly wished to believe I killed the elk. Not knowing for sure, I asked Chad what he thought.

I could tell by the look on his face that he knew in his heart his shot killed the elk. But, my wife, faithful, thirteen-year-old son said, "Dad, I didn't have an elk for thirteen years, and you've gone much more than a week, seventeen years, I think. You better tag it. I think you shot her."

Rifle was picked up anyway — I don't take that kind of charity. I certainly am glad Chad tagged that elk, because later, when we found the bullet, it was obvious that the gun Chad was using.

My rifle was a 300 Winchester Magnum, while Chad was hunting with an Enfield, 30-06. We were shooting reloading that day and both guns, though using different cartridges, were loaded with the same type of bullet. However, the grooves in the 300 magnum are narrower than the 30-06.

I was proud of my son for being able to shoot a running elk and a little embarrassed I couldn't. It isn't true we only get what we deserve. I guess we deserve to spend a lot more time on the practice range.

Editor's Note: Karin Kaasik is from Estonia. She recently toured the western states. This is the second in a 3-part series about her trip.

The first notion of the ocean was mysterious. We felt a huge body of water near us, but could not distinguish it in the night's darkness. Instead, we heard the thumping noise of waves and imagined them breaking down against the coast.

This was the first picture of the Pacific Ocean. We hit Coastal Highway 101 late at night in Lincoln City, Ore., beginning our Christmas tour to the southwestern part of the country. We planned to visit several well-known spots in the western states, including Redwood, Joshua Tree, Death Valley and Grand Canyon National Parks. I even sweet-talked my companion Mike into going to Hollywood, justifying that as a foreigner I had an excuse to see the framed places.

So we took the scenic Highway 101 down to Los Angeles, following the coasts of Oregon and California. Magnificent views of giant ocean waves, sometimes 180 feet below the trial, as well as flat beaches and sand dunes, opened up to us.

We enjoyed the coast more than any of the large cities.

The highway also passes through the redwood forests bounded within a narrow 450-mile strip along the coast from southern Oregon to central California. Even in Estonia I had known of the existence of

The outdoors, especially beyond the edge of the beaten trail, is a wide-open place with few safety nets to catch the unfortunate person who fails to plan ahead.

First, never leave home without telling someone. Leave a message on their answering machine if necessary. Second, know and practice the principles of survival. Part of this is asking at your destination about the area you plan to camp in. Third, be prepared with a survival kit designed for your needs and environment.

The idea, when telling someone, is to give information which will let you be found if necessary. Say where and when you are going, when you’ll return, and what you will do if you deviate from your plan. Leave the message on someone’s answering machine, if you have to, and write it in a note to leave on your kitchen table.

When you arrive, stop at the nearest ranger station, information booth, or local store to find out the latest information on the specific location where you’ll be staying.

After disaster strikes, the primary goal is to keep your head. Recognize that in any survival situation, you’re going to be uncomfortable, and maybe even worse.

The U.S. Army, noted for its ability to put people in difficult situations, also teaches its people how to get out alive. Part of this instruction is in a book entitled Simply Survival, June 1992, and numbered PM 21-76. It’s available from the U.S. Government Printing Office. Much that follows comes from this book.

“Remember the key word SURVIVAL—”

S—Size up the situation. This rests on taking stock of where you are. Find out your physical condition, and take appropriate steps to improve or maintain it.

U—Undue haste makes waste. Plan first, then take action.

R—Remember where you are. If you know exactly where you are, you might be able to get to where you should be. Be aware, though, search and rescue workers prefer you to stay put once lost.

V—Vanguard fear and panic. You can help yourself keep calm by doing a repetitive, useful task. If you are immobi-lized or injured, say the multiplication tables or recite a favorite verse over and over again.

L—Learn skills. Remember Clint Eastwood as Gary Highway in Heartbreak Ridge. “Improvises, adapt and overcome.” You’ll be amazed at what you can do with a little intelligent freedom of thought when your life is on the line. Things like being able to bend a key into a hook to catch crawdads, or using an evergreen as a shelter do two things: they make your situation a little less grim, and they make you feel good about yourself.

A—Always think about the animals and bugs do can give you helpful clues.

L—Live by your wits. Learn basic skills. Knowing basic things and then expanding on that knowledge to develop a pattern of survival is a sure way to push one’s self respect.

The basic things can be learned from a myriad of sources, from picking the brain of an experienced outdoors person to reading books like the Boy Scout Manual. Classes are also offered by various clubs and organizations, like the Sierra club and Fish and Wildlife Department. The Basic Hunter’s Course, sponsored by the Department of Fish and Game, has a section which gives a cursory examination of the subject, as well as providing a book which goes over quite a few of the do’s and don’ts.

If you are philosophically opposed to any of these sources, try the local library. Every library will have something, though perhaps not with the practicality offered by these sources. Each situation is going to be different. Each person will react differently. The key thing is to use the one survival tool on person is ever without — the brain.

Huge trees on the western coast. I had seen pictures of these giants with tiny people standing below them. The Park Service's Redwoods brochure appropriately calls this species of tree "the world's tallest living thing, king of its race.

The magnificent Coast Redwood is indeed the world's tallest known tree and one of the oldest. At the height of 367 ft it is higher than the Statue of Liberty. We hiked in one redwood called Big Tree, which was "only" 304 ft high, and 1,200 years old. It is amazing to think that it was already 1,000 years old when Columbus arrived.

Redwoods National Park is much younger than the trees it surrounds. Founded in 1968, it is now also a World Heritage site and International Biosphere Reserve. It is usually a busy place.

"We don’t have many visitors now. It’s pretty slow, some 25 to 100 people a day," tells Jay Moeller, a ranger at the park. "But in summer...we have thousand!"

He pointed to a tree in a photograph on the wall of the Visitor Center. "This is the tallest tree...but you can't really tell, as it’s only a couple of feet taller than the others."

He is right; when driving the road or hiking through the forest, all the trees are practically the same size.

One of the attractions near the park is the Drive-Through Tree. After paying $1 for the pleasure, we could literally say that we had driven through a tree! Out of the Redwoods, we followed the ocean coast again, with miles and miles of beaches, sea stacks, tidepools, and cliffs. Rubbed, with stretches of steep, rocky cliffs broken by miling slopes, it is largely wandered by humans.

While driving south, every day became warmer. I was ready for my first Christmas under palm trees.

Wildcats hand Cravers his first Big Sky loss Thursday

If there was one thing Big Sky hoopst didn’t receive for Christmas, it was a see saw loss.

Last night’s matchup between the men’s basketball team and the Weber State Wildcats graciously provided such a gift.

Late in the game, Idaho trailed 79-73 with 1 minute, 58 seconds left before they began their comeback.

Two back to back threes by seniors Orlando Lightfoot and Deon Watson cut the Wildcat lead to 81-77. On the Vandals’ following possession, Watson dinked the ball with 13 ticks remaining on the game clock.

Weber State guard Robbie Johanson, who finished with 28 points, was fouled with 11 seconds left and made one of two free throws attempts to give the Vandals one last chance.

The Vandals took advantage of the opportunity as Mark Leslie nailed a 3-pointer from the baseline with three seconds left in regulation to tie the score at 82. Weber State’s Johnson Moore narrowly missed a 35-footer which sent the game into overtime.

In overtime, the Vandals quickly established a four-point lead. At the 2:27 mark, Vandals forward Nate Gardner stung an offensive rebound and converted the putback.

Two free throws by Weber State’s Kim Smith gave the Vandals a 90-86 lead. A Gardner outside jumper with only nine remaining cut the lead to two points.

Then the drama once again ensued. Weber State tried to take the ball with 28 seconds left.

Tontz adds competitiveness

Amy White
Staff Writer

The Vandals' men's and women's tennis teams are getting into swing this week playing two important matches on the road. The men are playing in Colorado Springs, Colorado, and the women are in Chicago, Ill., area.

The men's team is looking stronger than anticipated with several returning players as well as a new player from San Diego, Calif. Rusty Tontz is a senior and head coach Dave Scott believes he has added a new dimension to the team. In the invitational this weekend, he will most likely be playing in the No. 2 spot behind returning junior Mark Hudley. However, Scott said these first matches will determine the tone the team will take for the remainder of the season.

Due to the strong line-up, there is a competitiveness among the players that Scott believes can only push them to work harder. Scott said, "the line up could change at any time, which is very exciting." He also added, "the team is beginning to believe in themselves." This is a reference to the competitiveness the players are experiencing against their own team mates.

There are two other returning juniors; Niren Lal and Ryan Shilton, who will three seniors; Doug Anderson, Chris Daniel, and Maxwell Mehren. Keith Bradford is the sole freshman.

The juniors are a strong force with Mark Hudley seated in the No. 1 slot. Scott has high expectations for the New Zealand native. "Scott said it is a considerable amount of pressure on the No. 1 position, and Hudley is a very talented player. Lal and Shilton are two of the better players in the Northwest region and are additionally capable of exerting considerable efforts this season.

The men's team has not gone on a road trip early in the season but will do so before the outcome, so the upcoming learning experience for future seasons. They will be playing the Air Force Academy, Colorado State and Weber State. Weber State will immediately affect UCI's confidence without season.

As for the women, their overall talent has been very young. However, this young team will hopefully prove valuable. This pertaining to a freshman from New Zealand named Gwen Nikolai who plays No. 1 for the UI and was ranked No. 4 nationally in New Zealand.

The women's team overall has one senior found in Leah Smith. The rest of the roster includes four jumsters; Michelle Bargen, Shirley Deuster, Emily Walpole and Niren Yates; two sophomores, Erin Cienlo and Jamie Herberton and already mentioned freshman Nicola. This weekend, the women will play Bradley University, Illinois State and Northern Illinois.

Scott thinks Illinois is down this season, and the women may get a jump start with some early victories this season.
Lumberjacks travel to the Kibbie

Matthew D. Andrew
Sports Editor

On Saturday night, the University of Idaho will host the Lumberjacks to a game of hoops where the men’s basketball team plays in final home game of a three-game series before going on the road. The Vandals will match up with Northern Arizona University after losing to Weber State Thursday. NAU ended its three-game losing streak when the Lumberjacks beat out EWU, who are at the bottom of the conference, 76-72 in Cheney, Washington, but will have its home Big Sky Conference game Thursday. The UI has dominated the series between the two universities, encountering that date back to the 1965-66 campaign. That season the Vandals defeated the Jacks 122-109 in Moscow. Idaho won the first four games before NAU put everything together and defeated the Vandals, 64-54, in Flagstaff. The Vandals are on a 10-game winning streak versus the Lumberjacks, with the last NAU win coming at the end of the 1988 season, 72-61. Last time the Jacks won in Moscow was during the 1965-66 campaign when NAU defeated Idaho, 82-58. The Vandals own an impressive 19-9 record at home while the Jacks have mastered a 11-12 squad in Flagstaff. NAU coach Howard Morrill is 0-7 versus the Vandals. As far as the UI is concerned, they have managed to win 6-0 while Deon Watson has been on the team. Orlando Lightfoot averages 21.0 points per game and 7.0 rebounds. In the last game against EWU, Lightfoot scored 19 points on seven for 14 shooting, as well as putting three 3-pointers in the orange. Of his last 55 attempts, he made 29 field goals, including 23 of his last 43 pointers—leading the Big Sky Conference. Watson on the other hand, has exceeded three straight double-doubles, and is the only in the BSC player to average double figures in both points and rebounds. He is the league rebound leader at 10.5 per game and has had three 16-rebound-games. Watson averages 7.5 points per game and 5.7 rebounds per game against Northern. Idaho brings in a core group which it needs to look at for points. They have been looking to Jason Word, Brad Snyder, Ken Pakkala, and John Rondeno. There has been a strong source of much needed power from freshmen Chancellor Davis. Rondeno has the team record for the season at 28 points against Sacramento State, followed by Word and Snyder at 26. As far as conference is concerned only two players have started all four games. NAU will take the past five games finished second to last and did last. Returning star Honorable Mention-All BSC Rondeno is consistent looking as a team leader. Last year in game 16 for NAU, the Vandals traveled to Flagstaff and NAU only managed 16 points in the second half when they lost to Idaho 29-53. The game was close throughout most of the night as the Vandals were only able to build a double digit lead once and that was in the first half. NAU took the lead momentarily in the second, when the Jacks went on an 8-1 run. Word was the top dog for the Lumberjacks with 16. Lightfoot is the returning member to the team as far as leading scorers are concerned. Idaho and NAU met up for a second time, however its was staged in Moscow. At the time, the Vandals were leading the conference and proved to be too much before spending the Jacks 78-51. Watson and Lightfoot posted a balanced attack for the Vandals at 13 and 11 respectively. Once again, Word was the top scorer at 17. The UI opened up the game in the second half while looking at advantage of several Jack’s turnovers. Before tonight’s game, Lightfoot stood at 269 points and setting a conference record for scoring and has already broken away as the UI all-time leading scorer with 1,730 points.

Last season Lightfoot hit 37 3-pointers all season and so does broken that seven. He also leads the BSC in scoring, averaging 24.1 points per game this season than him at 8-3. He is. The Vandals are on winning in 74, and fifth in 3-point field goal percent- age with a 40.6%. The Vandals are on winning in 74, and fifth in 3-point field goal percent- age with a 40.6%. The game will be held in the Kibbie Dome with tip-off at 7:00 p.m. The next home game will be Feb. 11 and 12 as the University of Montana and Montana State travel to make up lost ground.

which gave the Vandals one final attempt to tie or win. After a Wildcat slip, only six precious seconds remained. Lightfoot tipped the inbound pass and fired up a 25-footer for the win and a 71-63 victory.

The 90-88 Wildcat victory improved their Big Sky record to 5-2 and 13-7 overall. The Vandals suffered their first Big Sky loss and dropped to 6-3 in conference standings and 12-6 overall.

It was the third consecutive victory for Weber State on Idaho's home floor. The overall series continues to swing in Weber State's favor at a dominating 49-18 lead.

"That was a difficult game. I thought they played excellent basketball," remarked Wildcat head coach Ron Abegglen. "I was really pleased with the rebounding. The Vandals are a tremendous rebounding team."

The game marks the first time this season Idahobitset outwound- ed, although it was a minimal margin of 46-47.

"We kind of gave that one away," said defeated Laslee. "We played pretty good as a team down the stretch. They played with a lot of confidence, like they thought they were supposed to win here."

Lightfoot, who experienced both hot and cold shooting streaks, ended with a game-high 22 points on 13-28 shooting and along with Watson, led the Vandals in rebounds with 10.

Lightfoot added, "I rushed a lot of shots and played bad defensively. I just rushed shots near the end."

Part of the offensive success for the Vandals was their own free throw shooting and Weber State's solid free throw shooting. The Vandals, while connecting on 49 percent of their field goals, converted just 12-26 free throws, compared to the Wildcats' 22-32.

Additionally, the refereeing was extremely inconsistent, as questionable calls were made for both teams, resulting in false, fleeting, and eventual discontinuation. Weber State's percentage shooting was also a blur in Idaho's behind.

Johnson nailed 9-of-17, 3-pointers, many of them in clutch situations, and Jim DeGraciaeff's hit of seven and became the Wildcat's second leading scorer with 16.

Off the bench Joe Cravens commented, "A big game like that, it comes down to Orlando shooting a three at the end to win it. I'll take that twelve more times this year. It was a great college game. We missed too many free throws and big shots to win a game like this."

Saturday, the Vandals will tip off once again as the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks play in the Idaho Dome. Game time is 7:30.

Sunday's, Anyway. It is only fair to have a no-so team come around every so often or we would be pampered. Who knows, maybe with all the down play on the Bowl itself and the Bills, a reversal of fortune will be in store.

Imagine 30 seconds left, 26-24, Bills down and with the ball at the midfield stripe. Time-out is called Kelly runs to the sidelines as the rest of the team follows.

Chalkboard is out. And now. we'll turn to a commercial. We're back. Buffalo in the huddle, they break. Both sides line-up, Kelly calls the stop, and there it is. Deep into the pocket he goes, looking down field. He sees no one, going hole in front of him as he takes off for the solo to the 40, the 30, the 25 and out-of-bounds at around the 22.

Bills with one time out left, 12 seconds left and they use the time out. A field goal just won't do it. Bills back on the field, Thurman Thomas in the backfield, Ball is snapped. Kelly looks around. Thomas in the flat for the screen and they dump him the ball. No one within yards as he receives the ball on the 15 yard line.

He advances down the field to the 2 yard line. To the Coverage, PUMBLE is the two teams scrumNear the ball and Leon Lett has just knocked the ball out of bounds with three seconds left on the clock. Ball is going to be placed on the...it appears they are going to put the ball on the four yard line.

There are really only two possible ways the story can end up. Either they win or they lose. We all have our own opinions and we will just end it at that. Drive safely.
