Tie burning permit put on hold

Division of Environmental Quality says burning application incomplete

Megan Harris
Contributing Writer

The Idaho Division of Environmental Quality told the University of Idaho Jan. 27 its application for a temporary railroad tie burning permit is incomplete.

The application for a three-month test-burning permit was received Dec. 3, 1993 and was expected to be approved by state and university officials. The DEA says the application didn’t include a list of all possible emissions from burning railroad ties.

The DEQ requested UI update in application with the Boise office after burning railroad ties from June 1 to August 25, 1993.

...The application included studies of similar railroad ties burning in the county that burn railroad ties, said Mike Simons of the DEQ.

Railroad ties can vary and the DEQ wants to know about the materials and the process. The test shown to the UI hotline said DEQ regional administrator Greg Tonsdale in Lewiston.

Questions have risen over the preservative used to coat the railroad ties, concerns, which contain several toxins. Kirkland says the levels at which the toxins are released during the burning vary far below the legal limit of 200 parts per million.

Tonsdale said the university’s burning program is a proven ground for the energy recovery industry. The UI burned in the 1980’s in order to utilize more cost-effective fuels, he said.

The boiler was built in 1986 and was first tested in 1988 using waste wood chips, said Kirkland. The UI received its permit to test-burn railroad ties in March 1991, but it wasn’t until fall 1992 that a company stepped forward to work with the UI and provide the railroad ties, Kirkland said.

Burning railroad ties is far cheaper than the $20 to $25 the UI currently pays for the ton of waste wood chips.

Burning the chips releases water vapor which produces the white plume from the boiler at Sixth and Nine streets and is responsible for producing most of the university’s heat. The process gets rid of the millions of unused railroad ties which would otherwise be dumped into landfills, said Kirkland.

Kirkland said Moscow air quality checks performed during 1993 burning would barely change the activity at the UI boiler. The emissions from burning railroad ties are less noticeable than those from the Donahoe said.

The DEQ felt the UI hadn’t presented enough information on the chemistry of burning of railroad ties for the quality of emission tests, said Tonsdale.

Tonsdale said the UI burned railroad ties.

SPOKANE, Wash.—James R. Harvey, president, chief operating officer and a member of the board of directors for the Washington Water Power Company, retired all positions with WWP today after 27 years with the company.

After a long and distinguished career, the 56-year-old Harvey said he is stepping down now confident the leadership is in place to successfully carry the company forward.

“...The electric and natural gas business has become increasingly competitive in recent years,” Harvey said. “But we are well-prepared with dedicated employees and strong leadership at all points of the organization to ensure our continued success.”

Paul A. Redmond, WWP board chairperson and chief executive officer, will temporarily fill the role of the company president until the WWP board of directors can evaluate the vacancy at their regularly scheduled meeting this month.

“Jim (Harvey) has been a powerful champion of change in our company whose vision and leadership have been fundamental to our utility’s success,” Redmond said. “Jim and I have known each other for the better part of thirty years. He has been a true friend and a valued employee. I wish him all the best in his retirement.”

WWP is the main supplier of electrical energy to the Moscow area and the University of Idaho. Students and staff rely on this power in class and at their homes whether they live on-campus or off. WWP owns the Pacific Northwest and serves these areas with electric power and natural gas. UI students who live off-campus probably write monthly checks to this company for their electricity bill.

Harvey announced his retirement in December to WWP. He has since made preparations to leave and help get things in order to train the his replacement.

Harvey joined WWP in 1966 as an associate engineer and advanced through a number of positions in the natural gas organization in 1984. He was elected chief operating officer and a member of the company’s Board of Directors in May 1985. Harvey was elected to president of the company in May 1988. Harvey has been credited with keeping WWP the largest firm in Washington State.

Harvey has served as a member of numerous professional associations. He served as president of the Northwest Electric Light and Power Association and as a member of the NELPA’s board of directors. He is also a member of the board of directors of the American Gas Association and the Pacific Coast Gas Association.

Harvey is an active member of the community, serving as a member and advisor in numerous civic and charitable organizations. He is a member of the Spokane Area Chamber of Commerce and has been involved in Momentum, an en...

Students dedicated to Forestry College magazine

Shari Irten
Troll Writer

Some University of Idaho students just spend their four to five years on campus to get their degree. Others, such as students in the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences, go out of their way to become involved in their college. Students involved with the production of the college publication, the Idaho Forester, spend their time during the year putting together this award-winning magazine.

"There are about five to 18 students putting it out. They do just about everything," said Joseph Ulissin, forest resources department head. "We rarely have many people carry over from one year to the next. I think they just get burned out.

The publication these students work on includes professional articles, descriptions of college activities and contributed material. These ingredients make up a magazine which has won first place in the Society of American Foresters (SAF) Student Publication Contest two years in a row. The Idaho Forester has won first place eight times since 1979.

Ulissin said the college will try to have its 1994 publication out by the third week in April, which is Natural Resource Week.

Another award-winning group in the Forestry College is the student chapter of the SAF. The chapter has placed the last four years, at first place the first three years and second place last year.

"SAF is a professional organization for foresters in the U.S.," said former chapter president Bill Higgins. "Many faculty and students belong." SAF's goal, said Higgins, is to "create a professional relationship with the college and community." The chapter helps host Community Forest Stewardship Day, where they provide the public with information about forestry. They also participate in Adopt-A-Highway, sell Christmas wreaths and other activities. Last year, the chapter logged in over 300 hours of community service.

Higgins also said the chapter works with students and faculty in the college. They have "professors who Higgins said are "professors we get to host a social gathering for students."

Despite its title, the chapter is open to any major in the College of FWR and sponsors guest speakers in a natural resource field to come and speak.

SAF, which stems from the Associated Foresters created in 1969, also accredits college curriculum.

Marble, Bennett to ring wedding bells

Efforts to improve relations among ASU officials seems to be working. ASU President John Marble and ASU Senator Krucer Bennett announced their engagement at the last senate meeting. Vice President Allison Lindholm is also engaged to Justin Touchstone. Touchstone is Chair of the ASUI’s Recreational Advisory Board.

ASUI committees filled with nine people

The senate unanimously approved nine appointments made by ASU President John Marble to various ASU committees last Wednesday. Sarah Lynn Correll, John Hoyt, and Jamie Heberlein were appointed to the Activities Board. Amy Olson and Felicia Rogers were both appointed to the Student Ininer Board. Craig B. Coyle and Matthew Andrew were approved for the Recreational Advisory Board. Jennifer Gabiola was appointed to the Academic Board. Beck Young was appointed to the Union Board.

ASUI-ASBSU plan spirited cooperation

In a spirit of cooperation, ASU President John Marble announced the ASUI will be assisting Boise State University’s student government in lobbying the state legislature for money to build a new classroom center for the BSU campus.

Described by Marble as “the most pressing higher educational need” in the state, funds for the building were not included in the proposed state budget submitted by Governor Cel D. Andrus. The BSU’s student government, in exchange, has agreed to assist University of Idaho’s lobby efforts to obtain funding for a badly needed engineering upgrade.

Marble has also been working with ASBSU President C.J. Martin to find a way to make teacher evaluations more readily accessible to students.

Lindholm bill may let committees kill bills

A bill which would allow legislation to be killed in committee is having troubles getting out of committee.

Vice President Allison Lindholm, who submitted the bill with the expectation that it probably would not pass, believes the bill would help to expedite the ASUI’s legislative process. Others feel it is the whole senate’s responsibility to judge legislation.

Freshman Senator Scott Wimer expressed his concern about the bill last Wednesday stating, “It’s not like we do so much business that we can’t look at these bills.”

The bill was sent back to committee for some revision and could be voted on at tomorrow’s senate meeting.

Marble feels ISU med school plan will fail

After speaking with people in Boise, ASU President John Marble does not believe that the proposed medical school at Idaho State University will be approved, but neither does he want the ASUI to take an active role in lobbying against the idea. “It is most important that we support WAMU (cooperative medical program between Washington, Alaska, Montana and Idaho) with additional opportunities,” said Marble.

Marble fears that efforts to oppose the medical school would be seen as regionism rather than concern about the future of the UI’s participation in WAMU.

Boise tops list of places to move
Alissa L. Beier
Staff Writer

Students graduating from the University of Idaho this spring may want to think twice about moving to a large city for prospective job opportunities.

A nation-wide study conducted by Ryder Company Truck Rental found that the most popular city to move to after college graduation was Boise, Idaho. Some of the other cities people migrated to were also located in the northwest part of the country. Spokane, Wash., was the tenth out of twenty cities over one hundred thousand, while Fairbanks, Alaska, was ranked third and Twin Falls, Idaho, was ninetieth for cities under one hundred thousand.

This survey was originally started by Ryder twenty years ago for their own benefits of pricing and marketing. But the past four years, the company has released the results of the survey for public observation. And what the public revealed is what the company found so surprising.

"We're discovering that people are moving out of the big cities, and into the medium sized ones," stated Terri Kopec, Ryder company representative. She also added, "And no one is moving to California."

Surprising as that may be, the people moving to the medium sized cities were not only moving there because of a job, but were also looking for a better quality of life. Throughout the year long study, all the information taken from the 2.5 million people surveyed was processed by computers.

Because of this, Kopec stated that, "It's impossible for us to know if the move is right for a certain city. But we do know that graduates moving to the medium sized cities will have more than any other age group. Even if graduates don't want to stay in the northwest, there are plenty of other opportunities all over the country to choose moving to.

One could consider Nashville, Tenn., Springfield, Mo., Grand Junction, Colo., or Jackson, Tenn., as some of the other top cities of choice. Wherever graduates decide to move, they can almost bet their diplomas the move won't be permanent.

Law school receives $750,000
L. Weidman Schimck, a longtime Moscow lawyer who earned his law degree at the University of Idaho, has announced that he is donating a substantial portion of his estate to the UI College of Law.

The 1931 graduate's bequest will be the largest gift ever made to the law college and its estimated value is about $750,000.

Details of the gift were outlined at a joint meeting of the UI Foundation and the UI Alumni Association Board in Boise Jan. 21. Schimck was honored by both for his distinguished career and his lifelong support for the university.

"This will help us enormously in attracting and holding quality faculty," said Law Dean Sheldon Venuti. Schimck's gift will be used to establish an endowment in the name of his father-in-law and personal mentor, JIM Wilson.

Wilson was mayor of Moscow during the Great Depression, and Schimck attributes many of his own attitudes and social views to Wilson. Schimck, who served as UI student for many years, is married to Wilson's daughter Margaret, a long-time teacher at Moscow High School.

Income from the endowment will be used to create three Distinguished Professorships within the college.

The money will be used to augment faculty research and other projects, Vincenti said.

One of the professorships will focus specifically on state and local governmental policies.

Wishing Star Foundation holds member drive

"Dreams come true" is what the Wishing Star Foundation is all about. Wishing Star grants wishes to children in this area who are suffering from life threatening diseases and they are in need of public support.

On Thursday, Feb. 3, the Pauench chapter of Wishing Star will hold their annual membership drive meeting. It will be held at the Best Western/University Inn, 1516 Pullman Road in Moscow. The meeting will begin at 7 p.m. and is open to anyone who would like to be a member of the local chapter or would just like more information.

We are looking for caring people willing to give a little of their time to help "Dreams come true" for some very special children.

Anyone interested in getting involved in the Pauensch chapter of Wishing Star should attend the meeting said Doug Draper, the Wishing Star Foundation executive director. Draper said this program helps to brighten the lives of children and makes their lives more worth living.

Draper emphasized there are many children in this area who are in need of their dreams being fulfilled.

For more information on the Wishing Star Foundation or on the meeting call 822-8251 or drop by 325 0th Ave. Interested people can write the Foundation at Wishing Star Foundation, Spokane, WA 99201.
Higher educators need to refocus

The highest priority an institution of higher learning should set for itself is the production of intelligent graduates who are ready to face real world challenges. At the moment this seems like a second priority of the University of Idaho. Land grant universities were designed with the intention of creating new research and adding to already existing research, but like every other business if those institutions remain in a state of stasis and don't change to meet the demands of the customers or students they will seek other avenues.

The UI, as a whole, seems to be more worried about increasing its coffers rather than academically challenging students. Professors in the "real" sciences seem more driven by this, and sign mind set than professors in other disciplines. The "other disciplines" don't bring in the millions of dollars from large corporations the "real" sciences are able to acquire for research.

The focus of an institution of higher education should be toward effective and creative teaching and fulfilling and valuable learning.

University instructors need to realize students aren't a conglomerate body, we are individuals with separate needs. In classes of 30 or less instructors should make the effort to learn students' names and treat them as people, not a part of a whole. Students must know their instructor's name and like to deal with them on a personal basis, instructors should have to learn to do the same.

Teaching is more than presenting information and testing students on how much they can memorize, it's knowing the student has understood material and is able to apply it in real world situations. When we return to a system which emphasizes this type of teaching maybe we can develop a system to compensate instructors for what they are worth.

Merit is lost in the educational system. We've been told education is here for the taking, but like computers it needs to be made user friendly. This step begins with the instructor teaching students the skills and social skills. Everyone contends there is no conceivable way to construct a merit based pay system, but if other businesses can develop one based on performance and achievement, universities should be able to develop a similar one.

Teachers have the power to reach minds and impact others' lives. They need to begin to take this power seriously and increase the wealth of our nation by inspiring young students, not to take advantage of their situation and worry more about having their name associated with large research projects.

Abortion unsolvable issue

I hate the word abortion. It is a topic that gives people the right to get each other to, to discredit each other and to think evil upon each other. There is no middle ground within this topic. I'll be wrong by trying to get Bob Dole and Bill Clinton to agree on health care. Only this time, the stakes have much more dire consequences.

Unless are Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas, you have probably given some thought to a woman's right to abort a fetus. Some of you have even dared to voice an opinion, then cringed as you prepared for the inevitable assault of criticism that would hit you in the face. A very select few of you have even mustered in rallies or wrote letters to newspapers.

But all the marching, shouting, hoping and praying is not going to convince people otherwise, and is likely to anger the other side all the more. True, there are plenty of people on both sides of the issue that have tried to work out some sort of understanding, but abortion isn't a very accommodating issue for arbitration. Most people either believe it's a woman's right to choose an abortion or it's not. There's plenty of criticism to go around both sides of the issue, especially the extremely vocal advocates and opponents. When two groups believe in something so strongly, clash is inevitable. But the clashes are getting ugly. I am pro-choice. I haven't always been, and it's definitely not a topic I care to debate. Raised in a pro-life family with heavy Catholic overtones, I was taught to believe abortion was to kill someone. It wasn't until I got to college and became more educated on the issue that I changed my mind. But I respect the pro-lifers' opinion and expect the same respect from the pro-life side, because I've learned the argument will hit a true everyone.

Pro-lifers have been taking a great deal of criticism lately, and some of it is warranted. While most pro-lifers offer peaceful protest, it's obvious that it only takes a few radical elements to give the movement a bad name. I guess when you believe in something so deeply, getting thrown in jail or barricking yourself in front of a clinic is doing justice. But I have a real problem with this. I propose a very serious question for pro-life demonstrators: couldn't the time, money and effort be better spent setting up, say, adoption alternatives? I know to some extent, this has already been done, but I think the pro-life side would be better off setting up centers that plainly offer abortion alternatives.

Pro-lifers think abortion is murder. That's fine, but all the demonstrations in the world is not going to change many minds. Thus far, the courts have held

Super Bowl's commercials close to sub-par performance

Last year's Super Bowl was much better than this year's. Last year we had the original Michael Jordan/Crappy Bird shoot-outs, Bugs Bunny and the Martian-guy playing hoops and Planet Reelfoot. This year we had Cindy Crawford in a Pepsi deprivation test.

The last few years the actual football game hasn't been worth watching — who needs to see a game they have 1) already seen a year ago and 2) already know the outcome (which translates to: "Nobody will bet a measly five bucks with me").

Nobody, indeed. 133 million Americans (about 64 million others around the world) wanted the first half in vain hopes of a tight game, then mildly surprised when the Bills scored, and moreover, the Rams didn't and ended up paying more attention to the debut of Bradshaw's new pep-singing commercials that ran for about $900,000 for a 30 second spot. Anything that costs $30,000 a second absolutely has to be better than a Super Bowl rerun.

This year, however, Americans were nearly let down by big advertisers. We had to deal with a basketball player whose name sounds something like a stink and repeats anaemic slogans like, "Do you want me to pass?" (NO), "Do you want me to shoot?" (NO), "Do you want me to slam?" (Yeah). So this big Shaq character slams the basketball and goes through the ritual about 20 times more. I think the commercial was advertising a slice of some sort. It was painful. It had been for a one-line only "Wavy Legs Challenge" commercial, the Super Bowl might have been a bomb. This one featured a cute kid who used the challenge, "Bet ya can't cut just one" to win better superbowl seats, finally asking the Master of Potatoes Dan Quayle himself.

Is Jesus only son of God?

MYTH: While I was reading the Bible during the Christmas break, I was astonished by the many contradictions in the different books of both the New Testament and the Old Testament. I hear people say and believe that Jesus is the only begotten Son of God, and that Jesus is even God himself. They build the assumption that Jesus Christ is the Son of God on the following verse: "If the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God," (John 1:1).

COUNTER MYTH: The Muslim takes strong except- ion to the Christian doctrine that "Jesus is the only begotten son." This is what the Christian is made to repeat from childhood. Do you know that by the Christian own God-given records, God Almighty has sons by tens: "...Adam, which was the son of God," (Luke 3:38).

"...Israel is my son, even my firstborn," (Exodus 4:22).

"...I, (God) am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My first- born," (Jeremiah 31:9). "...the Lord hath said unto me [David], These are my sons, this day have I begotten thee," (Psalms 2:7).

"...and can you see that in the lan- guage of the Jew, every righteous person was a son of God. It was a metaphorical descriptive term continuously used among the Jews. Thus, my understanding of the sonship-deity concept is as fol- lows: The teachings of the church throughout the past centuries towards Prophet Jesus Christ were excused from teacher, to Son of God and finally to God himself. So when Christianity deviated from the original teachings of Jesus, churches were established to preach for their own interests: And straightway the [Jesus] preached Christ in the synag- ogues, that he [Jesus] is the Son of God," (Acts 9:20).

The Muslim believes in the Holy Qur'an, the Word of God, when Allah Almighty said addressing all people: "Say, He is Allah, the One and Only; Allah, the Eternal, Absolute; He begetteth not, nor is He begot- ten; And there is none Like unto Him." (Q. 112).

Toon observation missed point

This is in response to the letter to the editor from L. Terence Connolly in the Jan. 28 issue of the Argonaut, as well as the politi- cal cartoon printed in an earlier issue of the Argonaut.

I agree with the first paragraph of Mr. Connolly's letter. I also object very strongly to the politi- cal cartoon and called the Argonaut to voice my disgust. However, he should have stopped there. The rest of his letter misses the point entirely.

Who cares what it does to the image of Catholic priests? Anybody with a brain can figure out that because one Catholic priest molests a child does not make all Catholic priests child molesters, just like one teacher molesting a child does not make all teachers child molesters. No one would ever see the accusation of a teacher as a slam to teachers everywhere. So why does the world seem to view the accusation of a priest as a direct hit on the Catholic church? It should be viewed as exactly what it is: the exposure of very sick individuals committing heinous crimes against innocent, helpless chil- dren.

Would you have responded had the molester been depicted as a coach or an ordinary person? The important aspect here is what the printing of this trash does to the victims of molestation. The victims and survivors of these grotesque criminal acts are the ones that you and everyone else should be concerned about. They are the ones hurt by such flagrant showings of somebody's desensit- ed some of "hurt," incredible lack of judgment, and absence of human-decency by printing this "cartoon.

I am appalled at the fact you refer to the defense of the Catholic church because someone took a stand against a criminal while you close to ignore the victims. What has this world come to?

I expected to see responses to the printing of the "cartoon" and was disappointed that the only attack on it had nothing to do with find- ing it in how this "cartoon" affected the victims of molestation, but rather found fault in the criti- cism of criminals.

Whoever decided to print this "cartoon" should be ashamed of themselves. As a victim myself, I find being molested a joking matter. It's a serious offense that has scarred me and millions like me for the rest of our lives, and it is acts like these that make it diffi- cult for the wounds to heal.

Timber jobs lost to automation

Job losses in the Northwest tim- ber economy can be more directly attributed to automation and log exports than to environmentalists and endangered species. Consider the statistics appearing in a government document called "Production, Prices & Employment in the Northwest Forest Industry." In Washington and Oregon in 1979, 159,000 peo- ple were employed, while the har- vest for those 2 states was 11.3 Billion Board Foot (BBF).

In 1987, the cut was up to 2 BBF, but employment dropped by 27,000 jobs, with 132,000 people unemployed.

Idaho has been experiencing a similar trend. In 1987, 1.9 BBF were harvested in Idaho, employ- ing 20,100 people. In 1991, 1.9 BBF were again harvested, but only 15,700 people were employed. That is a decrease of over 20 percent in employment, while harvesting the same amount of timber!! And you thought it was the environmentalists that were taking your jobs.

Need some more evidence? I quote a local paper, "About 130 hourly and 30 salaried jobs will be lost because of modernization of Potlatch Corp.'s pulp mill at Lewiston," company spokesman Michael Sullivan.

Now exports. Total exports for ports in Washington and Oregon in 1971 were 33 BBF to Japan .5 BBF. In 1987, the total had tripled to 98 BBF since 1973, and Japan's share doubled to 36 BBF. Exports exploded in the 80's, from 1980 total exports were a whop- ping 3.66 BBF. Japan topped out in 1989 when it imported 2.42 BBF. How long could Stimson mill operate with the 3.68 BBF exported from Washington and Oregon in 1987?

Mills from coastal states are now losing local mills for Idaho logs, because the logs from their home states are being milled in Japan!! And you thought envi- ronmentalists were stealing your jobs? Campaign lost, pollution completely out of Montana in 1993. They did so because they had a voters who are literally environmen- talists.

The Champion pulp mill has noth- ing to do with environmentalists or endangered species. Large tim- ber corporations regularly export logs from their private land, while holding permits to harvest from public lands. Actions like Champion are appropriately known as scalp-ing and hogging.

Please remember that I place blame on large corporations and poor trade policy on the part of our government for good folks doing their jobs.

I hope you understand my clearly and accurately where the timber jobs go.

ASUI ineffective, why vote?

To review, only 1,558 out of more than 10,000 registered students voted in the ASUI full elections.

Besides choosing our elected student representatives, these elections also indicated that 86 percent of those who voted in a non-binding referendum preferred "Student Union Building" as the name of the building at Sixth and Deakin. These results lead to the question: why did 85 percent of the student body choose not to vote in these elections? An ex-government official has attributed the low voter turnout to student satisfaction with the way the ASUI Senate was run the past year.

Other explanations are worth considering. I suggest most students perceive the institution of Student Government as falling into one of two categories. The first is that student government is a corrupt institution used to promote the administration's desires while giving the illusion the students are being represented.

The second perception is that the student government is an institution that is simply powerless to effectively represent student concerns.

Furthermore, I believe most students perceive those seeking office as being (1) more than willing to serve the administration while filling their own resumes, or (2) students wishing to serve students, but who are naive as to the nature of the institution and thus are not seeking to change the system, or (3) students who wish to change the institution to better serve students but are powerless to do so. Clearly, students holding these perceptions, whether true or not, will view voting as pointless and consequently choose not to vote. My own belief is that reality is a combination of a little of each of these perceptions. Nonetheless, I did vote.

Now consider the fact that the building at Sixth and Deakin is named "Idaho Union," despite the fact that the referendum showing that this name received a mere five percent of the vote. In fact, the name has been "Idaho Union" since August. Obviously, there was never any intent to retain "SUB" no matter what the students' wishes were. This is why the referendum was non-binding. Another phrase for non-binding is "it doesn't matter." This is because the power for naming the building does not belong to the students, but rather, it belongs to "SUB" Director David Mucci, who was hired by a small group consisting mostly of non-students.

Moreover, the students' best wishes at heart, but he should be held accountable to the students. Clearly, the name of a building is a symbol, and it is not as important as other issues such as the quality and contents of the building, the cost of education, the cost of housing, the quality of instruction, the parking problem and so on.

The name, however, is an important symbol because it is a symbol of what students have in common; and it is the name of the one and only building on campus that the students are supposed to control. In short, the name of the building is a symbol of the students' power.

If we do not have the power to influence our own building, how can we even pretend to have the power to influence any of the more important decisions concerning students? We can't.

If the student government (or any other organized group of students) had the ability to affect and improve the lives of students, and students realized this, a whole lot more than 15 percent of the students would care enough to vote in November.

The challenge for the students is to force our government to represent us. The challenge for the government is to activate the students, to represent students' interests and to create a powerful student force.

Last of all, I will issue a friendly reminder to each of the elected government representatives: Counting those voting for others and those not voting at all, over 90 percent of registered voters on this campus did not vote for you. If you do not activate and represent this group, other might.

Dams destroy Snake salmon

I would like to take this time to inform students of a major problem facing Idaho. This problem is the destruction of the Snake River salmon.

In 1985, Snake River coho salmon were declared extinct. Then in 1991, Snake River sockeye were listed as endangered, while the chinook runs were listed as threatened.

Sadly, in 1992, only one sockeye returned to its ancestral spawning grounds at Red Fish Lake. This year was almost as bad, as only seven sockeye returned.

The main cause of this destruction is the fact that the Army Corps of Engineers failed to design the four lower Snake River dams as Congress intended. These dams could be modified to allow rear view draw downs, but the Corps of Engineers Power Company have refused to act.

These agencies instead support hazing young salmon (a practice which has proven fatal to the fish). Other agencies are suggesting that we need to study the situation more (even though many studies have already been done). What I want to know is what these agencies are going to study?

Probably only all the Snake River salmon became extinct. The only way to save the salmon is through public action. The Governor of Idaho is trying, but he is meeting opposition from the above agencies. He needs our help!

Please write to the Army Corps of Engineers and Bonneville Power Company. Tell them to act now!! If you have any questions, would like more information, or would like to help with a petition, please call Bradly at 883-1473. The extinction clock is running. The addresses are:

abortion to be legal, and no demonstration will change that. Similarly, vocal people on the pro-choice side of the issue are not going to convince many pro-lifers otherwise.

In the Argonaut, there was a letter from members of various local pro-life organizations, and they thanked God "for protecting us from the hateful slurs and attempted violence we yearly face." Now this may be true, but the people who wrote this should realize they are promoting that pro-chivers face similar obstacles. In fact, when a doctor who performed abortion was gunned down by radical pro-life forces, a pro-life leader and reverend, criticizing what he called Clinton's "radical abortion agenda," and recklessly said he would protect this sort of violence.

Pro-choice advocates can be equally militant. When I was a freshman and still in my pro-life phase, I could always count on various arguments and no understanding of my point of view. One guy told me he had lost all respect for me. And a look at the T.V. news will show that violence can reign on both sides of the issue. Now the last time I checked, I was a man. This puts me at an obvious disadvantage when talking about abortion. I will never suffer an unwanted pregnancy, and decide whether to stick it out or abort.

Some people, including my girlfriend, think that this entitles me to less opinion. I have to agree to some extent, but on the other hand, I don't think it's realistic to appoint all females to the Supreme Court to decide abortion issues.

Thus far, the Supreme Court has held that abortion is legal, although the famous Roe v. Wade has become bruised and battered, especially in states like Missouri, where getting an abortion is more or less impossible.

I'll say it again: there is no solution to the abortion question. So believe what you want, and please do it without hating others.

ACLUserves culture by confounding truth

What the pro-homosexual ACLU fears may not be the bias it harbors in its able spokesperson, but the World's most exciting coed, describes with blindly excited artfulness. The what and why of proponents of the ACLUs radical fear may be the simple truth honest response to well-articulated distinction. Perhaps there is fear that deceptive rhetoric cannot stand alone against plain truth therefore some seek to confound the truth by compounding rhetorical deception, seeing or portraying those who speak the truth as being driven by evil motives, and then caricaturing the truth as some horrible injustice. It has always been so. No more than an honest person can outline a lie, will a zealot admit wrong; no more than a competent flaw will admit that he is not telling the truth, will a misguided advocate acknowledge error. Those who wish to justify evil have always had able advocates willing to insist that evil is good that any good that opposes evil is a greater evil.

A youthful audience whose moral foundations have the structural enormity of mine has no clue by which to tell the difference. A generation which has been deprived of knowledge of God and the Bible is ignorant of the foundations of principles which led Christians to establish the most exemplary nation of freedom and tolerance the world has known. One who has never bothered to follow the examples of Benjamingle Franklin, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and other founders of this nation, by devoting time to the study of the Bible and by acknowledging the sovereignty of the Creator, cannot comprehend the goals, purposes, or strengths under our federal domain limited by responsibility and tolerance limited by respect much less interpret our founda- tional documents, and is ill prepared to recognize what our real morality is, or distinguish it from self-serving pseudo-moral rationalizations. Such as those advanced by advocates of the elemental- ly anti-social immorality of homosexual conduct. Yes, conduct so conductive to the collapse of society as a status, it is a status defined only by conduct. Attempts to equate "sexual orientation" (read "homosexual choice") with an absolute claim for equal rights is an irrational invention of logic. Homosexual conduct is criminal con- duct. Homosexuals are few.

I'm extremely perturbed by the perverse propag- ands, aided by advocates of homosexuality, that the strength of the U.S. lies in its cultural diversity. That's a idiotic bunk. The only consistent and verifiable source of the strength of this country has been the ultimate trust of our people in the Creator and God who merited the trust and confidence of our Founding Fathers. Christianity has never been permitted or tolerated by the gen- erality of a society of diversity. Christianity does and must condemn sin. Therefore Christianity is repugnant to the diverse masses of those who choose to refuse to acknowledge and abandon sin. Yet only Christianity has made room for the diverse beliefs of those who choose to refuse to acknowledge and practice which is non-Christian, including those churches that refuse to acknowledge the veracity of the Bible as ruling authority, an anti- Christian. Does nation yet retain a majority to hold somewhere within their core of consciousness a realization that Jesus of Nazareth is who he claimed to be, the Sovereign and Creator, the one and only Master of the Universe? Most of the student body of this potentially great university are probably unaware of their own trust and reliance on their personal religious heritage. It may be O.K. to use his name as a curse, but it isn't politically correct to admit you believe in Jesus. Yet the reality of deeply imbedded ultimate faith is the strength on which our freedoms will survive.

There is no such strength in the ridiculous anti- moral and anti-social radical agendas of neo- paganism, or of perverse homosexual claims to societal "rights," or of the "multicultural diversity" movement with which they exchange sup- port.

History and statistics teach us that suppression strengthens genuine religious faith, and words out counterfeit. Despite the efforts of organized educational hierarchies, the numbers of young adults turning back to the God of their parents, and the strength of their rediscovered faith seem to be increasing.

Perhaps the ACLU has unwittingly served the culture it has struggled against. Perhaps ACLU's name is being associated in the crumbling citadels of atheistic academia, so the people's realization that while the Bible will never be obsolete, the ACLU has been.

take the challenge. After Qwylle goes down, the kid manages to get Tiny Aikman marked in, and ends up play- ing in the game. Cute kid.

A Denver Tortilla Thin commercial had former late night television host Chevy Chase read by producers mid- nght, playing off of his firing from the Fox talk show. Chase is pla- cated when he gets to keep the chips. Pepino's Pepi commercials flipped so badly that only the Candy experi- ment comes to mind. It would've been better if "Sinful F's" Kramer character Lewis Richards had been locked in the Pepsi depuration tank with Crawford.

However, the company's Lipton tea commercials were out flat. One had Bo Jackson working out by climbing stairs in a sky-scraper for a Lipton label at the end of the workout, only to find his trainer on the roof telling him the workout wasn't over. They drop the drink over the edge and Jackson breaks it on the bottom. In another, David Carradine, known best for "Kung Fu," best up some things using three Stogges tuxes then chugged the tea. It was almost enough to make watchers think through the fourth quarter.

But all-in-all, the Super Bowl was really another flop. The ratio of gross- to-anonymous commercials was much worse than last year. There was this noon-show car commercial whose punch line was a sticker-price under $19,000. Besides that, the headlines were ugly.

Perhaps, though, the worst part about the Super Bowl is that it isn't even about football anymore. It seems basket- ball commercials are encroaching more and more with Bird, Jordan (with Charles Barkley just wanting to get into the game) and Stag character spending more time on the court than on the field.

For next year, America's advertisers need to get their acts together or fans will have to do something drastic, like hope for a tighter game.

More than coffee behind the counter

Michelle Brehe, originally from Brittany, France, came to the United States to learn English. No one in England would hire her because of her 12 years working in drama for French Radio and Television. She moved to New York, but everyone spoke French. Then she moved to Pullman. She moved a foreign language job at UI so she works in the SUB.

Michelle Brehe's search for improved English led to espresso

Therese Ellison
Staff Writer

Michelle Brehe's name may not be familiar to many students, but her face certainly is. For all the espresso addicted who hang out in the SUB, Michelle's smile is the one which greets those grumpy faces seeking their daily caffeine fix.

There is much more to the "expresso lady" than just a chipped saucer and a French accent, however. Michelle's road to Moscow is actually quite interesting.

Originally from Brittany, France, Michelle comes from a family that moved around quite a bit. After living in various parts of France and one year in Africa, her family settled on the French Riviera. Michelle graduated from college and continued her studies at a drama school in Paris. She then spent 12 years working for French Radio and Television performing drama.

"One day, the girl who was doing the news and D.J. wanted to go on vacation for a month. They asked me to replace her and said, 'Don't worry, it will easy, she'll prepare all the programs. You'll just have to go on the air.'"

"The first morning I came to work — and all the titles were in English! I didn't speak a word. The first morning I tried to fake it. The next morning, I brought a dictionary to get the pronunciation. But that wasn't working." Michelle decided that to further her career, she would have to learn English. She made numerous inquiries trying to find a job as a governess for a family in England.

Learning the language, she hoped, would help her break into theater in London. But because of her credentials, no family would hire her: it would be "disingenuous to go from my career in taking care of kids," Michelle was told.

Her sister was living in Connecticut at the time and told her: "You want to learn English, come here: (in the US), nobody cares what you were doing before."

Michelle arrived in New York in 1965. She worked as a governess for the family her sister had found, and tried to master English and lose her French accent. In the three years she was there, however, she discovered that her English was not improving as drastically as she hoped. "In New York, everyone spoke French...some people who I met in Connecticut were teaching architecture at W.S.U. and they invited me to visit them."

When Michelle came to Washington, her friends told her that "nobody, nobody spoke French in Pullman." Hoping that a stay in the area would perfect her English, Michelle found a job and stayed. And stayed.

She has left and come back to the area many times. She even moved back to France in 1984, but was unable to find a job due to the incredibly high unemployment there.

In 1987, she returned after a friend told her of a job in the Foreign Language Department at the University of Idaho. Unfortunately, she arrived too late. Fortunately for her, she has been making progress ever since.

Michelle tries to visit France every two years, and hopes to move back as soon as she can. She would like to return to her country, which isn’t surprising: Moscow is certainly not the French Riviera.

Historical society displays valentines

Halo DeVitt
Features Editor

Valentines used to be more elaborate in design and much simpler in sentiment. Today we have simple folding cards that are expected to convey the feelings of a lifetime. The McConnel Mansion, Moscow's historic home and museum, has valentines dating from the 1920's on display through Jan. 28.

Valentine cards used to be like children's valentine's, but with much more intricate construction. One valentine on display reads, "I've purged my heart outside your gates. Will you be my naming mate?"

The custom of exchanging valentines has a long history. A French nobleman imprisoned in the Tower of London in 1415 is credited with sending the first valentine, which was a rhymed love letter to his wife. By the eighteenth century, sending a valentine verse and gift for your sweetheart was a popular custom in England. While in France, young men and women would draw each other's names from a valentine box on St. Valentine's Eve. The couples wore the printed names upon their sleeves and attended balls, with love often being the outcome.

The United States, exchanging valentines became popular with the introduction of English of booklets containing verses and messages which could be copied onto gilt-edged paper and decorated with Cupids, turr- tidlevox, and other emblems of love. Along with verses from a man to a man or vice versa for women to use in response. Commemorative valentines appeared around 1800, and in 1840, mechanical types were available. In addition to having parts that were moved by pulling a tab, the cards featured fold-out sections. The wide use of valentines, however, was due to the reduction of postal rates. Around 1870, the comic version became popular, known as vinegar or spit-face cards. At the same time, the serious valentine became more elaborate.

The exhibit at the McConnel Mansion features some of these elaborate cards. There are also delicate miniatures and the postcard type which was extremely popular around the turn of the century.

The valentines are from two collections: Linda Gordan saved the valentines sent to her father, Raymond Henley Gordon, in the 1920's. Ed Bark's collection contains cards he received in school from 1921 to 1929.

The Museum Store in the Mansion carries reproductions of valentine postcards and mechanical cards, and hand-made, marbled cards featuring lace and honeycomb made by Lela Ames. There is also a selection of romantic gift cards for friends and sweethearts.

The Mansion is open Tuesday through Saturday from 1 to 4 p.m.

‘Blink’ combines too many story lines

Unfortunately, it becomes a disappointing cliché. He doesn’t tell her, she storms into the station to confront him, causes him out, slaps him, he grabs her, trying to calm the hysterical woman—all the usual stuff. Very mediocrec.

The most depressing aspect of this story is the contradiction in Emma’s character. Her initial strength and independence become juvenile rebellion when she continually milks the uniform cop to guard her.

She won’t listen to those trying to help her, so Halston makes her listen. In a disturbing scene, she trips and falls, trying to get away from him, he pines her to the ground—while scolding her for being so obtuse—picks her up and throws her against the wall—exactly what a person being pursued by a murderer needs as reassurance from a police officer that she is “safe.”

The story itself has enough surprises to keep the viewers guessing. The ultimate outcome is, as predictable as any cop-falls-in-love-with-witness-must-steal-his-handgun thriller. An added plus is the unique soundtrack—traditional Irish music with a twist.

Overall, Blink is a good mystery. It should have stuck with that, however, instead of trying to create a character study by showing how true love softened the hardened hearts of the street-wise cop and the abused woman. Please. One storyline at a time.

The Broiler Restaurant prime destination for hot date

"In the Broiler, our waiter John was friendly, but not pushy. And he knew when to fill the water glasses without making it seem that if one of us took a sip of water it was an occasion yet another interruption. I was at ease when John gave my wife her choice of tables—instead of simply seating us in line to the kitchen as has been our experience at lesser restaurants. Our table was secluded and quiet but not for gotten when another glass of wine or more become needed. The good service notwithstanding, the food was superb. It will come as no surprise to those who know me that I ordered the prime rib special. I did hit out of character a little by choosing the smaller of the two choices, and I’m glad I did, because the smaller portion more than filled me up. Actually I missed dessert because of the amount of good food The Broiler placed on my plate. The baked potato was nonexistent. The salad bar was another bright spot in our evening. The refrigerated bowls were large and the salad choices imaginative and inviting. The salads delicious were particularly responsible for my not knowing how good the desserts might have been."

The one flaw in an otherwise perfect evening was something that has bothered me in countless other restaurants. However, this time I...

Spaghetti spans generations

Tim Hellake
News Editor

My family's heritage is anything but Italian, but we love a great bowl of spaghetti and all the trimmings.

Our family recipe for spaghetti sauce has been handed down for generations from my mother's side of the family.

My great-grandma taught my grandma, my grandma taught my mom, and my mom taught me.

My mom instructed me on the fine art of spaghetti sauce when I was eight or nine years old. I have enjoyed making this sauce (trimmings included) for friends and family alike.

Tim's Traditional Family Spaghetti Sauce

1 tbsp. vegetable oil
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 medium onion, chopped
2 lbs. lean ground beef
16 oz. can white tomatoes, cut
12 oz. can tomato sauce
1 tsp. tomato paste
6 oz. can sliced mushrooms
1 tsp. chili powder
1/2 tsp. paprika
1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. brown sugar

Warm cast-iron skillet over medium heat, place vegetable oil in skillet after somewhat warm.

Brown garlic and onion in warm oil. Brown lean ground beef in mixture until well cooked. Drain off excess grease.

To meat mixture add tomatoes, tomato sauce, cat-up and mushrooms. Stir mixture until all meat covered with tomato sauce. Let simmer over low heat for 15 minutes. Add chili powder, salt, pepper and brown sugar. Stir well. Cover and let simmer at low heat for several hours.

Serve over cooked spaghetti noodles with garlic bread and green salad.

University Press prints award-winning journal

The Hemingway Review, published every November and May, moved the University of Idaho Press in the Fall of 1993.

Hemingway's first of the literary periodicals, which is devoted to articles, notes and book reviews concerning the life and work of writer Ernest Hemingway, features a double-page frontispiece of Hemingway dock fishing in the Silver Creek mountains of Sun Valley, Idaho.

This was not the only change the journal underwent. "Letters" and "Bulletin Board" were added as a means to keep Hemingway Society members informed of new developments.

In addition, previous issues offered only a bibliographic bibliography and a rectangular shaped volume as opposed to the old square shape.

The Council of Editors of Journals noticed the changes: "The Hemingway Review" placed third in a 1993 competition for significant editorial achievement, announced Editor Susan Brekel. The nation-wide competition, judged by academic editors, includes journals from many different disciplines.

"The Review" will also receive a new cover design, created by Moscow friedicd graphic designer Hagner.

The Hemingway Review moved to UI when the University of Florida found it lacked funds. The Hemingway Foundation was delighted with the move, Brekel said.

The Hemingway Foundation will also be holding their annual meeting in Sun Valley, Idaho this year. Hemingway spent his last years in Sun Valley.

According to Brekel, he liked being in isolation, but also found being around the celebrities who flocked to Sun Valley to enjoy the winter skiing and hunting.

Hemingway wrote several novels while in Sun Valley.

‘Straight From the Streets’ says rap globally, locally

Mark McReynolds
Contributing Writer

Rap globally, act locally. Or maybe rap globally, act locally. Or is it rap locally, act globally? Anyways, this seems to be the message of a new rap compilation CD called Straight From The Streets. Excuse me, that’s Straight From Da Streets. It’s about time.

We’ve had Love Aid. We’ve had Farm Aid. We’ve had aid for the spotted owl, and for the kangaroo rat, we’ve even had aid for the cent - our society is consumed in an aid frenzy.

At the vanguard of that frenzy are our friends in the entertainment industry. Every time a cause comes up, its head out of the earth, these people fall over themselves in a mad rush to throw a party, get drunk and somehow increase their already unwar-

And here we have Straight From Da Streets, a rap glut-feast produced in part by POWER FM of Los Angeles and distributed by Priority records. The net proceeds from the sale of this CD will go towards building a new performing arts and job training center in Los Angeles. Let’s call it Street Aid.

So what has this got to do with Moscow, you ask?

Well, Straight From Da Streets is an attempt to open the streets and trained to do something productive with their lives. Like rap. The only alternative they will tell you, is to let the kids run wild through the streets in gangs. Be in a gang, or be a rap star. Hemmings.

Now, there are real new genas in Moscow, unless of course, the Apple Dumpling Gang stumbled through town one cool day.

Unless gang-free Moscow wants to get used to the Palauke Bloods or the Great Elevator Crips (for a short) along the streets with the rest of them, they’ll pay for the fuf-f boxes for the CD. It’s social exter-

In fact, you’ve got music too. Now, I know about as much about music as do about Etienne Revolutionaires, which is not a lot, but that compilation seems to represent a breadth of styles within this genre we call rap.

There’s high energy dance songs, like “Daffy Daks” by Duice, “Baby Got Back” by Sir-Mix-A-Lot, “Whooosh There It’s by” by Tag Team, and “Jump Around” by House of Pain. There are mellower raps by Ice Cube and N.D. (l.Q.). There are even two “2Pac rap songs featuring the protagonist rapper himself, — George Clanton. It also includes a never-released live version of Funkadelic classic “One Nation Under a Groove.”

So if you want to save Moscow from running into gangland, or you just want to reaffirm your unwar-

And remember, rap globally, act locally.

All artists, labels and retailers have donated proceeds from the sale of the album to the Knowledge Is Power Fund. When completed the J. Paul Russell Performing Arts Center and Training Complex will house a 100-seat theatre, recording studio, classrooms and rehearsal studio.

The aim of the Center is to provide underprivileged youths with oppor-ties at low concentrations (a combination using less than 20 percent railroad ties with wood chips) during its test-burning and under the new temporary permit they would also use low concentrations, said Simmons. Kirkland said railroad ties may be burned at up to 100 percent at some points during testing to test the effects.

“I think the information they get from the pilot program could convince other communities that this is a good idea,” he said.

Kirkland also expects that the UI will continue to search for alternative fuels. Railroad tie burning could also be beneficial because wood chips will be harder to come by with a declining timber industry in the Northwest, said Kirkland.

WSU hosts annual music festival

Smith and Arthur have collaborated since 1983, combining music and juggling for the delight of audiences in Australia, Canada and throughout the United States.

Next on the program is David Rovniak’s “Trip” performed by the WSU Percussion Ensemble. This will be followed by three pieces written and performed by Gregory Yasinitsky, including: "Double Edge" and "New Wave" for alto-saxophone and piano; then "Oh Yeah" for computer generated tone.

Finishing the evening program is Barbara Finkelstein’s composition, "Daydream Dances." This music will feature Haskell on the piano and Gregory Yasinitsky, this time on the soprano saxophone.

Plan to return to Kimbrough Concert Hall Thursday evening to hear and enjoy another program in WSU’s New Music Festival. The Thursday program spotlights the music of three Pierces, currently one of the most versatile composers in America. Pierce is the leader of the neo-romantic movement and he has the broadest reach in the movement, which is why he has such public appeal.

According to Argersinger, conductor of the festival, Pierce’s compositions range from innova- tive choral, orchestral and chamber music to jazz. Argersinger said: “Pierce is not publish material,” hence he does not compose or play institutional.

Washington State University is hosting its Ninth Annual New Music Festival this week. Included in the festival are two recitals scheduled for today with another one slated for Thursday night.

Today at 11:40 a.m., WSU student composers Doug Monoch, Charesh Labarge, Kevin Gay and John Baker will present their own musical compositions at the Kimbrough Hall Auditorium. A faculty recital will begin at 8 p.m. tonight at Kimbrough Hall Auditorium. The world premiere of “WhooshClang” will start the show. The piece written by WSU faculty member Paul Ely Smith, should be subtitled “Music to Juggle By,” because added entertainment is provided by juggler Thomas Arthur.

Smith and Arthur have collaborated since 1983, combining music and juggling for the delight of audiences in Australia, Canada and throughout the United States.

Their work has also been featured on the “Spotlight” series of Seattle’s KCTS TV. The faculty recital continues with Charles Argersinger’s 1993 with piano piece titled, “Between Seylla and Charybdis.” Gerald Beckett will perform this piece that he premiered on his USAID summer tour in the Middle East.

Another composition by Argersinger, “The Poetry of Science,” utilizes a choir and computer generated tape. It will be performed by the WSU Concert Choir under the direction of Paul Klemme.

coughed the perpetrator in the act. I used to think that it was mere coincidence that whenever a waiter or waitresses came to ask how the food or service was, I was invariably coughed at with a mouthful of food and couldn’t answer. Saturday night I realized what is really happening.

Luckily, I was seated next to a short glass partition and I could see the waiter before coming through the glass. I shouldn’t have been surprised when, just as I took a bite of succulent prime rib with just a hint of a splendidly creamy horseradish sauce, the waiter moved quickly around the glass and asked if everything was all right? Was there anything he could get us? And did we want something else? There I sat again, just as I always do, chewing, like some old heretofe helter working on her cud, not able to speak.

Even though I knew in my heart I had finally caught them in the act, I could not, without embarrassing myself, do anything but smile and nod like the bumpkin that I am.

The Brussels is a great restaurant. In fact it will always be one of my favorites. Not only because it has great food, atmosphere and service, but because it is where I finally caught a member of the wait staff pulling their oldest trick in the book. Bon Appetit.

The Norm of Greatness’: Van Leer to perform King Friday

Jennifer McFarland

Copy Editor

Have you ever read "Letter From Birmingham Jail?" What about some of King’s speeches, including "I Have a Dream?" Friday may be your chance to hear Martin Luther King, Jr.'s work performed.

"The Norm of Greatness," a presentation by Don Van Leer, is a two-act theatrical performance based on the essential writings of Martin Luther King, Jr. "The Norm of Greatness" is one of three wonderful performances that the actor and writer Van Leer has brought to the stage. He has also presented such classics as "My Life Is Biology," the true story of the American botanist Frederick Douglass and "Rimed: Malcolm X," the unabridged story of the controversial Malcolm X. These dramatizations are now being presented at universities and professional theaters across the nation.

In "The Norm of Greatness," Dr. King is portrayed by Van Leer in this entertaining, yet informative 60-minute production. "The Norm of Greatness" is also flavorful and filled with a powerful soundtrack filled with inspiring blues, gospel, and contemporary gospel music.

The on-stage performance opens with a monologue describing the tribulations of the Montgomery Bus Boycott. King's own testimony of those events is given in his most personal sermon "Early Days." The sermon reflects on the personal struggle Dr. King encounters while participating in the Civil Rights Movement. His primary involvement was due to the incorporation of Rosa Parks.

In that speech, Dr. King stated, "This swelling dam of the Negro's legitimate discontent will not pass away until there is an invigorating atmosphere of freedom and equality. We must allow freedom outside normalized acts of physical violence. Again and again we must win to the majestic heights of meeting physical force with soul force." The second half of the show is highlighted with a narration describing Dr. King's philosophy for a new norm of greatness. Also included are such selections as the "Dream Major Incident," "The Elijah" and his final sermon "I See the Promised Land."

Van Leer will present "The Norm of Greatness" Friday, Feb. 4, at 7 p.m. in the Brault Theater. Admission is $5 for undergraduates and $5 general admission. Tickets are available at Ticket Express.

Lewiston Dogwood Festival starts April 14

Lewiston's "early spring" festival hosts people from more than 100 cities

Halo DeVitt
Lifestyles Editor

LEWISTON-The Dogwood Festival Steering Committee has set the dates of the 10th Anniversary Dogwood Festival for April 14 through the 24. The event, which celebrates the early springtime in the Lewiston-Clark Valley has attracted thousands of visitors from throughout the region. Organizations wishing to participate in the festival may obtain the official Event Agreement Form by contacting the Dogwood Festival headquarter in the Lewiston-Clark Center for Arts and History at 415 Main Street, Lewiston. The deadline for registering as an area is February 15.

The 1994 festival will feature long-standing events as the Scupper River Run, "Art Under the Elms" Artists Fair, the Lewis-Clark Invitation Art Show, and the conference Grape and Grain Wine and Beer Tasting during the All Arts Weekend. The Family Fun Weekend, now in its fourth year will include the "Dogwood Paint" Family Bike Challenge, "Dogwood Dunk" a 3-on-3 Basketball tournament, the Bike, Trike, or Hike Parade and "Quarter Carnival" for children. The 1994 festival concert will feature Poncho Sanchez and His Band, a nine-member Latin rock group. Steering Committee Chair, Bob Fuecker of Clarkston credits the popularity of the festival to "the early spring we enjoy in the Lewis-Clark Valley."

"We have visitors to the festival from more than 100 communities in Idaho, Washington and throughout a 9-state region who are here to enjoy the great weather in our Valley," he said. Volunteers are needed to work with the Dogwood Festival Steering Committee in a variety of tasks. Those interested in serving as a volunteer in the planning stages of the event as well as during the festival time frame are urged to contact Volunteer Coordinator, Delma Baker at the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and History.

For questions, Event Agreement Form and information concerning the festival, contact Leslie Eimestep at festival headquarters at (208) 799-2243 or toll-free at (800) 933-5727. Lewiston is located approximately 35 miles south of Moscow on Highway 95.

Students search for study areas

Katé Lyons-Holstein
Editor-in-Chief

With the start of spring semester, student's study environments may cry for a change. Finding a convenient place to study for off-campus students is not always easy. Students who do not live in residence halls or Greek system housing do not have the benefits of a study lounge in their homes. Distractions are not allowed and noise is kept to a minimum there while students are studying.

"You couldn't go in there any time of the day - I mean 24 hours a day - and not be compelled," Don Marekka of The Kafka Epistol said.

Manska, a junior, claims the collection of past textbooks kept in the study room helps students and provides information more than most students have readily at hand.

"I use it (the study room) Sunday through Thursday about three hours a day," he added. "Without it, especially in a living group like this, there's always something going on and when you go in there it's quiet."

"A lot of people study in their rooms, if you have will power there's a lot of places to study," Ryan Hoke, president of Christian Hall says.

Hoke, a sophomore studying electrical engineering, also uses the library occasionally.

"It's a homework between classes, I go into the front room, if you can find room in there it's OK," Hoke added.

Some off-campus students find salvation in the SUB and library, but these are not always accessible or ideal to everyone. Studying at home may not be the answer either. Interruptions from visitors, phone calls or noisy roommates are just a few of the distractions in an all too familiar atmosphere.

The Student Union Building and the Satellite SUB are conducive to Kimberly Hinkle's study time. Hinkle, a junior, lives off campus and uses the facilities which are most comfortable for her. "I like the atmosphere, the library's too quiet," she said.

Here are just four recommendations of off-campus areas available to students for studying:

- Moscow Latah County Public Library located at 110 S. Jefferson. The library offers plenty of space and uninterrupted silence. The hours are Mon. and Thurs., 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Tues., Wed., Fri., 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Sat. 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sun. 1-5 p.m.
- Fairco Minimart, 802 Troy Road.
- University Inn Pantry, 1516 Pullman Road.
- The Beaney, 602 S. Main.

Team tennis tourney slated for Kibbie

Beginning Thursday in the ASU-Kibbie Dome, the men's and women's tennis teams will host a team tennis tournament.

Team tennis is not the usual style of tennis played. It is quite enjoyable to watch, as it is a break from the norm.

The tournament will be played until Sunday, so there is plenty of time to catch the action as it lasts all day.

Basketball

Women host two in Memorial Gym

The women's basketball team will return home for two games this weekend.

The Lady Vandals' will host Idaho State University on Friday followed by rival and nationally ranked Boise State.

The team, who is currently winless, is looking for all the support it can get to help bring them to their toes. Plan ahead!

Both games are at 7 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Hammermeister instructs on training

Tomorrow night, John Hammermeister, will give a presentation on how to form a training schedule for a triathlon.

The event is being held through various recreation for the upcoming 11th annual Palouse Triathlon. The triathlon will be held April 21. It will consist of a 1.5 kilometer swim, 30 mile bike, and a 10K run.

The presentation will be at 7 p.m. in room 201 of the Physical Education Building.

A former graduate of the University of Idaho, Hammermeister is currently working on his Ph.D. in Physical Education at UI.

He is a local running and cycling champion holding many titles in triathlon and multi-sport events.

Hammermeister and a friend organized the first Hammer and Cycle Duathlon, which has become an annual event on the Palouse.
Time to support the women

Alissa Beier
Staff Writer

Boy, women’s basketball sure has come a long way. I mean, jazz, within the last twenty years or so, we as women have learned how to dribble and shoot left-handed lay-ups, get our feet in the air for that extra difficult jump shot, and even how to tie our own shoelaces of those new basketball shoes made just for us.

Anyone who knows anything about women’s basketball also knows that the game of basketball itself is a lot more demanding than just attaining the physical attributes.

Having played myself for the last ten years or so, I’ll be the first to admit that. The game for women as well as men requires determination, concentration and aggression—from junior, high ball through college.

And once you go to college and you’re good enough and lucky enough to play, you should have all these things accomplished and under your belt—along with the great support from your student body. Right?

Humph. That what I thought until I got out here in U of I last fall and found out otherwise. I was stunned after having gone to one of the very first women’s games and discovered there were less people there than at one of my own high school games.

The one and only immediate question that came to my mind was simply: why?

I mean, this is college, right? There should be tons of people here. In an attempt to answer my question, I began to thoroughly analyze the situation.

First of all, the game was on a Friday night. So what does that mean? Well, some people may have had the excuse that they had a party to go to, or they had to sleep, exercise, study, drink, or whatever. But last Friday night, when I went to one of the men’s games, there were so many people there, I actually had a very difficult time finding a seat. And what did that tell me?

That the people at the men’s game that night were definitely not

Poncina comes in with big results to lead Lady Vandals

Andrew Longteig
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho women's basketball team once again came oh so close to victory Saturday against Northern Arizona University, losing by a score of 56-53 in playing one of their best games of the season.

The Vandals (0-5 Big Sky, 0-15 overall) received a massive boost from senior Karen Pocius, having perhaps her best game in her four-year tenure at Idaho. She scored 10 points, tallied two steals and pulled down a remarkable 19 rebounds in only 31 minutes before fouling out.

Idaho had one of their best shooting games of the year, hitting 45 percent of their shots. On the other hand, the Vandals' defense smothered the Lumberjacks, as they hit 42 percent of their shots.

"I think the problem is we're very inconsistent. Clary has been consistent, but she didn't play well and that hurts," - Head Coach Laurie Turner

Kruilre, Tesar score big in opening weekend of indoor track in Kibbie

Lance Gravelle
Staff Writer

Ben Kruilre finished first in the long jump and third in the 200 meters to lead the men while Tanya Tesar finished in the top three in two events to lead the women in last weekend's two-day University of Idaho Scoring Invitational.

On Friday, Kruilre went 24 feet and took first place in the long jump. On Saturday, the freshman finished second in his heat, third overall, in the 200 meters with a time of 22.39 seconds. He also participated in the 400 relay and the 55 meters, where he competed against Idaho track legend Dan O'Brien. He was sponsored by Footlocker, and University of Washington football star Walter Napoleon Kaufman to finish sixth overall with a time of 6.65.

But in his heat, where he finished fourth, he came within a third of second in the long jump, 23-feet, six and one-half inches to take third. On Saturday, he went 37 feet, 11 and one-quarter inches in the triple jump to finish third there. The freshman also participated in the 55-meter hurdles in a non-scoring heat, finishing second with a time of 8.87 seconds.

Although some of the many squad members to place at the invitational, Tesar's teammate, Angie Mathison, also finished in the top three in her events.

Watson was the high scorer for the Vandals at 19, he also had 19 rebounds, followed by Johnson at 18 and Lightfoot at 17. Johnson was 3-4 for 3-pointers.

Height played a major role as Idaho grabbed 28 offensive and 24 defensive rebounds. The team also managed to get 35 opportunities from the charity stripe to sink 29. Four players fouled out for the Jacks, three of whom were in the starting line-up.

sophomore and 49er fun Katie Reagan. “Dallas just got lucky, I don’t like either team but I like the Bills better than the Cowboys.”

Well, that may be too harsh, it’s fun to put-down an organization labeled as “America’s Team,” and whose quarterback is an ex-UCLA Bruin with an “All-American boy” image and great off-field ethics.

Senior Carmen Mendez stated, “The greatest thing about the Super Bowl are the commercials. The thing I hate about it most is that Dallas won and it glorified the Dallas Cowboy ‘bandwagoners’.”

This is an excellent point to ponder.

The bandwagon fans. Who are they? What do they look like? Do they eat cold macaroni and cheese? Do they have poor flopping skills? Do they hate their mother? It’s not always easy to determine the whereabouts of these infiltrators, but there seems to be a sudden emergence of Cowboy fans. Maybe because they’ve won two straight Super Bowls? Perhaps they were formerly Tampa Bay Buccaneer fans?

In contrast, Chicago Bull and L.A. Laker paraphernalia has mysteriously decreased since the retirement of God (Michael Jordan) and Earvin “Magic” Johnson and since both teams are on the decline. Generally speaking, winners win over fans.

There are some “die-hard,” devoted Cowboy fans, however, as impossible as it may seem.

Freshman Luc Hebo has been a fan since 1980 and additionally lived in San Antonio for 10 years, which qualifies him as an “actual Cowboy fan.”

He justifies Dallas’ recent victory. “The way I figure it, I had to suffer through their 1-15 year, so they owe me at least two Super Bowls.”

Senior Jason Carney, although he’s not from the Lone Star State, has watched and rooted for Dallas ever since he can remember. He represents, nevertheless, the typical obsessed Cowboy fan. “The team of the 90’s has arrived,” he said boldly.

He’s unfortunately right. It may become monotonous watching the Cowboys win 3 more Super Bowls at the minimum before the turn of the century.

I’ll still be pushing for the Bills in 1995.

event, the 3,000 meters. On Friday, the freshman took third with a time of 10 minutes, 5.15 seconds, just three seconds shy of first place.

In the shot put, McCarty heaved a distance of 48 feet, 5 and one-half inches, beating out teammate Bob Thomas, who was 29 feet, 8 inches. The sophomore also placed seventh in the 3,500 meters with a time of 11 minutes, 32 seconds.

Both Thomas and McCarty are members of the distance team, consisting of Krista Edmunds, Amy Frank, Nikki Vierne and Tara Colaros, and have finished second, with a time of 4:11.42, just four seconds faster than the first-placed Eastern Washington team.

Other noted Idaho men’s track participants in Friday’s events were Darin Carson, finishing fifth in both the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.37 seconds, while Zac O’Brien took first in the event, going 7.37. Jerry Trujillo leaped for 45 feet, 1-inch in the triple jump to place fifth and Paul Thompson also came in fifth in his respective event, the 400 meters, with a time of 50.69.

On the women’s side, Sherri Mattlin and Amy Frank ended fifth and sixth overall in the 400 meters with times of 51.75 and 1:02.45. Both Cathy Ballensky and Cindy Smith ended up tied for fifth in the high jump, equalling 5 feet, 2 and one-half inches and in the 800 meters, Althea Belgrade ran a time of 2:20.80, also a fifth place finish.

The overall team scores were not completed at time of publication.

The next meet for both the men and women will be at the Eastern Washington Invitational in Cheney, Wash. this Saturday.

Tennis teams return victorious

The men's and women's tennis teams returned to Moscow after playing tournaments in Illinois and Colorado.

The women played Northern Illinois University, The Valory, Illinois State and Bradley University. While the men played Colorado State, Air Force Academy, Weber State and Westminster.

The women had a very successful trip playing and defeating Northern Illinois State first. Freshman Gwen Nikora won 7-5, 4-6, 6-3. Behind Nikora is Shaleri Dettinger in the No. 2 spot who won in two sets at 7-5, 6-3. Lash Smith was next at No. 3 winning due to default by her opponent. Following was Michelle Bogan at No. 4 winning in two sets as well 6-2, 6-0. Erin Cicolo and Misty Yancei also won in two sets. Cicolo won 6-3, 6-4 and Yancei claimed 6-0, 6-4 victory. The doubles were just as productive and they won all their matches.

The teams were Smith/Nikora, Dettinger/Bogan, and Cicolo/Yancei.

The women took on Illinois State next and although they did not win as easily as they did against Northern Illinois they still came out on top. Nikora and Cicolo are the only two that lost in their singles matches, but both made up for it in doubles competition. The final score was Idaho 7 and Idaho State 2.

Finally the women played Bradley University. This ended up being a very close match. Nikora, Dettinger and Burgan unfortunatley lost in the singles competition losing Bradley takes three points. However Smith, Cicolo and Wysopo tied it up and in doubles it became very close. The Nikora/Smith team lost in three sets. The sets were 6-4, 6-7, 6-3. The second and third games on Saturday went less than well. The Air Force took control and did not allow Idaho to get ahead. The deciding factor was in doubles where all three pairs lost right away.

Assistant Bob Uhlenkott added that fitness was a big key. The other Saturday match was against Weber State. Sony Tonz was not allowed to participate in this match due to the late arrival of his transcripts. At the No. 1 doubles spot the Hadley/Lall combination had a big win for the team, but was not able to gain a point because the other doubles teams lost. Hadley/Lall had a big win in singles. 6-1, 7-5. Ryan Stalon played a tie only 32 percent of their field goal attempts.

The always unfortifying charity stripe, however, gave Northern Arizona the extra edge over Idaho. The Lumberjacks hit 15-19 from the line compared to the Vandals' 8-11, which isn't bad, it's just that they weren't granted as many opportunities as NAU.

Six-four one senior forward Amy Dettinger came off the bench to lead the Vandals with 13 points on 6-8 shooting. She also responded with 9 rebounds, second in Pomona.

"I think the problem is we're very inconsistent," said head coach Laurie Turner. (Jennifer) Clary has been consistent, but she didn't play well and that hurt us."

Clary, the leading scorer in the Big Sky, was held to 2-11 shooting and finished with a season-low 5 points. Clary's scoring average dropped to 21.6 in the Big Sky.

Turner also emphasized that her team has had a lot of trouble with the opposing teams' full court pressure, causing many turnovers and many a missed shot.

The Lumberjacks were led by Olivia Hernandez's 16 points in only 20 minutes of action. Forward Judy Henzen led NAU with six rebounds and was second in the scoring department with 11.

The Vandals will face Idaho State Thursday and BSC rival and nationally ranked Boise State Saturday. Both game times are at 7 p.m. PST.

going to go through withdrawal if they gave up a few hours of their weekend to watch a game of hoops. So what would happen if we hypothetically changed the day of a women's game to oh, say, a Tuesday.

Now, to be sure, there are people that have things happening in their lives on Tuesday nights. But for those who have an entire evening of freedom, I could just envision, based on personal experience, how a typical conversation between them would evolve:

"Hey, what are ya doin' tonight?"
"Men, I don't know. Maybe goin' to the game or something."
"Oh, the guys are playing tonight."
"No, the girls."
"OK. I see two things wrong here. The first is when one person assumes that it was a men's game that was going on. Why would he or she automatically think that?"
Because if it was a men's game there would be more people there, faster action, and for some, better legs to look at? Come on.

The second thing I see wrong is when the other person said that 'girls' were playing. Excuse me, but weren't girls games in junior high and high school? Don't degrade us, please. On the college level, there's a called game's hall. Another possibility for low attendance at women's games could be the court action. For as many women's games as I've seen, it's true that compared to men's, women's is not as quick down the floor.

But that doesn't mean that at the end of the court, women don't work just as quickly to move the ball around. And I've never seen as much aggression in a men's game as I do in women's when there's a loose ball on the court. There ends up being a 10 woman wrestling match going on, but it sure keeps the game interesting.

A final possibility for such low support, could be the women's record. True, they're currently 0-15, but if they never had the backup of the student body to begin with, how can their team and record be boosted with the neglect they're getting from the students now?

It's very possible that people are closing their eyes to the up and (still) coming world of women's sports. Maybe they're surprised to see how far women's basketball has actually come. But whatever the case, the whole deal is almost starting to appear like a sexist affair.

Let's go, Vandals fans. Take your hats off to the Lady Vandals because they sure deserve it. And let's start to see a little more support, huh? After all, basketball is a big part of UI. If we're letting our women's team down, we're letting down our school as well.

breaker in the third set due to the already determined outcome. The final score ended Weber State 6, UI 1. Unfortunately this affected the Vandals conference record.

The final game for the men this weekend was against a close matched Wisconsin. Hadley, Tontz, Lalli and Daniel all lost their singles competitions. However, they all performed better in the doubles competition. The two winners in the singles event were No. 5 and 6, Stimson and Anderson. Idaho 3, Wisconsin 4 was the ending result.

Both men and women will play team tennis here in the ASU Kiddie Dome February 3-6. All of the teams in the Big Sky will participate, playing a round robin format where the teams winning the most games into the final day will play for the championship on national television.

Keith Bradbury, the men's solo freshman, says, "I really love this new format, it really gets the crowd into the matches."

Team tennis matches will start 9 a.m. Thursday and will last all weekend.
