Rally held to advocate HJR 16

Shelby Dopp

A crowd of about 20 people showed up for a rally in support of a proposed amendment—known as HJR 16—to the Idaho Constitution to give ten specific rights to victims of crime. The rally was held in Friendship Square next to the Moscow Hotel.

Craig Mosman, former Latah County prosecutor and local attorney who emceed the event, urged the crowd and perspective voters to vote "yes" on HJR 16.

"Victims gradually were excluded from participation in the criminal justice process. Now there is imbalance to the scales of justice," EchoHawk said in a post-event speech.

Currently, victims of crime have no protected rights under the U.S. Constitution. On the other hand, criminal offenders receive a total of 15 protected rights under the U.S. Constitutions.

"At trials, all accused seem to receive all of the protection," Mosman said.

Moscow Chief of Police Bill Brown also spoke in favor of the amendment. According to Brown, a person is more likely to become a victim of crime than of cancer or having a heart attack.

"A victim's journey through the criminal justice system can be horrendous," Brown said.

Kevin Hartwell-Beal, a regional coordinator for HJR 16, said the proposed amendment was originated by victims and crime victim advocates.

"It was developed through hearings by the Attorney General's office, at which scores of victims testified to problems they had with our court system," said Beal.

He related the case of a 15-year-old rape victim in Idaho Falls. The trial was unnecessarily postponed 13 times. After several months, the defendant pled guilty and was sentenced two to four years in prison.

"Two months later she was shopping for her family's groceries," Beal said.

NASC accreditation board to visit UI

Dennis Sasse

The Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges (NASC) will begin a board review of UI on October 5. The University is subject to an intensive accreditation review every 10 years.

The review will help NASC decide whether or not to re-accredit UI.

For the past two years, UI has conducted a self-study in preparation for NASC's visit. The Self-Study Report for the Commission on Colleges of the NASC addressed almost all aspects of institutional operation.

Included in the report were details of the university's mission, goals, long term planning, finances, administration and students.

UI Provost John Yost said, "It stimulates the review of our policies, practices and procedures through the self-analysis which anchors the whole process."

Judy Doerrnman has been part of the self-study since it started. Doerrnman, coordinator of UI's Self-Study, said, "(We) try to show ourselves in the report as an institution trying to anticipate problems so we can face them intelligently. They (the NASC) focus a lot on the roll and mission (of UI). Those people (the NASC) come in to see if the programs are good and will see if they will continue that way," said Doerrnman.

The decreasing income generated by the loss of out-of-state students should not be a major problem. UI suffered a 23 percent decrease in the number of non-resident freshmen this fall. Some have blamed this in increasing non-resident tuition.

"If they think our out-of-state tuition is out of line, they may make some comment," said Doerrnman.

Over 100 UI faculty, staff, students and administrators were involved in producing the report. Copies of the report were forwarded to each of the 16 review board members about a month ago.

"Updating the document will be a continuing process," Doerrnman said.

The report says the long-range

UI seeks to improve cultural awareness

Michelle Kalbelitzer, Staff

UI is taking a giant leap toward promoting cultural diversity on campus.

Last spring the University of Idaho Faculty Council conducted a survey of faculty on the following statement: "Cultural diversity is an issue that needs addressing at UI." Seventy-eight percent of those surveyed said "yes" to this statement.

Idaho's population has never been ethnically representative of all the diverse cultures found in America.

However, the past decade shows a vast improvement in the ethnic diversity of Idaho's residents. According to the September 4, 1994 issue of the Lewiston Morning Tribune there are 23,642 more minority residents living in Idaho than there were a decade ago. John Yost, UI provost, says, "On campuses throughout the country, we need to move from tolerance to appreciation of different cultural and ethnic backgrounds."

President Elisabeth Zimer's inaugural speech included the goal of developing campus diversity. A direct result of this goal saw the creation of the Ethnic Diversity Task Force.

The task force is charged with producing a comprehensive plan for fostering ethnic diversity. This includes issues such as minority recruitment. By the year 2004, UI administration hopes the numbers of historically under-represented minority students will equal or exceed the percentages found in the population of Idaho.

The task force also hopes to offer more courses dealing with cultural pluralism in America. At least one such course will be part of the general education requirements for all graduates.

The task force has also recommended that minority faculty to be hired in all disciplines to the fullest extent possible.

Linda Morris, a member of the Sauk and Fox Tribes in Oklahoma and a UI faculty member, has been appointed acting director of multicultural affairs. Morris says, "We primarily want to attract Hispanic and Native American populations."

While Morris also wants to attract African American students to UI, she points out that the majority of African American students here at UI are athletes. Morris would like to see more African Americans come to UI for things other than sports.

Morris believes that the multicultural initiatives will benefit students at UI. "I think it's part of the student's education, and it's really to develop an appreciation for the diverse cultures we have," says Morris.

'Embedded in chaos is simplicity'

Dennis Sasso
Staff

Dr. Roderick V. Jensen helped University of Idaho students to better understand complexities of chaos theory Monday evening in his lecture, "Chaos: The Womb of Nature and Perhaps Her Grave."

"Embedded in chaos is simplicity," said Jensen. "Pouring cream in coffee is an example of chaos—every particle of cream is exhibiting chaotic motion," Jensen said. The example of cream stirred into coffee offers up a simplistic—yet useful—explanation for chaos theory: the mixing of the cream and coffee appears to be random, but isn't according to the complex theory of chaos.

To understand Jensen's theory, students had to be up on their math. A simple logistical equation for a parabola is used to work "non-linear differential equations"—which is the basis for chaos theory. Jensen said fractals are an important descriptive tool of chaos study. Fractals are used for equations involving objects which exist in dimensions other than the three dimensions most are familiar with.

Jensen used the chaos theory to help explain population biology, economics, political science, fractals and more. Population dynamics—cyclical cycles, steady state, restrictions and population fluctuations that never appear to have any pattern—can also be explained by chaos math. Chaos also has been used to study children's behavior and learning "feedback control in biological systems."

Jensen explained the arms race with the chaos theory as well. Using the percentage of a country's gross domestic product spent on the military as a variable, Jensen showed possible outcomes of an arms race. It is "similar to the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in the last decades—where one spends nearly 100 percent of GNP on the military, the other (country) will say 'I give up.'" Jensen said the outcomes of arms treaties cannot be predicted because the chaos equation had already started.

Jensen used a simple model of a steel ball pendulum and three magnets to prove that motion can appear random. The magnets were in a triangle with the pendulum suspended between them. The steel ball appeared to move randomly among the magnets without a predictable pattern. Jensen said the system looked unpredictable but chaos can explain the motion. It could be recuced—but the system is virtually unpredictable because you need to know the initial conditions so exactly it is impractical to determine," said Jensen.

According to Jensen, "Chaos used to refer to a state of disorder and confusion, but it has a precise meaning in math and is important in science. Most sciences deal with steady-state systems." There are very few steady-state systems in the universe. "In biology, the only steady state is in a dead body," said Jensen.

"Physical science has tended to ignore complexities, (but) new mathematical developments in the past 15 years have allowed this to become a legitimate science."

Without high resolution monitors, printers and computers, the only people capable of understanding these principles would be "imaginary mathematicians."

Now people can get screen savers, calendars, posters and coffee table books that use chaos mathematics to generate images. Images inside of images, similar to the art work of M.C. Escher, was an example of the type of images that chaos mathematics and a computer can produce.

the prosecution would approach the case and see the holes in their arguments. Although he had worked on murder cases before, it was different being on the side of the accused.

"The person whose life is affected is sitting right next to you," said Mooman.

According to Kim Bouchard of the U of I Women's Center, the case was significant—and not just for Idaho. Since it was the first use of this defense, it could possibly be used as a precedent in future, similar cases across the nation.

The month of October has been declared by both state and federal officials as Domestic Violence Awareness Month and is used to make more people aware of the "tragedy of domestic violence" according to the Presidential Proclamation set forth by President Clinton last year.

According to the proclamation, a woman is battered every 15 seconds in the United States. Domestic violence is the single largest cause of injury to American women. A 1993 Department of Justice study shows more than 2.5 million women are victims of some form of violence every year. The study also shows police are more likely to respond within five minutes if the offender was a stranger than if the offender was known to the female victim.

There are more than 2000 battered women in the United States who are serving prison time for defending themselves from abuse.

FBI statistics indicate women convicted for killing their male partners are frequently sentenced to longer prison terms than are men.

According to the 1990 Senate Judiciary Committee Hearings, up to 50 percent of all homeless women and children in the U.S. are fleeing domestic violence. Comparatively, there are nearly three times as many homeless shelters in this country as there are shelters for battered women.
Party honors Chenoweth

The University of Idaho Young Republicans will be holding a tailgate party for Helen Chenoweth at 11 a.m. tomorrow in the Kibbie Dome parking lot. There will be free food and soft drinks available. The student group is inviting anyone interested in talking to Chenoweth—a Republican congressional candidate—to attend.

GLBA hosts dance

The University of Idaho Gay and Lesbian Bisexual Association (GLBA) will be hosting a dance for all students on October 1 in the Moscow Community Center on Third and Washington. The dance will be held from 9:30 to 12:30 p.m. Admission is four dollars. GLBA also meets regularly on Wednesday night at 6:30. Everyone is welcome and discretion is assured. Please call 885-2901 for more details.

Engineering day here again

This year's College of Engineering Day—beginning tomorrow—should be the biggest one so far. Matthew Cottle plans on having over 60 alumni and faculty in attendance.

Engineering day begins at 8:30 a.m. with coffee, juice and muffins in Room 104 of the Janssen Engineering building. Dean Richard Jacobson will give a state of the college address.

The tour will be given of the Engineering and Physics building. During the tour, alumni will learn about upcoming projects in the engineering and physics facilities at the University of Idaho.

Everyone participating in College of Engineering Day has been invited to watch Eric Hissaw and the Vandals totally whip up the Idaho State University Bengals.

Student Support open house

Student Support Services will be holding an open house on October 4 from 2:30 to 5 p.m. in the Continuing Education Building room 105. All students, faculty and staff are invited to help celebrate the new location of Student Support Services in the CEB. Refreshments will be served.

IFA hosting Bolivian party

The International Friendship Association is hosting an impromptu gathering on October 4 at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Vandals Lounge. Twenty-five Bolivian educators are visiting UI this month to undergo a course on environmental education. The Bolivians will be providing an evening of song and dance native to their home in the high Andes of South America and want to meet with students and community members. Call 885-7841 for more information.

Corrections

In the September 20 edition, Andrea Zeiter's name was misspelled in a photo cutline due to a photographer's error. The Argonaut would also like to clarify the article in the September 27 edition on President March's apology: the article was co-authored by Russ Wright, whose name did not appear in the by-line. A clarification is also needed in the article on the Wheatland Express bus service: the bus is free for students, faculty and staff on weekdays, but they must pay on Saturdays. The universities do not subsidize the service on Saturdays. Saturday service is $1.25 one-way.

Career Fair brings in prospective employers

Adam Gardels
Staff
The first annual, all-major Career Fair was a success, said employers who witnessed approximately 1100 to 1200 students last Wednesday's fair.

Over 40 companies from several different fields showed up for the fair. The private sector was well represented by firms such as First Security Bank of Idaho, Hewlett-Packard, Potlatch Corporation and others. Various government agencies could also be found. The Bureau of Land Management, the Department of Energy, the Idaho National Engineering Laboratories and others attended the fair.

"We had a full room since we opened the doors at 11:00," said Daniel Blanco, University of Idaho director of Career Services. "Based on this year's event, we can anticipate a lack of space for next year," said Blanco.

Blanco and Alice Barbut, UI director of Cooperative Education, were pleased with the number of employers who showed up for the event. According to Blanco, the interest in UI by these employers is important.

"A couple of employers are on this campus for the first time," said Barbut. "We are hoping that this will develop a closer working relationship with our university."

The Career Fair was beneficial to all students—regardless of whether they were seniors or freshmen. Students not graduating this fall had the chance to apply for internships and cooperative experience.

"I thought it (the Career Fair) was good," said Jenny McCoy a senior in Marketing. McCoy talked with Hewlett-Packard, Microsoft, Merk AgVet and Diversity. McCoy was convinced because most of the companies she talked to were not looking for marketing majors.

"It seemed weighted towards engineering and agriculture graduates," said Kevin Owen, a senior in accounting.

Career Fair also offered students the opportunity to learn more about potential employers.

"I learned a little more about the companies. I thought it was a real good opportunity in talk to these people in a low-stress environment," said Jason Evans, a senior in computer science.

"This has been a great fair," said Bob See, a recruiter for the Peace Corps. The Corps was somewhat unique at the fair since it didn't offer a professional career. "We are offering students a career opportunity that isn't the usual—overseas experience and the opportunity to help your fellow man."

"We are looking for computer science, electrical engineering and computer technical people," said Teresa Ball, a human resource manager at Micros Computer.

Microsoft's Chad Ottendal is proof that success can come from these internship experiences. Often while working on an engi- neer and UI graduate in computer science, said, "I did a co-op for seven months with Microsoft and then I went back to school."

Ottendal said that his internship was crucial in getting his job.

"There is nothing more impressive than interviewing someone who has researched your company," Ottendal said.

Microsoft is mostly looking for computer science majors, but they are looking for graduates with tech- nical skills who understand people and "want to learn."
UI Athletic Department deserves applause

After a flaccid last weekend, the UI Athletic Department has decided to slightly revise their policy on student seating in the Kibbie Dome.

What was a well-intentioned gesture towards students backfired when several students brought their fathers along for a Dads’ weekend viewing of the spanking the Vandals gave to the SFA Louisiana. The parents, however, were not allowed into the student section because of the new policy.

Yes, the policy was enforced with a bit too much vigor, but the Athletic Department has moved quickly to revise the policy to make sure students are allowed to bring parents, spouses and children into the student section. What is important here is the fact that the Athletic Department is at least attempting to look out for UI students and give them the privileges they deserve for paying $774 in fees a semester. If other departments on campus were as quick to respond to student needs, UI students would be in hog heaven.

Argonau has an ‘agenda’

There have been a few accusations of biased campaign coverage sent to the Argonaut’s offices, mostly in regard to the Argonaut Interviews.

Faithful readers will know we’ve covered Larry LaRocco, Helen Cherwitz, Ann, Tom, Will Sullivan and Larry EchoHawk. An astute reader will notice that LaRocco and Chenoweth are running against each other as are Sullivan and Fox. Democrat Larry EchoHawk is running against Republican Phil Batt for the Idaho Governor.

Senator Batt is running in a manner not conducive to photo opportunities, Kristen Bennett received grief over placing senate campaign signs in the wrong places, as did Danon Durasky. Student Issues Board Chair, for not taking them down in time for the balloting. Dan Whitling, ASUI lobbyist, made comments to the Legislature that he heard from a voice inside his head that sounded like Barry Goldwater. When the ASUI senate inquired about his comments, he said that they were made during lunch, so he wasn’t on the clock.

All this petty stuff seemed so important then. People stood on the senate floor about how they were wronged. People stood on the campaign trail because they were wronged again. People went on the groupon to suggest that the ASUI debate, in some kind of Roundhouse gesture, might legislate that the oceans, in fact, are made of lemonade.

As I thought about student government politics through the summer, I realized that most of the ASUI does is of little substance. The ASUI deserves credit for putting this paper out, keeping KUDI-FM on the air, and keeping an Idaho State theatre filled for台上 government and some with as a class governe. I'm always ready to students spend their money. In fact, they spend about one million dollars of their

president because they can not do

their duties all summer. John Marble said he could do both duties and didn’t. He has fired people from ASUI positions for less. I wished I was in a position that allowed me to negotiate my job for a few more months, after my last apology and start work again.

In the ASUI Bible, a.k.a. “Rules and Regs,” it states that the president will be reassigned throughout the summer so that he or she can carry out their ASUI duties. This clause is a prerequisite for being ASUI president.

While many students cannot be president because they can not do their duties all summer, John Marble said he could do both duties

duties and didn’t. He has fired people from ASUI positions for less. I wished I was in a position that allowed me to negotiate my job for a few more months, after my last apology and start work again.

I used to take the ASUI seriously.

It provided my primary source of income, not to mention attitudes and stamina. Due to many developments, I have taken a different time. I used to feel guilty for missing ASUI staff meetings, yelling at the Communications Board and missing an article deadline on a regular basis. A writer who left after this summer even accused me of being rather arrogant about my stance on staff meetings. If you don’t go to staff meetings you will be fired. It’s not the Argum, I do this everywhere, do not agree, or so I’d like to think.

Now I have come to terms with the Protestant guilt ethic, however.

better, more healthy way than to sit down with a hundred of your closest friends and recite lines from Money Python and the Holy Crack at the Micro. What, you can’t get in? Run down to any video place around here and rent it, then. Grab your comfy chair, get out your fish and license and be dragged into the world of Python.

Few things in this world are as soothing as singing “The Lumberjack Song” along with Eric Idle and the rest. In fact, the only song that makes me more than “The Lumberjack Song” is “Sit On.

My Face.” My heart always cracks me up. I once sang that song as one half of a duet in the McDonald’s across the street from the Idaho State University campus. The employees didn’t thank us for our services, although a customer or two did applaud. If you’ve ever been to Pocatello, you know what a tough audience people there can be.

Not only can Monty Python calm you and bring back your smile in times of distress, it can introduce you to new friends and a brotherhood of genial insanities. Here’s an easy test: Walk up to someone you might like to talk to and say, “She turned me into a new!” They might run away, but if you say “A new?” or perhaps “I get being after last they’re probably not psychotic and could make good friends, or at least someone to bum food from in times of need.

There are other tests to perform, as well. Some are more erotic than others, but any one of them (with correct responses) could work:

1) You: “I didn’t expect the Spanish Inquisition.” Them: “NOBODY expects the Spanish Inquisition!”
2) You: “You don’t even the bones out!” Them: “Well if you took the bones out, it wouldn’t be crunchy, now would it?”
3) You (singing): “I cut down trees, I skin and jump, I like to press wildflowers…” Them: “I put on women’s clothing and hang around in bars!”

Naturally, there are many others, but space limitations prevail.

Besides, I can’t remember them all. (Who would want to?)

In addition, the group of people that become Python fans, the more like-it is that world peace and desecration and happiness will spread around the globe. Have you ever heard of someone declaring war on some happy nation while the advisors were humming “Always Look on the Bright Side of Life”? No, and you never will either. Have you ever seen someone become depressed while watching Live at the Hollywood Bowl? Certainly not.

In fact, studies indicate that exposure to Monty Python can actually increase one’s cognitive abilities. I give you a friend: a female mine once had a problem with his favorite brand of chips. It kept disappearing. This depressed him, and so one day, he began listening to a live recording of Monty Python’s classic “Argument Clinic” routine. Suddenly, in a flash of intuition, the answer was there! Actually, it was just the opposite; his explosion, because when his roommate heard the routine, he began to laugh with great force, spaying a mouthful of half-eaten chips every

I admit, it wasn’t a masterpiece of deductive reasoning, but what the hell. I got the job done. Besides, for this guy to get a clue at all was nothing short of miraculous.

If you're looking for ways to cut loose, relax and get in touch with the inner person your mother never wanted to see, gorge yourself on Monty Python videos and albums. Going to a cheese shop will never be the same.
Letters to the Editor

Kibbie seating outrageous

This letter is being sent to express my outrage over the poor treatment of General Admission ticket holders at the University of Idaho home football opener against Stephen F. Austin this past weekend.

In light of past Kibbie Dome football attendance (80 percent of capacity) and recent events regarding UI’s bid to join NCAA 1-A football, (17,000 average home attendance) we find your “seating arrangements” to be unbelievably ill-conceived.

Both of my parents are UI alumni. I attended my first Vandals football game when I was three years old. I also attended UI and was a member of the Vandals Marching Band for four years. During this time, I attended every home game, including always poorly attended playoff appearances during Thanksgiving break. I tell you this so that you will realize that I am a loyal and dedicated fan of Vandals football.

Imagine my dismay this past Saturday after paying $12 for my General Admission ticket when I was told that I must sit at the end of the Dome, down field of the 15 yard line. I suppose I was fortunate enough to arrive a half hour before kickoff so that I could get a seat on the 15. My fellow General Admission holders arrived after I, and with rather disgruntled expressions, sat in on the 5 yard line or in the end zone itself.

Imagine my further dismay when, after the kickoff, those of us who paid twelve dollars looked over to see the section next to us empty! Mr. Herman, if the students can not fill their section of the stadium with free admission, what makes you think we will continue to fill the worst seats in the house at $12 a seat?

My husband and I will not continue to pay $24 a game to watch the Vandals from the 15 yard line or worse, and at this crucial time, when attendance is so important, losing even two loyal fans is dangerous.

I ask you to re-evaluate your “seating arrangements” for General Admission ticket holders.

The current policy will only result in a decrease in patronage as General Admission ticket holders will start to feel that their attendance obviously isn’t as important as the students.

General Admission should include the 15 to the 35 on both ends. The end zone to the 15 and the 35 to the 35 should be reserved for students. Thank you for consideration of this letter. I hope to receive a letter soon.

Proposition One intrusive

If Rob Hafen genuinely believes Proposition One won’t drastically change the way we all—gay and straight—conduct our lives in the state of Idaho, I suggest he get a second opinion—a legal opinion. Larry Echohawk, our attorney general, Elizabeth Brandt, UI professor of law, and the ACLU have all declared that Proposition One does not prevent homosexuals from achieving “minority status,” but instead attempts to deny 10% of the population certain basic civil rights.

As a lesbian, I object to Hafen’s comparing Proposition One to a smoking ban. Should the proposition pass, I might be denied equal access to housing and employment; groups I am a member of, like the Inland Northwest Gay Peoples Alliance, might be denied the use of public facilities which we support with our tax dollars. Smoking may hazard your health, but it doesn’t rob you of your livelihood.

And with regards to his questions about whether or not the state should compel hiring preferences for gays and lesbians, allow us to legalize our relationships to our spouses and our children or present our lives as acceptable. We’re not asking for quotas—we’re asking that the state not sanction prejudices. If my partner and I will have a child this January and, whether the state recognizes our relationship or not, we will welcome our baby into a stable, loving, functional family.

I am not interested in how you conduct your life, Mr. Hafen. I don’t care what you teach your children, how you feel about homosexuality, or whether or not you think I should be allowed to marry and adopt; I only ask that you—in the time-honored way of Idahoans—keep yourself to your- self. Vote no on Proposition One.

Daltons livin up Vandal Cafe with ethnic music

Shelby Beck
Staff

Jim and Maggi Smith-Dalton return to the ASUI Coffeehouse stage tonight where they will present an evening of American, Celtic, and British Isles music.

“They are the things we really specialize in,” says Jim Dalton. “We live in the music, but it’s actually a Greek instrument that was adopted by the Irish about thirty years ago,” says Dalton, who has a masters degree in music. Originally from the east coast, the Daltons performed there from 1984 to 1992 under the name Chanterelle.

During that time they appeared on public television and numerous radio programs. They also presented the many different educational programs below: Music of Colonial Times and Revolution, 18th Century American Victorian Parlor Songs, Songs of River and Sea, Following the Wind: Music and Movements of the American 1960s and What a Weapon is the Ballot—200 Years of Presidential Campaign Songs.

In addition, Chanterelle recorded two albums, Weavers: Strangers; Songs of Yarning and Wild Rushing Waves: Songs of River and Sea.

Dalton says although it is hard to pin down why they originally became interested in earlier forms of music, he believes it was partly because both have always been interested in history and because Smith-Dalton’s degree is in American Studies. American Studies is an interdisciplinary degree encompassing music, art, history, and politics in order to study society.

“A natural outgrowth of that is, of course, music,” says Maggi Smith-Dalton.

Of today’s modern musical culture, specifically music videos, Dalton says the deciding factor is the style of music, but the way it is presented.

“What I don’t like has nothing to do with the music itself,” he says, “it has to do with the fact that images are being planted in your mind. It doesn’t allow you to create images yourself.”

The next project for the Daltons is a public television program which they will film in Cour d’Alene this October. After the tour to the east coast again where they will begin touring in late spring.

Jim and Maggi Smith-Dalton will perform in the Vandal Cafe at 8 p.m. this evening as part of ASUI Productions Coffeehouse. Admission is free.

Acker’s fiction reading offensive, pornographic

Amy Ridenour
Lifestyles Editor

Wednesday evening, my daughter attended a fiction reading by Kathy Acker, author of Blood and Guts in High School, and My Mother: Demonstrations. To describe, in detail, my feelings about this reading is nearly impossible. All I can say is that I was so offended, repulsed and disgusted by this that I need counseling to recover. This was no little extern, but I was rather upset in any case. This is why I think Acker’s reading was an understatement. To say that she is a innovator is an overstatement. Her writing was purely and strictly pornography.

Her actions, at times, had a few redeeming qualities. For example, she did well with imagery for the private acts, she only uses words in a suggestive nature.

I also couldn’t understand why this author was met with such an excited greeting. There were a few people who were practically frothing at the mouth in anticipation of her reading.

I cannot understand why people were so riveted by this read. I guess maybe I’m naive, and maybe my idea of literary work doesn’t jive with the rest of the student body, but I cannot comprehend why people would want to read, listen to, and pay money for glorified pornography.

Maybe like the accident that people drive by and don’t want to look at, but do anyway because they’re curious. Maybe that logic explains the attraction to her work. People are curious, people want to see.

As for me, I think it is fairly obvious.

Rants & Raves

Renegade Saints are the sound of good old-fashioned rock or classic rock. Not sticking with one style they vary their music to encompass a wide range of the spectrum. During the night’s act, one could be listening to a soft ballad or country with emotions on Joan Jett’s guitar, while the next song could be a fast paced hard rock tune.

The Renegade Saints play with a feel of three-part harmony. Basically, this quintet of musicians creates an atmosphere which an individual could dance to.

On Saturday, October 1, at 6:30 p.m. the Renegade Saints will perform at the Moscow Social, Church Avenue. Cover is $3.50 at the door, and you can pre-pay for tickets at Guitar’s Friend in downtown Moscow for $5.00.

The Renegade Saints began their set at 9:30 tonight. The set will feature songs from their latest album, Fear of the Sky.

This promises to be a show packed with powerful songs, soft ballads and fast dance tunes. No matter what your mood is for the night, there should be something for everyone to enjoy.

CIRCLE OF KNOTS IS THE MUSIC OF THE AGE

A seraphic sound wafting down from the heavens with the harmonious voices of all the members in the band Circle of Knots to create the melody which is the sound of this band. With an upcoming release on September 30, Circle of Knots is ready to jump into the light of fame.

Their music is that of a story. With an arsenal of four instruments and five vocalists, this band draws in the attention of the listener. As a result, Circle of Knots is a band that plays character music described by Rusty Tucker, head of the band, as "the music describes the words." The band is comprised of five members: Angela Trevilla, percussionist; Gregory Young, keyboard/vocals; Jessica Weeks, guitar/vocals; Jonathan W docker, bass; and Brad Levit ignanti, drums. The band was formed in Moscow, Idaho, their creation came around January 1, 1993. Today—Friday, September 30—they are on tour for the self-titled Circle of Knots. Not only are they as ever growing band, three of the members are students at Washington State University.

After listening to the album, I was astounded to think that it was over. There are 9 tracks on the CD which add up to one hour of beauty. This is definitely a band you will not be taking out of the CD for a while. Their music hasyremonies of both Moscow and Pullman, Pullman being their home town.

They have also appeared in Seattle at the 'soppy club, as well as a performance of a traditional performance, a CD release party, a show at a bar, and also a performance at a coffee shop in town. The show is free and runs from 9:30 to 11:30.

The band is comprised of five diverse individuals, all comprised of talent for the sound of music. The Renegade Saints have a very well known band in the Northwest their sound, like Clapton and The Allman, is done in the classic rock style. Yet, these guys are not a cover band. The

Moist finds success with Silver

Matt Baldwin
Staff

A rainstorm fades on the land, closes around the mountain, pours its baggage, and then moves on, leaving the country below moist. After hearing the album Silver by the band Moist, I felt a sense of glistening water and remembrance of the music I had just listened to. These native Canadians began playing rock in 1993.

In 1994 they signed a contract with Chrysalis Records which resulted in a spectacular album. The CD opens on a quiet prairie, and spins flawlessly in the discman as the first track comes up. "Push" begins with a guitar intro bringing in each piece as if they were separate entities.

Then begins David Usher on vocals, breathing out his lyrics. "Push" halts the coming of the storm. In comes a break in the storm with "Believe Me," a nice mellow song. It includes choruses by the rest of the band. The cover song, "Silver," is a blend of guitar, keyboards, bass, drums and the soft, breathing voice of the lead vocalist.

The storm of the album closes with "Low Low Low." Soft piano and gentle guitar accompany the vocalist as he sings a soft lullaby. As "Low Low Low" ends you wonder where it all went. An album of intense quality signs this band onto future success. Be watching for this quintet in the future.

Moist's Silver can be found at most record stores.

They are available on the Chrysalis label, distributed by EMI Records.

Collette Theater season smolders to a start

Lanford Wilson's play Burn This opens October 6 under the direction of UI theater arts graduate student Don Horton.

The play runs through October 9. Performances are at 8 p.m. October 6, 7 and 8 and at 2 p.m. on October 9. Tickets are $4 at the door.

Wilson is a widely celebrated American playwright and has received awards for two of his previous plays: Tall's Folly and How I L. Baltimore, Burn This. Wilson's latest, is a contemporary play set in a New York loft.

The loft is shared by Anna, played by Kelly Quinett; and Larry, played by Carey Gibbar who is also the recently deceased Bobby. It is a period of change and the characters are struggling to overcome old habits.

Anna's relationship with her yuppie boyfriend Burton, played by Andy Wyke, is shifting.

Into the lives of these three enters Robby's brother Pate, performed by Brad Rohman. With the establishment of these four characters, Wilson explores the randomness of fate and the transient nature of relationships as people enter and exit the lives of characters when least expected.

Burn This is an intense play, it is both strongly sensual and blandly sexual. Horton says, "Wilson provides plenty of laughs along the way but he also lets the characters speak and act as they would, in very adult situations with very explicit language, so the play is not intended for children or teenagers." Burn This may not be for everyone, but it just might be something for you.

Local fishermen may find in Idaho.

The Idaho Department of

Fish and Game has adopted a list of non-trial license requirements for steelhead fishing along the Clearwater River after a request from the Idaho

Fish and Game Commission.

Hayes said it had been the tribes' intention all along to keep the river open, but to require non-trial members to join non-trial license.

Hayes said, "The Nez Pierce

Executive Committee has the authority to regulate fishing on the Clearwater under the U.S. Constitution. Specifically articles

2 and 6."

Hayes added, "I am going against the State of Idaho as well as the Commission."

Dave Claycomb is being charged with non-trial license.

Mr. Hayes said that the Nez Pierce may find it hard going legally to enforce the laws.

Fish and Game Officers

William Snow of Orofino also said, "The Idaho Department of Fish and Game doesn’t think it’s proper for the Nez Pierce to regulate fishing on the Clearwater and we recommend that anyone with questions about fishing on the Nez Pierce should contact the bureau."

The U.S. Attorney’s Office in

in current investigations on the Nez Pierce Tribe, however,

someone caught fishing without a non-trial license will be "handed"

What makes this complicated is that if a non-Indian fisherman is ticketed but not having a license, the issue would be settled in a federal court.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs said the legal details of the license are not in the public domain because the ticket would be a confidential issue. The result could not be tried in a federal court.

The Nez Pierce Tribe is currently negotiating with a band

$10 per license.

The Nez Pierce Tribe will be able to hunt both in Idaho and

At least when the ravens came to visit him, Edgar Allan Poe was at home. And by his own admission the evening already was a "midnight dreary." When ravens came to visit me last summer, not only was I not at home, when they showed up, they ruined a great day and effectively ended a great camping trip.

I have camped on the shores of beautiful Dworshak Reservoir many times and have never been so insulted as I was by those rude ravens. And that includes the time the Corps of Engineers' police boat smashed into the side of my tent.

My problem with ravens started when I unwittingly left all our food sitting in boxes on the picnic table. I had not yet learned the origin of the word ravens. I should have had a clue when I noticed across from the lake, several (hundreds?) large black birds wheeling in endless circles over our camp. I shrugged it off as just some dead animal about to be turned into something's dinner. What I really was witnessing was raven air traffic control putting birds into holding patterns because raven rumor had it that there were only a few vanilla sandwich cookies left. I can imagine that numerous safety violations probably had occurred.

Three hours later when I came back to camp, I was confronted with a sight that sent me into a raven induced rage. Curiously, although not one vanilla cookie was left, there were many chocolate sandwich cookies left. I can't believe that birds as gluttonous as those could be such picky eaters. However, what broke my heart was the sight of an empty Tost Pan box. I was not used to such treatment on that, my favorite lake. Sure, on previous camping trips, I had been plagued by pests of other sorts, mainly bees. But I know how to handle hornets and yellow jackets.

All that's needed to rid a campsite of a pests is a little soupy water in a glass pan, a piece of string and a chicken leg. Bees, especially yellow jackets, love meat.

They come to the chicken leg in swarms, competing with each other for the choicest bits. It's funny when the greedy little SOBs (Stingers on Backends) try to fly off. They almost always eat too much.

They get too heavy to avoid the soupy water I cleverly place a few microns beneath the chicken leg. The sight of so many bee carcasses floating with their little faces in the gray soups will warm the cockles of the most cold hearted person. Even someone who's food just got snarffed by ravens.

On a particularly good day, in just a few minutes so many bees are dead on the water that new arrivals will ignore the chicken and begin to feed on those that have already gone on before them. It's really gross, but it is closest thing to perpetual motion you can find outside of a strip joint.

It occurred to me, after the ravens took the food right off my table, that my big mistake was in the placement of the table. Next time I camp out on the shores of Dworshak Reservoir, I am going to use the following defense against ravens.

Before I leave camp to go boating, I will take the table and the food on it down to the water's edge. Maybe then, when those greedy birds eat all of my pop tarts and very likely they will be so laden with my larder they will fly into the water and drown.

I can see it now, the water black with dead ravens brought down by Pop Tarts. Now there is an image to gladden the heart.

As quoted in the September 18, 1994 issue of Outdoors: The Argonaut

Beautiful Idaho in your backyard

Adam Gardels

Scenic Idaho is local and very accessible. You can drive it in a loop and not miss the sights.

Starting in Moscow going north on I 95, take a right at Potlach and head east on Highway 6. Before you know it, you'll be cutting through the academically inclined towns of Princeton and Harvard.

Highway 6 takes you through the heart of the St. Joe National Forest. Don't blink because you'll miss the worlds largest white pine.

Once you leave the forest head south on highway three toward Santa and Fernwood. For those wanting to camp, try the Forest Service Campground at Emerald Creek.

The turn-off is just passed Fernwood near the garnet mill. Emerald Creek is active with garnet mining and captures the rustic feel of the homestead western life in the TV series Bonanza. Cattle can be seen grazing on the low-lying planes set in front of the mountains.

The area is rich with history. There are numerous homesteads and cabins in the area and the abandoned Jim's Spur Mill site along the highway.

The mill sawed timber from the surrounding hills for years before economics and fire forced its shutdown.

Now worry, your eyes will feast mostly on trees. The forest service graciously provides well maintained camp sites for the few of six snacker (so bring your wallet).

Keep on going south on your way to Moscow. If you haven't got your fill yet, take a left at Bovill on Highway 8.

At the end of this stretch of road, you will find Elk River and its famous falls.

Just before you reach Moscow on your way home, don't forget to stop by Spring Valley.

If you have a little time, you can drive a winding in the lake and try your hand at fishing.

The Idaho Vandals pounded everything in sight Tuesday night while the Washington State Cougars just got pounded.

The 246-ranked Vandals sent the 208-ranked Cougars packing in a 15-5, 15-3, 15-14 drubbing in front of a record 1,550 Memorial Gym fans.

Game one saw the Cougars score two quick points, but the clubs buckled down on defense, trading 11 rotations without a point. After the stalemate, the two teams traded points to a 5-5 tie, but then the Cougars ran into a brick wall. Idaho reeled off 10 unanswered points to grab the easy first game win.

"I didn't think they could dominate us like that," Cougars coach Cindy Frederick said. "The game started so slow. It was like they lulled us to sleep and then all of a sudden, bang!"

Idaho equaled its game one mark again in the second set. Leading 5-3, the Vandals (15-1) scored 10 more consecutive points and put game two in the bag.

The Vandals drilled 43 kills and just 8 errors in the two games, hitting a phenomenal .432 and .514 respectively. The Cougars state after the first two games did little to bolster their confidence, tallying just 22 kills against 16 errors.

Washington State did show signs of life in game three. Trailing 8-3, the Cougars went on to outscore Idaho 12-3 the rest of the way and narrow the margin to two games to one.

In game four, the Cougars reverted back into the toilet, committing 16 errors, while compiling only eight kills.

"We said going in that the key was to not let them run points," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "I think we did a pretty good job of stopping that with the exception of that one point in the third game."

The Vandals, who moved up a spot in the second game, closed out the game with a 1-0, 6-0, 15-7 victory over the Cougars in the fourth.

Sherriden May.

Last week, May scored two touchdowns to become the all-time leading scorer in Idaho history. He needs just 257 more yards to break USF's rushing record and is eight touchdowns short of the 1- AA record. May, a senior, is 11th in the nation in rushing at 131.7 yards per game.

The Bengal defense surrendered 357 points per game — worst in the Big Sky.

In last week's 41-19 loss to Northern Arizona, nevertheless, ISU held Len Raney, the second leading rusher in 1- AA, to 18 yards. Defensive end Josh Hays led the defense with three sacks to give him six for the season.

ISU is also last in the Big Sky in scoring, averaging 24.3 points per game. However, last year's Big Sky Newcomer of the Year, Alfredo Anderson, is a multi-talented running back but is the only real source of offense for the Bengals.

After being the second leading rusher in the BSC last year, Anderson is averaging only 52 yards per game in 1994. Another problem for ISU is their turnover ratio. They have turned the ball over 10 times in the last two games.

The Bengals' head coach is Brian Mahoney who is 6-19 in his third year. Last week, he reprimanded the UI football program.

"I've got nothing to say," Head Coach John L. Smith. said. "I'm not going to say anything about anybody's program — I refuse to comment."

ISU will have to contend with the big-play Vandal offense. In the SFV game, Idaho forced four second-half turnovers and all led to touchdowns — one of which was a 51-yard interception return for a touchdown by linebacker Tommy Knecht.

The Vandals' secondary has been bolstered with the additions of Derrike Smith and Montrell Williams.

Idaho needed to use Williams' athleticism and 6-4 40-yard dash speed somewhere. Originally, he was a running back and wide receiver.

Smith came off the bench last week and recorded five tackles and one pass deflection. He will make his first start against ISU.
