Parking issue goes before City Council

City must approve charging for Moscow-owned streets

The University of Idaho will be proposing a controversial new parking regulation at its Moscow City Council meeting. The new parking plan would eliminate free parking areas on Elm Street, between 9th Avenue and 10th Avenue.

The streets are not owned by UI and ifUI is controversial whether or not UI should be granted permission to charge for parking on city streets.

I think this plan is really going to benefit the residents in those areas. When we're talking about eliminating free parking on other areas, is free parking really that much of a benefit? Just because it's free doesn't mean we aren't going to make sure it's properly used.

Shenk said parking issues such as changing means for free parking would be discussed by the new council next week. Shenk, a student from the University of Idaho, said he would not attend the City Council meeting. Shenk, a student from the University of Idaho, said he would not attend the City Council meeting.

UI administration has been planning for parking on public streets paid for by Moscow citizens property taxes for several years. The university should get a share of the revenue and be able to use it to help fund the university. Shenk said.

The plan was rejected by the City Council last week and Shenk said the plan has been recommended by the UI administration.

The plan parking permit will go before the City Council in March for a vote. The meeting will take place at City Hall at 7 p.m.

Tempest’-tossed Shakespeare

by JEAN HARRISON

The Idaho Repertory Theatre opened its final show of the 1989 season Wednesday, performing William Shakespeare’s “The Tempest.”

“The Tempest” is a tale of magic, fantasy and romance set on Prospero’s island. The play’s essence lies in the strength and bearing upon his stepson Ferdinand.

Using his magical powers, Prospero creates a storm to make a brigand and rescue a young girl, Miranda, from a desert island. Finally, in the play’s conclusion, Ferdinand, Miranda, and Prospero’s son, Antonio, are united.

“The Tempest” performed outdoors is part of the 50th season of Shakespeare Under the Stars. For the past five years, 1999 has performed 12 Shakespearean shows.

Broken arm causes UI student to lose arm wrestling title

Four months after breaking his arm during a championship arm wrestling competition at his year-old University of Idaho student, Travis Million saw his arm wrestling days come to a close.

"I had no idea what was going on. My arm began flying out of control like a whip."

TRAVE MILLION

pound steam through a cheering crowd, win in his first round, and advance to compete in the championship's grand championship. His left hand opened and closed to coordinate a pivot point for his arm's weight, and the nix of his shoulder as it was poised and balanced. His arm buzzed and it was at approximately 100 pounds.

"I couldn't bear the crowd and I couldn't stand the heat. I had to leave the competition before the championship," Million said. "I couldn't stand the heat. I had to leave the competition before the championship."

Moments after the arm wrestling matches, Million's arm's strength began to fade. "I was in a state of shock," Million said. "I had to get my arm checked to make sure it was okay."

Midsummer Million begins to drive Graue's toward the table. "Then something went wrong," Million said. "I never felt more like being cut in a circle with a whip. And the crowd began to laugh."

Million then had a break his arm and drove his hand into his shoulder. "I had to leave the competition before the championship," Million said. "I couldn't stand the heat. I had to leave the competition before the championship."

Million's doctor recom-mended not to use the arm until the arm has been treated by a doctor.

Last week Million was at the Moscow bowling 250 pounds over his body weight.

"I don't know how I did it," Million said. "I don't know how I did it."

Although Million lost the arm wrestling championship, "This year will be a different year. I'm excited about it."
