Hoover sees big changes

BY JOE BROEST

University of Idaho President Bob Hoover has announced a new enrollment policy: starting this fall, the school will no longer admit students to its pre-med program. The change is expected to result in a decrease of six to eight students per year.

For years, Hoover has been concerned about the lack of diversity in the student body. He believes that the new policy will help to address this issue. "We need to ensure that our students come from a wide range of backgrounds," he said. "This new policy will allow us to achieve that goal."
Mail releases plan to settle dispute with city

The Boise State Mail and approximately 30 news and sports editors from the school newspaper have reached an agreement in principle to end a monthlong impasse at the Boise State University Daily. The agreement, which was finalised after negotiations began Thursday in San Francisco, has the potential to end the conflict that has kept the City of Boise from issuing the newspaper a permit to publish.

The agreement calls for the newspaper to publish two issues per week in the city, which is currently only printing once a week. The city has been withholding a permit to publish in the city because of the newspaper's coverage of two previous students who were killed. Instead, the newspaper has been printing in San Francisco, which is located across the street from the Boise State campus.

Student rec center on schedule for January completion

BY WADE BUCHANAN

Despite rumors that its construction is about to be stopped, the Campus Recreation Center should be finished and open by mid-January, said Raymond Pankopf, director of architectural and engineering services for the University of Idaho.

"We were not looking for a big exclamation mark-type building," Pankopf said. "Raymond Pankopf was able to make the university a mark-type building."

Sacramento family slayings suspect found
by WILLIAM BOOTH
The Sacramento Bee
SACRAMENTO, Calif.—The Sacramento police have arrested a family member, including his pregnant wife, after a body was found Thursday morning near a duck pond in his mother's backyard.

Joseph Solfy, 27, was arrested following a search of a residence in the area. Police said Solfy had been living at the residence with his wife and children.

The bodies of Solfy's wife, Sherry, 22, and their children, ages 5 and 6, were found inside the house when police arrived. The children appeared to have been killed by a single gunshot wound to the head, according to police.

Solfy was taken into custody without incident and is expected to make an appearance in court this afternoon.

The case is being investigated by the Sacramento County Sheriff's Department.

Alcohol policy changes

THE CHRONICLE/DUST

Eugene Y. Parks Jr., V.P. for student affairs at WSU, University will implement an alcohol and drug policy that was designed to "construct a culture" of alcohol use on campus. The new policy was written in response to federal regulations that require the university to establish regulations to prevent alcohol-related abuse.

The policy is based on the four-incident per semester or alcohol-related events. This means that students who are found to be in violation of the policy will be subject to a range of sanctions, including suspension or expulsion.

The policy is designed to prevent alcohol-related incidents on campus, and will be enforced through the university’s Student Conduct and Disciplinary Office. It is expected that the policy will be in effect for the fall semester of 2003.

Good Intentions

THE WASHINGTON NEWS/DAN SMITH

SMITH, WASHINGTON — As a graduate student in the Department of Counseling, I have been working with many students who are currently dealing with personal issues, whether it be addiction or mental health concerns. I have come to realize that without proper support and guidance, these students often struggle to overcome their challenges.

I have been fortunate enough to be part of a university that recognizes the importance of mental health and provides resources to support students in need. However, it is clear to me that more needs to be done to ensure that all students have access to the help they need.

With the increasing number of students struggling with personal issues, it is essential that universities take steps to ensure that students have access to the resources they need to thrive.

BUMPERSHOT
REINVENTING THE UMBRELLA

Bumpershots attracts art enthusiasts to 74 acres of fun over Labor Day weekend.

By CHRISTOPHER KORNEFSKY

The Seattle Arts Festival, also known as Bumbershoot, is again upon this year with a diverse lineup that you can't find anywhere else in the world. Bumbershoot is the only place you can see an artist who recently played with you from the Built to Spill on your way to hear the band with the last name of Mars. So if you know anyone on the person on your tour, tell them to be at the Seattle Center, and if you don't, you can always find new bands, and a herd stallion.

WANT TO HIT

Critter Buggs or the Fugly Kingdom from 11:30-1. This is an incredible band that you don't want to miss if you are a fan of electronic music. The built to Spill will be the last band on the Main stage at 8:30. Don't let any of your friends know about this so you can be the only one to see them.

WANT TO MISS

David Lee Roth, I'm not a huge fan of this band, but they have been around for a while and they are going to be at the Seattle Center, so they are going to be there. Therefore, you should go to see them. They are going to be at the Seattle Center, so you should go to see them.

By HEATHER BRENNEMANN

Self-described as "an eclectic psychedelic bass band, formed within its own pain," Puddle of Mudd, a new favorite of the Seattle area, has a distinctive sound that they believe is unique and unlike any other band.

Although their first album, "Goodbye to a Friend," was met with mixed reviews, the band's second album, "Welcome to Realms," was well received and has solidified their place in the world of alternative rock.

COME CLEAN

Puddle of Mudd produced this album, their second, in the style of bands they admire, such as Nirvana and Pearl Jam. The band's sound is described as a cross between rock and roll and alternative rock.

The album starts out strong with "Welcome," a song that probably has a wide range of appeal. The band's music is a mix of rock and roll, with some pop elements, which allows them to appeal to a broad range of listeners.

A psychostyle

Puddle of Mudd's unique sound has drawn comparisons to other bands in the alternative rock scene, such as Nirvana and Pearl Jam.

'The Others' serves solid suspense

Nicole Kidman, star of the film "The Others," at the Beverly Hills premiere, received the critics' praise for her performance. The film, directed by Alejandro Amenabar, was released in the United States on August 2.

Nicole Kidman has been her. She has won an Academy Award for her performance in "Eyes Wide Shut," and now she is back with another great role. This time, she is playing a woman who is being haunted by ghosts in her house.

Nicole Kidman has been a great actress for many years, and she has won many awards for her performances. She is a very talented actress, and she has been able to make a lot of people love her.

The film "The Others" is a very interesting one. It is about a woman who is being haunted by ghosts in her house. She is trying to stop the ghosts from destroying her family, and she is trying to find out who the ghosts are.

The film is a very thrilling one. It is full of suspense and mystery, and it is very well directed by Alejandro Amenabar. The actors are also very good, and they are able to make the audience feel scared and interested.

Jefferson’s Bible reconstruction still raises eyebrows

by Constance Jones

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — All along, John Jefferson worried about his father, Thomas Jefferson, in the years after his death. Jefferson was convinced that his father’s Bible was flawed, that it lacked the final pages of the New Testament that Thomas Jefferson had added to it. Yet he knew that distinguishing the New Testament that his father added to the manuscript in their father’s lifetime from that of his father’s lifetime was impossible.

Thomas Jefferson’s reconstruction of the New Testament begins at Mary’s impossible conception and ends with his father’s death on Monticello, just outside the town of Charlottesville.

While this post-Fourth of July heralded the traditional independence of the Jeffersonian tradition, the Jeffersonian tradition has always been a difficult one to pursue. After all, the Jeffersonian tradition is the tradition of a man who lived by and for the Jeffersonian tradition.

The Bluest Gospel

After the post-Independence day and a half, Jefferson may have been found dead, exploding politically because of the music of a man who had a habit of making music, the images of our nation’s sec- ond president perched on all the last page.

He was, of course, Jefferson himself. As he declared in his treatise on the issues of freedom and democracy, Jefferson remained true when it came to his personal religious beliefs.

A man of his word — perhaps more reverential Jefferson scholar diarnost that he was at least once in his Christian life, believed, hails historian George Elliott, who followed Jefferson’s religious behavior in the United States, to be an “inflated” figure. Religious beliefs and politics were simple enough and strong enough than that is not. It means that Jefferson expressed himself as a man of his word — a man of his word — one more reverential Jefferson scholar diarnost that he was at least one in his Christian life, believed, hails historian George Elliott, who followed Jefferson’s religious behavior in the United States, to be an “inflated” figure. Religious beliefs and politics were simple enough and strong enough than that is not.

However, Jefferson also took a page out of the book by emphasizing the importance of religious beliefs, putting them in the forefront of his own life. The public speaking was a result of the fact that the Jeffersonian tradition has always been a difficult one to pursue. After all, the Jeffersonian tradition is the tradition of a man who lived by and for the Jeffersonian tradition.

AYDEN DAVIS/UAH

Tennis at the Park: Paul Davis, owner of the new Tennis at the Park, says the outdoor tennis facility has been a success and the city has decided to expand the business by adding courts.

President of the Tennis at the Park, Dennis Osterman, said the club is expanding to include four new courts.

Osterman said the expansion will allow the club to accommodate more players and offer more services.

Besides the four new courts, the club will also offer a pro shop, a cafe and a lounge area.

The expansion is expected to be completed by late summer or early fall.

"We're going to have a lot more courts and we're going to have more amenities," Osterman said.

The additional courts will bring the total number of courts to eight, with two dedicated for singles and two for doubles.

The pro shop will offer tennis equipment, accessories and apparel, while the cafe will serve snacks and beverages.

The lounge area will provide a place for players to relax and socialize.

"We want to make sure that all players have a place to enjoy themselves," Osterman said.

The expansion is expected to cost around $300,000, with funding coming from the Tennis at the Park's existing budget and potential grants or sponsorships.

The club's expansion was made possible through the support of local businesses and organizations, as well as the city of Moscow.

"We're grateful for the support we've received," Osterman said.

The expansion will not only provide more opportunities for people to play tennis, but it will also help promote the sport and encourage a healthy lifestyle.

"We're excited about expanding our facility and offering more services," Osterman said.

The new courts and amenities are expected to be completed by late summer or early fall.

"We're looking forward to hosting more events and tournaments," Osterman said.
Hondurans have ticket trouble

WASHINGTON — After the Honduran ambassador was not allowed to purchase a ticket for his country's World Cup qualifying match against the United States, stories about the alleged discrimination of ticket sellers resurfaced.

"It's unfair," Pina said. "I understand they want to purchase home field advantage... but just because they know we are Honduran, they deny us this privilege.

The U.S. Soccer Federation and D.C. United, whose offices handled ticket sales, denied discrimination against the Honduran delegation, saying they were not aware of any complaints about ticket sales to this point. The federation said its chief operating officer, Dan Roush, had been met in recent weeks by the ambassador and a business man who said they were not denied entry to the game.

The object of the ticket seller, an objective president and general manager of the United, is to accommodate fans, "We do our best to ensure that other countries go in without a hassle environment."

The effort to create an American-friendly environment has been complicated by the sale of much-needed tickets. American fans have ample access through soccer clubs. But Honduran fans, who will travel across the country to see the games, may have fewer game arrangements. U.S. fans can purchase tickets through ticket agencies and soccer clubs.

Miguel and Susan Calix of Washington said they were expecting to have seats near the United States' goal. They have been met with denials.

The federation said its sales agents asked for tickets and were told the American fans are "America's twin." It is a clear indication of ticket access.

The United States will be meeting with considerable success at a World Cup qualifier at RFK last year. While many American fans get seats in the lower decks while Canadians were confirmed in the upper deck, the federation is creating an environment.

The United States and Honduras are in the process of games from North and Central America and the Caribbean competing for the World Cup in Japan and South Korea.

Tough road for two NFL teams

While the 1999 season was the most successful in the history of the NFL, the 2000 season is expected to be just as tough. The two teams that are expected to have the most difficult seasons are the Baltimore Ravens and the Cleveland Browns.

The Ravens, who were the Super Bowl champions last year, are expected to have a difficult season. The Browns, who have been in the league for a long time, are expected to have a difficult season as well. The Browns have been unable to win a game this season and are currently 0-3. The Ravens, on the other hand, are currently 2-1 and have won their last two games.

The Ravens are expected to have a difficult season because of their lack of depth. They have lost several key players to injuries this season, including their starting quarterback. The Browns, on the other hand, are expected to have a difficult season because of their weak defense. They have allowed over 30 points in each of their first three games.

Despite the challenges, both teams are expected to improve throughout the season. The Ravens, who have a strong defense, are expected to improve their offense. The Browns, who have a strong offense, are expected to improve their defense.
