EXPERIENCING THE CONFLICT
BY JADE JAMES / OPINION EDITOR

A Palestinian boy carries a handmade toy gun with a bullet holder as he walks through the West Bank town of Bethlehem after participating in a protest march Aug. 21 against the Israeli policy of targeting Palestinian leaders and assassinations.

Palestinian suicide bomber killed himself Tuesday in front of Lycee Francais, a French-language school in Jerusalem. Dr. Zina Schaker did not know the man, but she knows the children who witnessed the bombing.

Schaker, Thursday night's Martin Forum speaker, is a man who teaches at Lycee Francais.

The bombing took place while students were arriving at school. Children were splattered with blood and pieces of flesh, and the head of the bomber rolled into the school courtyard.

Schaker said it left the children in shock.

"It's very hard to be away, especially when things like that happen, because I can't be there," she said.

The bombing was the fifth in two days in Jerusalem.

Daily violence is the result of the centurylong conflict between Israel and Palestine. Schaker addressed the history of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict at the Martin Forum. Her intent was to explain the roots and chronology of the conflict, she said, not to propose solutions.

"The conflict seems to be without end," she said.

The root of the conflict is both groups' desire for statehood and Israeli-brokered peace participate in an exercise in central Israel simulating armed confrontations in the West Bank July 20, 2000. The Middlet East peace summit Camp David entered its tenth day Thursday with Israel and the Palestinian side strength on the issues of Palestinian refugees, land, food, and the status of Jerusalem.
Subtracting ‘plus factor’ for race

By Thomas Bein

WASHINGTON—For 35 years, the Lone Star State has been a bastion of the country that relies on affirmative action being broadly defined as a basic principle. So when they don’t see results, racial preferences may be used in admissions policies to encourage diversity.

Several studies have shown that while diversity is an important principle, in too many instances it is not leading to diversity. Whether diverse is an outcome is not clear and too many outcomes may not even be necessary.

In recent years, the Supreme Court has ruled that diversity must be an outcome, not an end in itself. Diversity is an outcome, not an end in itself.

The latest expression of this trend was seen in a recent case, Bacteria v. Georgia, in which the Georgia Supreme Court decided that diversity must be an outcome, not an end in itself. Diversity is an outcome, not an end in itself.

On May 2, Chief Justice William M. Rehnquist announced the decision. The court’s ruling stated that diversity is an outcome, not an end in itself. Diversity is an outcome, not an end in itself.

The court also noted that diversity was an outcome, and that diversity was an outcome, not an end in itself. Diversity is an outcome, not an end in itself.

Students offer advice for the job hunt

BY MATT STAEGHE ARTHUR STAFF

At the start of the semester, many students realize they need a job to support their college expenses. The number of job opportunities for students is often limited, and it can be difficult to find work that is appealing, flexible, and relevant to their interests. Many students look to on-campus jobs as a way to earn money and gain valuable work experience.

"Be sure to stay current, be persistent, and follow up." - ROSSIE MURPHY, freshman Rossie Murphy, a freshman from Post Falls, Idaho, is currently working at the Student Recreation Center, a position she found through Career Services. She appreciates the opportunity to work on-campus because it allows her to balance her studies and work commitments.

"I think it's important to look for work before classes start," Murphy said. "They want someone trained to handle the work, and they're looking for people who can work with them to create the environment they want." In addition to working at the Student Recreation Center, Murphy is also enrolled in a course that focuses on career development, which has helped her learn valuable skills for her future job search.

Old UI song revived to fight monotony

BY WINNIE GORDON ARTHUR STAFF

The University of Idaho's old fight song, "Old UI Song," has been revived to fight monotony among students.

"I think it's important to have a fun atmosphere on campus," said one student. "It helps us stay motivated and excited about our school." The song has been performed at different events, including sporting events, and has become a symbol of pride for the university.

"It's a way to show our support for our school," said another student. "It's a fun way to express our enthusiasm and spirit." The University of Idaho is known for its vibrant and energetic student body, and the revival of the old fight song is just one way to keep that spirit alive.

Joe Blow, you’ve got to go. His losses of the season came as the same time, too. His mascot is just like a punch bag to see if he can stand. WITING

Dropping the pants

A few of us from the Art start in Seattle in April for the National Writers’ Workshop, sponsored by the Seattle Times.

Arguably, the most controversial issue of the summer was the proposed ban on seeing beyond Nebraska deforestation.

I attended a session for columnist Gary Roberts, who is a leader of the columnists for the Seattle Times.

But writing a column is just like pulling your pants down in public, and you never know where to start. Pulling my pants down?

Three words put me in perspective, leading me to the realization that we sometimes just need to get over our fear of failure and have it all.

I was an editor, and I found it incredibly hard to carry a bike. I started jumping that pretty early, so I was used to it. I was able to keep riding, and I continued to do so.

If you didn’t know already, I’m the guy who giant spaceships. I did it by being a kid, because I was interested in outer space and the planets and stars, and I didn’t care if I was right.

And I’m sure that you’ve learned that lesson, too. You can’t always be right, and sometimes you learn things the hard way.

On the trail, it means to cut down on the time you spend writing and looking for your pants in public. You don’t need to write for the Seattle Times, though. I’m pretty sure that you can’t.

Regardless, I start with this little personal writing and look for my pants in public. I never really learn how to do this, though. It’s pretty easy to get started. Just think of it as your pants are in public, and you never know where to start. Pulling your pants down?
The Sweatshop Band: a labor of love

Who are these hippies?

by RALPH HANSON
music critic

The music troupe known as the Sweatshop Band and the hippies with whom they associate have been described as "elaborating on the stereotype of the roadie." The Sweatshop Band, which is popular with young adults and is represented by the Washington D.C. management firm ICANK, is featured in the upcoming book: "The Sweatshop Band: A Labor of Love," written by Ralph Hanson of the "Erie Times-News" and "The Times-News." Hanson's book explores the relationship between the Sweatshop Band and its fans, and examines the cultural and political implications of the band's music and lifestyle. The book is available for pre-order at Amazon and Barnes & Noble, and will be released on September 10, 2001. For more information, visit www.sweatshopband.com.
Hollywood assistants are an archive of connections, gossip

BY LORIENNE MUNOZ

HOLLYWOOD — Mark Harmon's not a guy you would have pegged as having any important people in Hollywood, and he probably didn't think the same.

"I'm not one of those people who are high profile in the industry. I'm not the guy that all the assistants come from being a star in the industry," Harmon said in an interview.

"I guess they know me as a producer and a writer. I've been around long enough that they know me as someone who is involved in the industry."

"I never thought it would happen."

"I never thought that people would think of me as someone who can have connections in Hollywood."

"I didn't think it would be a thing."

Mariners find ways to keep winning and pushing themselves

The University of Idaho women's soccer team finished a tough game in a 1-0 loss to the University of Oregon last weekend. The Vandals, who had won their previous two games, lost a key player, Jamie O'Hara, to injury early in the game.

The Vandals began the game with a strong performance, dominating the possession and having several scoring opportunities. However, the Oregon defense was solid, preventing the Vandals from converting their chances into goals.

After the game, head coach Jeff Wicks said, "We really wanted to get that win, but unfortunately it didn't happen. We had some good chances, but we couldn't capitalize on them."

Despite the loss, the Vandals remain in the running for a conference title, and they will look to bounce back in their next game.

Vandal soccer deadlocks Ducks 1-1

By Ralph Daus Peterson

The Vandals and Ducks played to a 1-1 draw in a high-scoring game on Friday night. The Vandals took the lead early in the game, but the Ducks tied it back in the second half.

The game was characterized by a fast pace and many chances, but neither team was able to find the net in the first half. In the second half, the Ducks took the initiative and scored in the 60th minute, only to have the Vandals equalize five minutes later.

Despite the draw, the Vandals remain in good position for the conference title, and they will look to build on this result in their next game.
