Northwest carpenters lobby students for contract

by Megan Otto

Complaints already are being voiced over the new $650-bed residence hall at UI, though construction will not begin for another five months. Before the Senate Finance, several members of the Northwest Regional Council for Construction (PNRCC) were on campus to discuss the facilities to students. Those locals explained why not all construction com- pany jobs are created equal.

Says Peggy, organizer for PNRCC, "We're hoping for public awareness." PNRCC represents 22,000 car- penters and their local unions in the five states of the Pacific northwest. As part of the project, the university met not only with unions for proposals, designs, goals and other details of the project. Companies then were allowed to submit bids — either to provide materials and labor or just to provide a design plan and thus, the selection of a general architect and Engineering Services. But if someone wants to see the results in the request for proposal.

There are three companies — Lody Construction of Spokane, Walsh Construction of Portland, and Hallman Construction of Portland — whose proposals were considered for use in the construction of the new residence hall, which will be started this summer. Walsh is a part of PNRCC. Those three companies are expected to submit their material and labor bids for their workers and be responsible for their families.

Whitten, which already has worked on the UI campus, and it is lined up for-on the part of the council and does not offer three things.

By passing out fliers on campus, the university is a learning institution. Our companies utilize apprentices, training skilled carpenters," Lance Fritz, m GOVERNORS.

PNRCC hoped to reach students and faculty and encourage them to contact the profession first.

"If you are, why should we workers. While the Walsh and Lody have agreed to maintain local wages, the other company has not. Another point the council brings is the number of benefits for workers.

The Wyoming PNRCC has with the job in the use of apprentices. The "Training the Next Generation" will allow locals to have their skilled li-apprentices, training skilled carpenter. By bringing companies that use the apprenticeship program, the construc-

Leadership seminars planned

by Anne Carlson

The Leadership in Leadership seminar will be held today and Thursday at 12:00 p.m. in the 175 Commons.

The hour-long seminars will be every Tuesday for 10 weeks and will provide training and workshops based on a model called the "Seven C's: Character, Connection, Communication, Commitment, Competence, Competence, and Celebration.

Sponsored by ASUI, student leaders and Dustin Major will lead the seminars. Each week the program will overview the program.

They will be readily interest-

The program was tried last semester, but the turned out low. Much credit- ed by the school and some of those who attended said the w e a k a n d t h e r e w e s t h e n y. th e "This is what we did that we had a different. We did would have to catch up as far as what we want over the semester better," said "This wave: the one that's coming to the outers. We're trying to do different.

The first week will begin with an introduction and an overview of the program's goals. Communication of skills, confidence, commitment, and character are the goals. The seminars will target people who want to make change and are interested in people on campus. Leadership in Leadership likes to inform people about how they lead and end up taking on roles themselves. The classes will take place in the 175 Commons.

The seminars are targeted at students who are interested in leadership and who want to gain skills. The goal is for students to be more responsible.

"We can bring a lot of what they've learned," said the leader in leadership. "But it's for students who are interested in leadership and who want to make a difference. We're trying to help them take what they've learned and make a difference in the world."
Creatine should be used with caution

By Barbara Tender

Creatine has increased throughout the years, now more people are consuming it due to the severe benefits of its use. However, some may say for information on the best products to increase muscle mass and enhance performance.

One of the most beneficial muscle-building supplements is called creatine. Creatine may potentially form in the kidney and liver and is naturally found in the fish and meat. Love it, you are working out at a local nutrition store, researching the products and ingredients to fit an athlete’s lifestyle.

It’s important to take it at several times a day, if you have to count on the gay next door for information, there are certain criteria you should be aware of depending on the gay community. We’ve been healthy information. He often recommends getting a third opinion when purchasing any supplements or products.

Based on studies and reports, the safety of creatine has not been established, and few have reported side effects. A small percentage of people may experience side effects involving the liver and kidneys, such as increased creatinine levels.

The use of creatine is controversial due to its ability to cause kidney damage when ingested at high doses. However, studies have shown that creatine is safe when taken in lower doses and is a popular supplement among athletes.

It’s important to be aware of the potential risks and benefits of creatine use and to consult with a healthcare professional before starting any new supplement regimen.

WASHINGTON — Robbing a more upbeat tone than he had two weeks ago, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan on Thursday acknowledged that a major obstacle to recovery is the "uncertainty" surrounding the economy’s future, and declared himself "satisfied" for the need for any emergency stimulus legislation from Congress.

After Greenspan testified, independent analysts downplayed the chances that the Fed would cut rates next week. Greenspan, who has cut rates three times in recent months, said that there are "doubts" about a possible recession. "We will have the option to make a final decision down the road," he said.

In his opening remarks, Greenspan said that the Federal Reserve’s actions were to prevent a "severe" recession, and that "every effort" was being made to ensure that the economy would not slip into a downturn. "It’s not just a tempest in a teapot," he said, adding that "there is a real possibility that the economy could go into a severe recession." Greenspan’s remarks came at a time when investors were showing signs of concern about the possibility of a recession.

The text appears to be related to a theatrical production or event, possibly involving winners of the 2001 Billboard Music Awards. It mentions names like Kevin Cantrell, 1993 American Idol, Furtado, and Nelly, and references to performances, awards, and scheduling. The text is not entirely clear due to the quality of the image, but it appears to be discussing a concert or event involving music and performance.
Pressplay and MusicNet offer a legal way to download songs

By Brian McColgan

The record industry wants to build a sleek jetliner to fly directly from the U.S. to Japan, say, once a month, taking the majors' biggest stars and their most popular songs and dropping them into the Internet for the music they download. It’s part of a crucial battle for control of music and money from the record majors—a battle the music industry began along with the Internet. The aim is to use the same technology that allowed them to get nearly any song they wanted for free. Now, it’s a month by month cut that you can actually catch.

MusicNet and Pressplay are among the companies that seek to provide the service—starting with the number of months you can access per month. Pressplay’s subscription program (for $18.96 per month) allows you to download up to 10 songs a month, while MusicNet also starts at $25.80, which includes 25 songs and 30 downloads. Subscription rates also include deals for students. Listening to a song you downloaded, say, picking a song from a jukebox, can be a hit to a site on your computer for multiple lines.

But don’t get too excited. These services will be shrewd. Pressplay says they can manage your library so that when you store your sub-program, and song file comes only once a month.

Almost all music services need to be able to track your subscriptions, or else they really might not work.

To realize this plan from the site, you must be online and pay from your checking account. You won’t be able to access your library if you choose not to pay for the service. As a result, the service is cost-oriented. MusicNet is an easy, straightforward approach and is easily one of the earliest to offer this. Pressplay offers up to 10 songs a month, but it’s not the only one.

The lineup of popular bands and their hits, as well as generations of music fans, is available on the service. You can listen to the new songs and the old ones. The service provides a wide variety of music and easy access to the latest and greatest.

MediaNet and Andersen's 100 stations will continue to thrive, hundreds of them exactly the same. The average American fork is a little bit of music, but with MusicNet and Andersen, there’s no hope of a classic of big band stuff, you get what you’re going to get—more than 10,300 songs.

The Visual Media catalog features a variety of music, including live performances and audio. It’s the result of the latest in visual media middleware. The service offers music, videos, and music videos, with a focus on the future.

Music services comparison

How do the online music services compare to the traditional outlets? They haven’t been too successful as of yet, and they require your entire subscription to be paid for in advance.

Despite the fact that the service is limited, the service is still available in the U.S. and Canada. As a result, the service is available in Canada and the U.K. and the service is now available in the U.S.

MusicNet allows you to create a custom station based on your own recorded CD. MusicNet also offers a media player, which allows you to listen to music from your own recorded CD. MusicNet also allows you to create a custom station based on your own recorded CD.

MusicNet offers you the freedom to download and play music on your own. The service allows you to create your own music or music stations.

UI Rec Center nears completion

By Mary Jane

University of Idaho students who have been watching the Recreation Center grow need to be excited for the opening of this building.

"At this point we're as excited as you are to be able to have that place so we can start to get everybody excited," said UI Sports Club Director Gordon Grez, "they can't give us an exact date, mainly because we have train student employees. We're still optimistic for mid-February."

This building, started on Nov. 1, is seeing its final details put into place a track, over a hundred acres of equipment, three athletic courts and an impressive climbing facility. The finished product is a $16,000,000 Recreation Center that meets some of the most demanding equipment currently in use.

The portion which all students can look forward to using first is a result in the fitness area, two basket ball courts, locker rooms, and the weight room. The fitness area has a three-class track. All of this is off set by large rooms with 10,000 square feet, a large screen in the center that makes the Rec Center somewhere to work out as easy to use with friends. The facility contains the entire expansion of the interior, evident, by the various sections and surroundings alike. A large lounge, or "free area," where you can enter campus recreation and outdoor activities offices is the first thing you encounter. Step over the rock and into a room of the climbing rock in "Chuck's Black Bottom Cafe" where service of refreshments and coffee will be offered. In the middle of all this is a three-class track. Men's basketball welcome Abrams Saturday

Tragedy still weighs on team; State trying to cope

With every word, every breath, it's hard for the University of Idaho basketball team to get past the tragedy that brought it to a sudden and painful halt. It's a story that has been repeated too many times in sports history, and it's one that the team is struggling to move on from.

The university launched a study of sports team travel policies the following Monday, and while no one can say for sure whether this was the cause or effect of the tragedy, it's clear that the team was dealing with a lot of stress and uncertainty.

"It's been a real tough time for us," said Williams. "We've had too much chaos in the last few days, and now we're just trying to get back to normal.

"It's been tough for us to come to terms with the fact that we had a tragedy like this," said Williams. "But we're trying to stay strong and support each other, and I think we're getting there.
