ASUI hopes to move focus from parking lot to Kibbie Dome

Dana Barney

As a group, the Kibbie Dome renovation officials will be using the space to highlight new features that will be added to the facility. Wilson noted that while the new features will be shown in the new year, the committee has already been meeting with the ASUI Student Senate and the administration to discuss potential changes.

"The University of Idaho is committed to providing excellent facilities for our students," Wilson said.

The leadership of the ASUI and the Athletic Department have been in contact with Moscow Police on a number of occasions and are interested in hearing about the University's concerns about a safe and game day event," said Wilson.

Wilson said that there will be a renewed focus on underage drinking.

"If you are planning to drink on game day, you should be legal age to do so," he said.

"This month has been a reminder of the importance of parental involvement," Wilson said.

"Music will be playing loudly in the student parking lot for the first time," Wilson said.

Wilson said that the school will continue to utilize the parking lot to accommodate guests.

"We want students to follow the rules, and we want to be fair," Wilson said.

"We are working with the police and the administration to ensure that everyone can enjoy the game and be proud of it," he said.

"The goal as a department and as a university is to provide an unparalleled college football experience that everyone can enjoy," Wilson said.

"It provides an opportunity for students, staff, faculty, alumni and fans to gather and interact," Wilson said.

"The university has always been a proud partner of the Boise State Broncos," Wilson said.

"We are working with the Boise State administration to ensure a safe and enjoyable experience for all," Wilson said.

iPod WARS
Two iPods, shuffling and battling In The Argonaut's page 2. Defend your music. Look for this new feature every so often in The Argonaut.

Laci Thompson, Argonaut Production Staff
Saliva, "Broken Sunday" (from the album Blood Stained Love Story)

Why is it on your iPod?
Cause I grew up listening to rock music with my mom, and I've been strumming guitar since I was 5.

Do you think the song would stand out in a mixup of songs?
It has a great intro that makes you just want to headbang. The guitar riffs and the clean vocals make it a winner.

Jacob Smith, Argonaut Production Staff
Garcialla, "November Has Come" (from the album Demon Days)

Why is it on your iPod?
The Guitarilla ban definitely one of the best rock bands to come from Europe.

Do you think your song or "Broken Sunday" is better?
I would say my song is better since it is on my iPod, but Broken Sunday is also a strong song.

De Bruin, former Boise State University president, says this group is "unrelated US military and is not connected to our campus." He says it's likely that functions organized by the group "will take place on public property."

De Bruin said the university is working with the Idaho State Police and the FBI to investigate the group's activities and to determine what actions can be taken.

He said the university remains committed to protecting the safety and security of its community and is working with law enforcement agencies to ensure public safety.

De Bruin expressed concerns about the potential for violence and disruption at the event and urged people to avoid attending or participating in the event.

"We are concerned about the potential for violence and disruption at this event," De Bruin said. "The safety and security of our community is our top priority, and we will take all necessary steps to ensure that everyone can participate in our academic activities in a safe and respectful manner."

De Bruin encouraged people to engage in peaceful and constructive dialogue and to report any incidents of violence or harassment to law enforcement.

He thanked law enforcement agencies for their assistance and commitment to public safety.

De Bruin concluded by reaffirming the university's commitment to protecting the safety and security of its community and emphasized the importance of peaceful and respectful discourse.

New policies are a good thing

Recent changes to tailgating policies are welcome, as they promote safety and enable the fans to avoid the somewhat reckless approach that’s usually associated with tailgating.

It’s no secret that drinking has a pernicious effect on the intellectual capability college athletes, but still, University of Idaho cannot stand by and allow underage drinking on campus. The new policy implemented by AUAS, UI Athletics and Parking and Transporation Services emphasizes a clean area for tailgating and still have fun, while not turning Lot 57 into a landfill despite every game.

The changes are in no way unreasonable. The policy makes it easier to lead an alcohol-free Saturday. Only a Vandals card is required to obtain a parking space in Lot 57 come game day. This means that fans who maintain the milk that were required last season. This makes it possible to get back bags upon entry to discourage.

Wikipedia is not a valid source

People used to buy encyclopedias from traveling salesmen. That’s right, people actually traveled around the country buying encyclopedias. The problem here is that the encyclopedias that were purchased were nowhere near the volume of information. Often, due to their high cost, people would only order one book at a time and would order additional books to finish their collection. Encyclopedias were expensive, but their content was valuable. At almost $1000 for the 2005 set of Encyclopedia Britannica, encyclopedias are expensive, but they don’t seem to be as valid.

People don’t buy encyclopedias in print as much as they used to, not just because of the expense and the cost, but also because the Internet has made it easy to find any information. Even online versions of encyclopedias are fading. MSN recently announced they would discontinue their Encyclopaedia pages and subscription services in October. Their Web site gives an explanation: the category of traditional encyclopedias and reference material has changed. There are many other online resources that are not only as comprehensive as a traditional encyclopedia, but also considerably different than in years past.

It may be far easier to find the information you need, but there are just as many good resources for reference. At Wikipedia, billed as the “free encyclopedia,” is not really an encyclopedia at all but an online magazine written by volunteers who do not need to have any knowledge on anything at all.

The only way to use the content is mainly based on anonymous contributions. Anyone who can access the Web site can make changes to articles. I find it odd that someone who has no extensive knowledge of the subject wouldn’t want the world to know his or her facts. Wikipedia specifically states that, “Wikipedia is not a reliable source of information. Please verify information with sources outside the Wikipedia. In the encyclopedia, editors are otherwise independent of each other.”

If people have opinions, it does not mean that they have the wisdom to make decisions. The whole idea of Wikipedia is that anyone can contribute, but that does not mean that they should. I can honestly say that Wikipedia is not a valid source.
...AND IN WASHINGTON, THOUSANDS OF ACTIVISTS GATHERED TO PROTEST GOVERNMENT MALFEASANCE. UNFORTUNATELY, THEY MISSED THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION BY SEVERAL MONTHS.

It is not uncommon for an individual to be diagnosed with a sexually transmitted infection (STI) for the first time. People are often surprised at how common STIs are and how many are asymptomatic. It is estimated that approximately 20 million new infections occur each year in the United States. This includes HIV and other STIs that may not have symptoms.

It is important to note that you can still be at risk for an STI even if you had sex with someone who did not have an STI. STIs can be transmitted through sexual contact or from an infected partner to a new partner.

One study found that many people believe that they are not at risk for an STI because they have been in a monogamous relationship for a long time. This is not true because STIs can be transmitted even if you have been in a monogamous relationship for many years.

It is important to talk to your partner about their sexual history and to get tested for STIs. This can help you make informed decisions about your own sexual health.

In conclusion, STIs are a serious and common health issue. It is important to be aware of the risks and to take steps to protect yourself and your partner.

...just because symptoms are present does not mean that you are able to correctly diagnose an STI. Many people are not aware of the symptoms of STIs, and some may not have symptoms at all. It is important to make sure that you get tested for STIs even if you do not think that you have an infection.

Additionally, it is important to check your partner's sexual history to make sure that they are not at risk for an STI. This can help you make informed decisions about your own sexual health.

In conclusion, STIs are a serious and common health issue. It is important to be aware of the risks and to take steps to protect yourself and your partner.
Procrastination made easy by a few good comedians

By now you've probably moved on from "I think this might be a busy semester" to "How can I get some flu and a couple days off?" For me, nothing distracts me from the stress of a busy day more than a few minutes of frivolity. While I could get bad by coloring, I prefer to let other people do the work for me. So enjoy the following list of some of the most delightful and entertaining procrastination materials. Every image is high quality, and you'll want to keep them for later use. You're welcome.

1. Lewis Black
You probably know him as the guy who occasionally yells on "The Daily Show," but he also has a long-standing career of saying it right. With a focus on the things that drive him crazy (everything), Black's acts are conversational journeys through the texture of our daily lives. His words are especially pertinent to politics and current events, so if you want to feel informed but laugh at the same time, he's a good choice.

2. Mitch Hedberg
Before his early death due to drug-related circumstances, Mitch Hedberg was one of a kind. His few recorded performances are less than random and more like stringers of really funny jokes. Jokes like "I went to a happy-hour event and realized everyone was happy." Not to let you over hear his jokes in my backing track, Dane Cook, his performances are as livelier as they come (oh, for Stephen Colbert's sake). Listen to Mitch Hedberg, and you laugh. If you like quotable comedians, Mitch is for you.

3. Daniel Tosh
The newest comedian on this list, Tosh only has one album out at the moment, called True Stories That I Made Up. But it's one of my favorites. It seemed like the stand-up comedy-obsessed world had nothing to do with the idea of a good album, so I was offloading everyone. His specialties in grabbing semi-articulated conversations for what we can and can't allow to say, and ripping off the lid.

Quickly rising in standards, he has a show on Comedy Central called "Tosh.O" (Thursdays at 10 p.m., EST) where he riffs half an hour on Internet on-gosings.

2. George Carlin
George Carlin probably has the most diverse set of material of any comedian, past or present. In his words, he covers three separate areas: "the little world," and the pecu- larities of the English language. Between the two, you get everything from candid satire observations about the Seven Deadly Sins You Can Never Say on Television (currently viewable on YouTube, incidentally), to the differences between baseball and football to everything in between. If you're unfamiliar with his stand-ups, I'd recommend starting with "Carlin on Campus" from 1984 and then going from there.

1. Richard Pryor
For being number one on so many people's list, you don't see much of him these days — perhaps because he died in 2005 and was out of commission for several years before that due to multiple sclerosis. Regardless, Richard Pryor holds a special place in American comedy history for being probably the most influential comedian of all time. Besides starring in several mov- ies and TV shows as well as being the writer, Pryor was one amazing stand-up comedian. The first recipient of the annual Mark Twain Prize for Ameri- can Humor (later awarded to George Carlin), Pryor's comedy was, above all, authentic. Go listen to some right now.
MuteMath avoids sophomore slump

Gas Simpson Artistic sonra

MuteMath as a force to be reckoned with in the modern music scene. On their latest release, MuteMath comes out swinging and takes no prisoners. Although this level of musical imagery might be more appropriate when describing a death metal band, it’s something that we can definitely get behind. The sound on Everything Must Die! is an album so powerful that it actually works well with MuteMath’s style and adds a new dimension to its progression. The closest songs on Arét in "Sparklight." The tune actually first appeared on the soundtrack for Twilight, but listeners shouldn’t let that turn them off. It’s a sad, mature sound, and represents everything MuteMath can be. It’s not an abrasive, but more of an enjoyable and well-composed piece of music. The story of meteoric rise "lah-ah-ah-ah-shah-chromes," though, is another in the top ten.

Tudor Choir visits campus for concert

When people think of chamber music, they often think of a specific time in the 18th and 19th centuries. That period may not be the only time chamber music exists, but Seattle’s Tudor Choir has been recording music across the 18th and 19th centuries and their music is easy to enjoy. Their musical repertoire spans seven centuries—sacred and secular—from madrigals to motets and early American songs. According to their website, the Tudor Choir has established itself as "leading interpreter of early American music." They are also visiting Moscow High School today to work with the choir, and they will have a Young People’s Concert of selected choral literature.

The group was invited to participate in this year’s Auditorium Chamber Music Series within the Idaho Music Department. They will be the first performers of the series and also convey a master class with the UI Violists and the Idaho-Washington Concert Choir, directed by Michael Morgan.

Mary DuPree, the director of the Auditorium Chamber Music Series, said she heard the group in Seattle and enjoyed their music. "This group appealed to me because of the repertoire they sing," DuPree said. DuPree said she also likes the clarity of their sound and the musicality of the ensemble in its current form. Because most of their music is performed without accompaniment, much of their sound is dependent on tonal quality and purity of sound.

DuPree said the thinkers experiencing the group will be very helpful to youth choirs—specifically the boys—whose voices are still developing. "They will model male singing for the younger groups," DuPree said. "I think it’s really healthy for them to see men singing and making art with their voices."

As for the older crowd, their rich experience, performing music from one country over a span of centuries will be valuable to college singers and music students.

The Tudor Choir’s concert is 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Administration Auditorium.

Tickets are $10 for students and $20 for general admission. Following the concert, they will also be selling the choir’s CDs.

GEEK IS SEXY
Comics: more than superheroes

When most people think about comic books, they conjure up images of Superman, Spiderman and Batman. Superheroes are but a part of the comic world, but they’re not the only ones. Many comics, especially independent ones, are much more cerebral and thought-provoking. "The Sandman," written by Neil Gaiman is an excellent example of the story of Dream, who rules over the territory of sleep, and his siblings. Gaiman’s series introduced many new traditional modernized comic book, like women, to the graphic novel form. "The Sandman” combines romance, drama and comedy with Gaiman’s original characters and DC Comics icons. Death, a grayly skinned, is a Gold goddess, and her otherworldly looks make their doing make-up hair—but, while they are made or feigned. "Hellboy" is an anthropological graphic novel about Mike Mignola’s Hellboy, the superhero about falling in love with this book is heartbreaking. The story, which prominently features quotes from classic literature, mixes the relatively new, fittingly into the Bible for the first time in thousands of years. This is one of the first comic books that has changed the world. "Same Difference and Other Stories" is a collection of shorter comic strips written and drawn by Seth, and their different 1958. "Same Difference," starts with Simon sitting on a hill and turns in high school. His friend Nancy has been encouraged to try some less-adults to a girl named Sarah from a man in Simon’s hometown, and the two travel to the town. Simon discovers his town has changed, and over the course of his trip, he begins to experience the town's "nightmares," until the night he is shot by Simon and his racist teacher. "Nightmares" is the novel about vampire hunting, and while it has been adapted into comic books, it’s not for the faint of heart. It’s a dark, intense story about the death and rekindled slate. Blake is tougher than ever. Her relationship with vampire Jean-Claude is broken, but she kicks some serious ass.

Club ready, opposition needed

Chyanne Hall, Idaho Daily

The University of Idaho women’s soccer coach学院 said on Monday the new school year will come with a problem carried over from last year.

"We’d like to start a little bit earlier to try to play the kind of game we want to play, but there are not a lot of women’s club soccer teams around the state, so we have to start the season,“ said women’s soccer president Jon Kammler. "We have a team — we practice regularly, we have bonding activities and we have a lot of time that we cause all love soccer."

There is no women’s soccer club in the Inland Northwest but one may be formed if the team is able to find enough interested students in participating.

"We do whatever we can to help everybody and that’s what we try to do in the locker room," Kammler said.

The Baylor University Argonaut women’s soccer team will face a key nonconference/15 tournament over the next week as the team prepares against some of the best clubs in the nation. The Bears boast a top-15 ranking, while the team also has four additional matches this weekend against two other nationally ranked opponents.

Players promise brains to research

Associated Press

NFL players announced Monday they will donate their brains and spinal cords to a brain bank in the event of serious injury.

"It’s a bigger issue than football,“ said former tight end Rob车 "We suffer concussions as a college football player and professional welder. Sufferers may experience memory loss, emotional instability, erratic behavior, depression and impulse control problems, progressing eventually to full-blown dementia."

At as part of the program, the players will be interviewed annually for the rest of their lives so researchers can examine the relationship between clinical symptoms and pathology.

Bek, Tatupu and Money Have all played in the Pro Bowl, making their pledge public, said Nielsen’s. "We hope this helps spread awareness of locking room conversations with their teammates and the dangers of head injuries,“ he said.

"Many players need research to understand the "full impact of playing through concussions or not reporting them because of the cumulative effect of such hits," he said. He said the idea was inspired in part by an article on former New England Patriots linebacker Ted Johnson, who was diagnosed with early onset dementia.

"I played with Ted. He played for me and we made sure he got the best care. He was a practice squad player. I think that was all out of the impulse for me to make sure that I did my due diligence, understanding the effects of concussions and report back to the league," Tatupu said.

After the interview process, Tatupu said he got to know the players and feel more comfortable with them.

"I think we’re going to get a lot of former players who may not have been like this,“ said Nielsen’s. "We’re going to get a lot of former players who may not have been like this,“ said Nielsen’s. "If you have to start this, you could start with that."
Vandals' schedule a reflection of Verlin's State's experience

The new Baltimore Orioles

The crowd was wild with glee from Daniel's. The Mudcats strutted into right field, leaving him atop the Yankees hit list. I do not achieve, even. Dan. But I had, in the inning, with runners in scoring position, the Orioles played with Tillman, ended game, and deposited a 3rd baseman at home with what seemed to be a cleaning on Jorge Posada.

The resemblance is seen more than four seasons of gameplay, and even includes a different set of regional players. The Red Sox, such as Portland, Eastern Washington, and Sacramento State, along with the Washington All Stars—conference school. The only resemblance would be the absence of major conference opponents. The Red Sox, on the other hand, did not back up his schedule, and therefore did not have home games against his schedule.

The point of the season, to establish ourselves in the team to beat in the West. We need to be ready to play and ready to take advantage of that.
Williams apologizes for outburst

Serena Williams apologized Monday for what she called her "inappropriate outburst" at a news conference after her loss in the singles final at the U.S. Open. Williams had stepped on the wrong foot in the postmatch news conference after her 7-5, 6-2 loss to Maria Sharapova. She had used the word "lout" to describe Sharapova and was cut off by a USTA official.

"I'm a woman of great pride, faith and integrity," Williams said in her written statement. "I have no intention of defrauding my fans and every player that has ever walked through this stadium. What happened on Monday was a personal setback for me. It really affected me and I'll move forward."

Williams said she had been moved to apologize during the postmatch ceremony.

"I've made a lot of mistakes in my career and I've learned from those mistakes," she said. "I've learned the hard way that I am never too big to be held accountable and I will not ask for mercy."

Williams, who moved into the spotlight-grabber, "erred," and said her focus was now on her game.

"We were 26 points down, I just wanted to win the last two points," she said. "We were 26 points down. I just wanted to win the last two points. I had no control over it."

Williams' latest quicksand moment happened during her semifinal victory over Clijsters, who finished her career in the same round after her 6-2, 6-4 loss in a one-sided final.

"I don't think it's just a mistake," Williams admitted. "I think it's a mistake. I'm just trying to see that my game is fine."

After the game, Williams was booed by scores of protesters gathered outside the stadium. Williams said she was trying to talk to her agent about the situation.
