The busy round of activity was checked last week when the news came to us of the death of one of our beloved fellows. Everyone one who knew Clyde was in shock, for he was beloved by everyone, and we were very sad. He was a kind and gentle soul, and we will miss him greatly.

The funeral service was held at the church in town, and everyone attended. The service was simple and dignified, and we all felt a sense of loss.

ENGINEERS TO PAY VISIT

Members of Spokane Engineering Society to Hold Joint Session Here Next Saturday.

The Spokane section of the third great national engineering society, the American Society of Civil Engineers, the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and the American Institute of Mining Engineers have arranged to hold a joint meeting at Moscow, Idaho, Saturday, January 17th, 1914. About forty engineers are expected to come from Spokane.

The proposal of the Spokane engineers to hold this meeting at the university is in line with the interest in engineering education, and has for its principal object the drawing into closer relation the educational institutions and the faculties and students of the institutions of engineering learning of this section. The attendance at both the universities of Idaho and Washington state college are expected to be present.

Dean Long and the members of the engineering faculty greatly appreciate the friendly interest of the visiting engineers, and are at work to prepare for the pleasure of the meeting.

The following is a tentative program on the faculty's schedule.

A special train will leave Spokane at 11:40 a.m. and arrive in Moscow at 2:30; and at 3:20 p.m. A visit to the college of engineering of the university.

FARMERS' WEEK

IN FULL SWING

PRACTICAL INSTRUCTION FOR MEN AND WOMEN OF THE FARM BEING GIVEN.

Interesting Programs are Given Every Day.

Getting Excellent Training.

Farmers and their wives are now getting the benefits of a special one week's university experience which is open especially for those who through various circumstances have no time to attend our regular courses. The school opened with some fifty farmers in hand ready for work. All counties in the county are represented. Some come from so far south as Caldwell, Walla Walla, and Klickitat, and some from nearby points in Washington. Every train is brimming in men who are eager to learn and eager to know the latest in their separate fields of work.

The animal husbandry department is drawing a large part of the crowd. The agricultural department work is also being well attended. So far more than a hundred farms and some economics lectures have been given from Moscow of immediate visibility.

Besides the regular daily programs of special evening programs are being given. The one for tonight is of especial interest. It is one feature of the week's entertainment that should appeal to all lovers of music, the concert by the advanced students of the music department which is to be given on Thursday evening. It will be the first public concert of the year and reserves a crowded house.

The Program.

BY-PRODUCTS COMMITTEE

Appointed by the Fruit Growers Congress, Spokane, Washington, November 23, 1913.

H. C. Sampson, chairman; W. H. Wicks, secretary/treasurer.

A general committee which was further divided into sub-committees was named as follows:

Its Object, Purpose and Scope.

The above named committee was appointed by the Fruit Products congress in the city of Spokane, Washington, on November 23, 1913, its object being to make a thorough investigation of the fruit industry in the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, in regard to production, utilization, and waste; the number of by-products plants, cooperatives, or private operators, owned and by whom owned; capital invested; whether stock companies or mutual associations; nature of plants, whether dried, canned, vinegar, flavoring, etc.; amount of raw materials taken care of; amount of finished products; result of operation; whether successful or not; if not cause of failure.

After having secured the above information, it is intended to investigate the different processes now in use and improvements that can be made on the same; study the market, of names of manufacturers and prices. To tabulate the information gained for the benefit of the all parties engaged in the fruit business in the northwest, in order to stop the great waste now suffered by the growers of these products of the orchards amounting to thirty per cent, or more, which cannot be marketed in a fresh state, but this loss can be materially reduced by suitable by-products plants to be located in local districts to be furnished the raw materials. The amount of the reduction of waste will depend largely upon the degree to which by-products plants are installed, and the degree of business ability displayed in the handling of the plants after being installed.

Scope: Having secured the necessary information and made it public the next step will be to educate the growers in districts in which by-products plants can be successfully operated with no waste having been wasted, and to the advantage that will occur to the district and the growers by the production of a properly equipped by-processing plant suitable to their needs. With information in regard to what such plants for the production of such by-products plants; to encourage the training of young men in agricultural college work for the position of by-products plants; to organize by-products plants and make machinery in general not suited to the needs of the district and at prices out of all reason, as has been done too often in the past.

It is estimated that $250,000 has been lost to the growers in the north-west and is now locked up in useless by-products plants and costly machinery due to the activity of promoters, whose only interest is to sell a bill of machinery whether it is suitable for the needs of the district or not. In fine, to do everything possible to stop the present waste of products of the orchards, which is not less than twenty-five per cent of the yield and which amounts to valuable products along usual business lines if properly handled, to the great benefit of the grower and the consumer alike.

GOZNAZA SUBMITS QUESTION

At a meeting of the debate council held Tuesday afternoon in the Home of Better Shoes.

The following question has been proposed by the council to be the one that the two institutions will debate sometime in March.

Resolved that the movement of organized labor for the closed shop should receive the support of the American people.

This, then, will be the one that the debaters will do well to study from now on. For although our opponents come from a small college it is to be remembered that they are among the cleverest debaters in the northwest. For this reason, the try-out will probably be the first or second Saturday in February. Prof. Robinson is busy getting the bibliography in shape and a part work can be begun at once.

Idaho has also received an invitation to participate in the Tri-State debate league, but owing to the fact that we have no regular instructor in either oratory or debate it was thought best to decline for the time being, at least.

The secretary also read a letter from the president of the College of Montana, asking us to join another triangular league with them and the University of Idaho.

We regret that the great distances between these schools and between them and us, the beauty amount of money while we have, and the fact that already our debate schedule is completely filled, prevent our acceptance of these offers.

The following extract from the letter of the secretary of the Northern Tri-State debate league in the official statement of Idaho's position in that league:

"I hereby declare the championship for 1912 awarded to the University of Idaho, with a total of seven points. O. A. C. is second with a total of 5 points, and W. E. C. is third with no points"

Although there will be no chance to enter the sectional contest mentioned above, there still will be a chaise in thePKing Gratoriole contest will be held between now and spring. We are far to hear from the man who has given this medal for the past few years.

George Klein's "The Last Days of Pompeii".

It is nearly a hundred years ago that Longfellow wrote "The Last Days of Pompeii" and during all that time it has survived as one of the greatest romantic novels in the world, and still holds marvelous fascination for hosts of readers. Mr. Klein's novel is now due to be produced and the public will be given a chance to see what an able dramatist can do for the novel of which he has been the author.

FROSTY TO BE ADVISED

New System, That of Faculty Advisers, is to be Tried in University.

The university faculty has adopted a new innovation in the way of faculty supervision for freshmen. Beginning with the second semester every member of the college will have assigned him some member of the faculty as his adviser. This new arrangement was adopted at a recent meeting of the university faculty.

From the moment a freshman enters the university of Idaho, in the future he will plan his work and arrange his course under the personal supervision of some member of the faculty, until such time as he has reached sophomore standing.

The duties of these advisers are to assist the freshman in many ways. They are to get into close personal contact with the students assigned to them; to hold frequent conferences with them; to guide them in their academic work; and to assist themselves ready to give advice on other matters on which they may be consulted. All local cards must be signed by the proper adviser before they will be accepted by the dean. A committee consisting of members of the faculty has been appointed to handle the further details of the new system.

All freshmen are asked to obtain at Dean Elridge's office a question blank and to fill it out as quickly as possible before they have "learned the ropes."

Notice.
In respect to the memory of Clyde Cornwall, who died recently at Iowa State College, the gymnastic class has postponed the Freshman glue, which was to take place last Friday night, to February 2. It is hoped that this will be a successful year for all and will make it convenient for all to attend.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE FACULTY UPON THE DEATH OF CLYDE FRANCIS CORNWALL

Since God, in His knowledge of "What will be forever,
What was from of old," and in His justice who passed all understanding, has taken Clyde Francis Cornwell from us.

Since Clyde Cornwell was a student of clear intelligence, high industry, and noble ideals, and was one of the graduates of Our University in the latest class

Since we in our daily contact with him respected the student and loved the man and feel now a sense of loss in all familiar things and

Since our hopes for his future were bright and we beheld in him a man who would one day by his sympathy and learning and generosity help to allay the suffering and to stamp out the sorrows of disease;

Therefore, we, the General Faculty of the University of Idaho, over awed by our common loss and re tilling that words can only half-cerent our sorrow, yet desire to express our deep sympathy with the family of Clyde Cornwell and with all whom his death has bereaved.

And with this we trust in mind we send to the sorrowing family their resolutions and spread a copy of them upon the minutes of the faculty and publish them in the University Argonaut.

IOWA MOURNS HER DEAD

Insolent as president of the A. S. U. I. or similar college, and exercised his influence quietly.

One thing Mr. Cornwell did work for more than anything else, was his fraternity. Fraternity work was his almost religion. He believed in his whole soul. Here in Moscow he was a member of the Phi Delta Theta. He also belonged to the honorary junior and senior society, the Pan Alpha, in which he was a charter member. In 1912 he was sent to the national Phi Delta Theta convention in Chicago by his fraternity. Here he was a member of some of the leading committees. You think he ever work at this point. He was equally as capable in this work as Ames as here as is shown in an extract from a letter by E. Karte Buchanon of that institution:

"His contact with his fraternity here was wonderfully productive of good to them. That statement is no flattery. I am chairman of our faculty committee having fraternity in charge. He proved a real stimulus to Phi Delta Theta here. Dr. Hackett, who taught the little class at this house, will verify me in this."

In work, in play, in the serious interest of life as well as those of leisure, Mr. Cornwell's work was followed at all.

Of the trouble which caused his death the first indication was shown after the freshman-sophomore class fight night in 1899. He had a severe hemorrhage but recovered. Since then he had no attacks till the last one. Of his death Dr. Hackett writes as follows:

Was a Sudden Shock To All.

I must write you the details of Clyde's death, just so far as they can be known. When I think what a shock his sudden departure was to us, I can conceive of the grief our telegrams must have occasioned you, his mother and brother. May I extend to you my very best sympathy for the heartfelt sympathy of all the department of bacteriology.

Just Before Evening Trip.

Mr. Cornwell returned Saturday evening from a trip into Wisconsin and to Chicago. On that day we talked with him on many matters. He told me that he had caught a little cold in Wisconsin because he was unable to reach your conference about something enough for country drives. He believed himself quite recovered. School is not in session but, as we have our farmer's winter short course and corn seed lecture being held in the lower floor of the gymnasium. Late in the afternoon we decided to go over the gymnasium and see the show. On the way we found it impossible and went up stairs to the gym hall. Clyde threw the basketball into the basket a couple of times, and left. However before leaving he told me that he did not know how to swim, and said he was expecting to learn.

Worked Hard Monday.

Monday afternoon Clyde and I worked together until about 5 p.m., taking photographs of bacteria with which he had been working. Then he went to the gymnasium, threw a few blocks, and played in the gym hall. Clyde did not exert himself much, tried to swim a little, then dressed. We walked a restaurant where he was taking his meals temporarily. Just before leaving up he mentioned that he had had 'a crick' in his back. I can assure you that I had had the least suspicion that he was not feeling well, and had a weak heart he would not have left the gymnasium until after seeking the physical director, Dr. Hackett. He evidently grew worse soon after I left him. He went into the restaurant, but from statement made later evidently did not extremely much if anything.

Reached Home Exhausted.

"About three-quarters of an hour after I left him he staggered into the home of Professor MacDonald, where he remained. Two physicians were sent there and Clyde expressed a preference for Dr. Bush who arrived first. He took charge almost at once, and instituted treatment. At first it seemed very effective, and he had every expectation that the attack would soon pass off. He grew worse below 8 o'clock when I was called. By the time I had walked a couple of blocks he had become semi-unconscious, and was decidedly worse. Two other physicians were called, and a third. Everything was done that could humanely be done. He had walked a mile after his heart had compelled him to. The backs pressure of blood flooded his lungs with serum. Dr. Bush, who was in charge, will write to Dr. Cornwell giving all details of symptoms and treatment. Clyde did not regain full consciousness after 8 o'clock. He passed away at 12:15.

Night Have Lived.

'It hardly seems possible. We are still dazzled at the occurrence. I had not had much hope when he was at the cafe, instead of walking home, he would probably be in we rest.

'Clyde was doing splendidly with me in the department. He was faithful and conscientious, I am saying nothing I would not have said a month ago. He would have made a good physician. As a man he was a good, clean man. I know the man he associated with. I know what he was doing. He has a splendid record behind him. We are sorry for he has gone.' His fraternity brothers in Phi Delta Theta here were taking charge of most of the arrangements.

Funeral Services in the Auditorium.

The funeral service over the remains of Clyde P. Cornwell, who passed away at Ames, Ia., on the preceding Tuesday, were held in the university and Wednesday Monday at 11:30. The family, and friends and relatives, and the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, of which

Mr. Cornwell was a member, assembled at the home and accompanied the body to the university. After the funeral march played by Mrs. Parram, the quartette, Messrs. Agter, Morley, Eldridge and Parram, sang "Adeste in Jesus." Rev. Hare of the local Presbyterian church delivered the funeral address. Rev. Hare began by reading from the Bible, "Let not your heart be troubled." His words were a balm to the grieved and were filled with the simple sincerity that is meant to console and to encourage. The simple, wholesome faith in the resurrection of the immortal, the fervent and sustaining hope for the future seem to us with the ones we love, and the subtle softening influence that lives long after the death of the body were all touchingly presented. "To live in the hearts we leave behind is to die" will probably linger in the memories of the beloved till sorrowing-time has added the alleviating ray and dulled the poignant of sorrow.

The quartette sang "Good-night" and Rev. Hare pronounced the benediction. The services were completed by a short ceremony at the grave by the Phi Delta Theta fraternity. A large, smart, well-mannered during the final rites and thus kept many friends away from the cemetery.

THE ROME OF TODAY
Oxford Student Writes of the "Eternal" City.
The chins of the Via Latina are There Today as They Were During the Days of Horace.
Bomp, Italy, Dec. 19, 1912. To the Editor of the Argo:
I write to you, Mr. Editor, from the "eternal city" where I have come to spend a short vacation. I am recalling that when we were schoolmates in the U. S., I used to read in Horace about the home that haunted him on the city streets, today I started out to view two of those streets and I streaked for some distance on the Appian Way and the Via Latina. The Appian Way is still a very good street but the Via Latina is a muddy and filthy street. However, the horses which haunted their streets are still extant. They have only changed the articles they have to sell. Instead of making shoes they now want you to buy post cards.
Within the city the most impressive sight today on the Appian Way are the baths of Caracalla and I was astonished by the magnificence that was there. The proof of which is abundantly shown in the ruins. The Farmuci Botti, the Hercules, the Flora, monstes and numbering decorations have been taken away from it. The roof has fallen in. But in spite of that the walls are intact and a visitor can still see the enormous chambers and can see pieces of the marble slabs that have been taken away from these.
A Roman was not, as I understand it, what we in modern times call a 'swimming pool.' It was not a sewage, library and a Y. M. C. A., gymnastics and a natatorium on a large scale, all rolled into one. Beside that on the grounds out of that there was often a racetrack so that the pleasure derived from such an institution was many sided. However, one such insti-
