Students' travel site goes off the beaten path

By Callie Rice

The first week they met in Boise, University of Idaho students Scott Falconer and JR. Perlko spent every evening running through their background information. They never talked about their backgrounds, but they knew that as they continued to do so, they would continue to work on their project. Although they might be working for free, they knew that they were working on something for which they would be paid.

Parking controversy is slowly winding down.

By Hilary Flowers

Students may no longer have to rush into their pockets to pay parking tickets, but the local ticketing office may not be any more lenient.

During the August 18, 2006 and April 25, 2006, a total of 5,848 citations were issued, of which 1,819 citations were appealed. If the ticket is not appealed, the fine and penalty are due immediately.

The committee has seen a significant decrease in the number of appeals since the new policy was implemented.

That's a major concern for the ticket office, which has just to pay out of pocket, which is how they were doing before, but now has been able to reduce these amounts.

The committee has decided to appeal the new policy, which has been made public.

"It was just a lot of people who werea fraud the ticket appeal," Sawatzky said.

For students to have their appeals heard and be able to avoid paying the fine, they have to take the steps to appeal it themselves.

A new ASUI initiative may put parking tickets on students' accounts rather than having to pay cash up front.

"This won't change the policy, it just makes it easier for students to appeal their appeals," Sawatzky said.

The committee, however, does not expect the policy to change, despite the complaints of students. In the future, they will continue to seek changes to the system.

"We're not going to give up on this," Sawatzky said.

In the end, the ticket system is the result of a complex system of rules and regulations, and it is up to students to understand and follow them.

"That's the bottom line," Sawatzky said.

The committee is working on making sure that the new policy is well understood by students.
Sustainability starts with you

Do you feel it’s investment to suggest that religious instruction is the most durable form of the planet? It’s not, it’s a very durable form of the planet. It’s part of all our contemporary global conflicts.

Even without the observance and celebration of Labor Day, the summer season has been a time of social and labor organizations and the recognition of the summer season has been a time of recognition for the leisure profession and the advancement of the leisure profession.

We, for one, cannot remember the last time we’ve gone on a vacation to a park. But we will be pleased to find that many people on the roads this weekend traveling back and forth from their homes and away from their homes.

Maybe I’ll inset a little bit of humor into the mix here, as well. Happy Labor Day.

People are stupid sometimes

Sometimes a news story comes along that makes me want to curl up in a corner and wish I were less stupid.

When I get the call saying that I was being interviewed by John for his show, I was so nervous and excited that my stomach churned. As I entered the studio, I noticed that John was standing in front of a large blackboard, which contained many words and pictures. He asked me to sit down, and we began our conversation. John asked me about my background and how I got into the music industry. I told him about my childhood, how I discovered my love for music, and how I started playing the guitar. John was very interested and asked me many questions about my songwriting process and my creative inspiration. Throughout the interview, John was very engaging and kept me involved in the conversation. He asked me about my favorite bands and musicians, and we even shared some stories about our shared experiences in the music industry.

John was very kind and supportive, and I felt very comfortable talking to him. He asked me about my upcoming projects and how I balanced my personal life with my musical career. I appreciated his genuine interest in my life and work. Overall, the interview was a great experience, and I really enjoyed talking to John. He is a fantastic interviewer who genuinely listens and asks insightful questions.

I am grateful for the opportunity to share my music and experiences with such a talented and respected musician. I hope that this interview will inspire others to pursue their passions and never give up on their dreams.

Sentry puts philosophical spin on hero

by Michael Stroewler

"Your name is Bob Rossendia. You order on time once. You drink too much and are 30 pounds overweight. You're always late on your orders and your wife blames you for your weight. She thinks you know you were a supermodel."

This is the through-the-looking glass view of the graphic novel entitled "The Sentry," released Sept. 14 from Third World Press. The 64-page comic is the first in a series that will debut September 2023, followed by "The Sentry 2: The Sentry 3: The Sentry 4: The Sentry 5:"

With the comic, a self-portrait of the artist, Paul Jenkins, and the second appearance of "The Sentry," there will be a total of five graphic novels that will combine the themes of war, politics, and personal conflict.

Jenkins is a well-known artist who has been publishing comics for over 30 years, and he has been recognized for his work in both the graphic novel and comic book formats. He has also worked on several projects for Marvel Comics, including "The Sentry," which was created by him.

The Sentry is a character who is depicted as a hero, but who is also a flawed and complex individual. He is a former soldier who has struggled with PTSD and addiction, and he is now working to find his place in the world.

Matt Dillon boozes it up in 'Factotum' as the alter ego of Charles Bukowski

By Steven Rea The Associated Press

Matt Dillon was in his 20s, making 'The Outsiders' and 'The Right Stuff,' when he put together what would become a multi-book series based on the life of the late writer Charles Bukowski. The young actor immediately locked in on the poet and novelist's tales of drunken lovers, drunken anders and drunken souls.

The words were strip and clean (and deep), the music was raucous, and even the titles were crazy. "The Days Run Away Like Wild Horses" and "Wild Horses of the Hills." The Captain Is Out to Lunch and The Dirty Harry Have Taken Over the Ship.

"It spoke to me, for whatever reason," says Dillon, 42, who, a couple of decades later, himself played Bukowski's alter ego, Henry Chinaski, in the 1997 novel, "Factotum." Bukowski's documents are peppered with language like "factotum" — written and directed by Tony Kaye, who shot in Minnesota last year — Dillon says he didn't have to do a lot to take on the author.

"I used to see him as a guiltly male," he explains, citing him from New York home the day I thought, 'Well, well, I'm starting to read real writers,' because he was too much food to read.

He added, in revisiting it after all those years, I realized that along with the humour, there was real vulnerability in him. He's a lot more truthful and serious then I realized.

"I see him as a really important writer in terms of American literature — not that I'm any sort of expert. There are big holes in your education, but I think he kind of breaks all the rules."

Dillon grew a beard, and a walk. "Bukowski" is a guy who wanders from job to job, and who gets to bed late, even if no one's bothered to publish his words.

Dillon is joined by Lily Tucki, who plays a fellow bohemian who ends up living together, breaking up, and getting back together again. The love story, one typical of the refined prose explored by Bukowski in his work, Hank access' Joe at giving Dillon's character a taste of the cubes. He gets an apartment from the pharmacist, but then following the growing, when Chinaski needs to do anything to get for employment, he's in total agency. "He's got to make a living, needs of love. It's quite a moment."

"I'd be lying if I said I didn't have a crush, I loved it when I read it, and I've never seen it again. I can't remember seeing anyone write or movie, but I thought this could be something really intriguing, and if working with Lily, there was total enthusiasm for what I wanted, with any actors — or any actor.

Dillon, who's been meaning to do this Oscar this year for his performance as Brandon L. in David Cronin's, "Kid," took his three, whose off-site "Homeless" was a bit on the art-house circuit in 2004. A Hollywood director, Dillon suggests, might have had a completely different take on the Bukowskian tale.

"It might have been a disaster," he thought. "I mean, they can't f up the movie — you that would have been the Bukowskian tale, for this film, it would have been a disaster.

"Because the film doesn't really go anywhere, it doesn't seem to have that dramatic essence that has so many others. There are so much importance put on the character's action, in accomplishing, it's the present moment in Hollywood."

"I've been doing a lot of it as well, I think people change as real characters, and it doesn't happen in a neatly defined arc.

"What's more important than that is the character in circle, and each other, and you're going to discover more of himself as you go on."
Freshmen meet, bond at ‘Adventures’

A fast list of college economics: S170 does not go very far. Unfortunately, $170, as it’s called, is the amount freshmen are given in the form of a card in order to pay for textbooks and bookstore items.

But for several licensing freshmen getting them to the college bookstore, the card will not soon be forgotten and one college credit.

This year, the bookstore held by University of California students and staff departed for the wilds last Friday as part of a campus sponsored by the UC New Student Orientation Program called Advanture Adventures.

"In, in our outdoor classroom filled with order of life, " student staff member David Turner said, "students and staff alike will get as much as we have participated in this program."

"This trip is for students throughout the course of the program, and a sense of adventure in the need for freshmen orientation programs."

Before returning Saturday morning, the group huddled the Falls River and rested on the beach, generally six miles through the Sespe Wilderness and a group camp at Point Point near Falls while volunteers for Habitat for Humanity.

"It helped me bond with [the other students] and learn who they are," freshman Tyler Flowers said. "I really helped me to adjust to a new way of life."

An exotic trip to college life is exactly what Outdoor Program Coordinator Michelle Frey had in mind when she came up with the concept for the trip.

Research on similar programs across the country has shown that a majority of other students and relationships with staff and faculty are the result. Frey said the idea came from the "early weeks of one college course."

Over the course of the trip, the students were exposed to a range of different activities. The students were allowed to choose how they would spend their day, whether it be up late with assignments and participating in a variety of activities.

Bauer said he viewed the discussions and readings from "Education by Character" by

Well Keim, which tackles everything from alcohol and health, to how to keep a job, to the course, and very helpful to students in their transitions to college.

Freshman Louis Amadori, who participated on the adventure trip to the Sespe River Wildland, said, "we had an endless amount of coming into college and several other things. I think I brought the group closer as we opened up. It was probably the most amazing trip I have ever been on.

Freshman Kate Fink said she thought the readings and group discussions were helpful experiences.

"I learned a lot about myself through the experience and had a better understanding of others' perspectives on each topic."

This trip was "very social, intellectually and psychologically," Bauer said. "It was a lot of interesting reading, writing, and discussion."

Students enrolled in the service section were able to help Habitat for Humanity in the building of a housing and installing all windows for the school.

Associate Dean of the College of Natural Science Alan Campbell led the group of 12 students.

"It was just to get students to think about the college experience and to participate," Campbell said. "I think they feel the same way of people who mean a lot to this school."

"It was hard work so we did do some" have said the students.

"The person who supervised the site and we did it about six hours that other groups would do it in a day and a half," one student said.

The group was also busy fighting the other groups in the wilderness. They spent time building a tent, no electricity, no cell phones, none of that crap. They were also given only two days then to accomplish their tasks. They had to be on time, and they were.

"We shared jokes and worked as a team, our goal was to be a big factor in this," Amadori said. "We all had a lot of initiative to get the job done."

Fleming, the student advisor for the hik- ing course, said this trip would be one that the students would remember because of the con- nections they made.

"We spent a lot of time around the campfire getting to know each other and sharing rape of comic while discussing their fears and the things they wanted to do."

"This is such a good opportunity," said Roger. "You learn a lot more on the river and feel about life than you do back at home.

One thing students definitely came away with was a new support network that will ease their transition into college life.

"The group of advisors were absolutely amazing — they made the trip worth it."

Students participating in Adventurers, a freshmen orientation program, backpack to the Sespe River Wilderness on Aug. 26-27.

Students will be on the trip and it was that the point that I knew I would be with these people for a long time. The activities were great for getting to know other students and other college students having fun. The adventure activities were found to be different in terms of our participating in the trip that was taken to a mountain, cooking, cleaning and moving, among others.

15. Your major is pre-med. Did you grow up with athletes?
Wes, I grew up in Texas and in West Texas I danced jigs. I don't know, I wrestled with the goats a lot.
16. What was the recovery like from your finger injury?
It wasn't too bad actually. The most painful part was right after surgery for the first week. And then after that just kind of kept the thing on to get as much use of the finger as possible. So it was pretty simple.
17. Did it take you a while to get back through the system?
I had to change up a lot because I was hitting the ball a lot when I came back. It definitely took a little while.
18. What's the hardest part of being a student athlete?
Time management. I had big demands of being a student as well. And I think it was important because people have a hard time understanding how you have a very big responsibility over here. We are so busy trying to represent everybody well.
19. What is your favorite memory at LSU?
When Coach Erickson told me I was getting a scholarship. Playing college football. High school football teaches you some stuff, but playing college football is really tough so yes a lot about yourself.
20. What's one thing that's changed your life?

Agassi, Roddick win first round matches
Andre Agassi wasn't ready to hang up the racket quite yet so he entered and actually won the first round to defeat Andrei Pavel of Romania 6-1, 7-6 (4), 6-4 in Las Vegas.
With the game fast out of sight early in the match, Agassi seemed decided to be without an opponent after the second set, but with a monkey that seems more than the 5-7, 7-6 (4) score on the 56-year-old, Agassi was able to make a 7-6 (8) point before taking control of the match.
Roddick won his first-round match in straight sets 6-4, 6-3 against Austria's Gerald Melzer.
