Family, UI remember former prof

By Callie Rice

Agnew

Professor emeritus treated Steven Brunsfeld died Oct. 4, 2006, at 84. Brunsfeld was a long-time resident of the area and a dear friend of the family. At 6 years old, Brunsfeld was a star child of the family, attending the University of Idaho with his father, N. R. Agnew, and living with his family. Brunsfeld was a well-respected professor at the university and is remembered for his love of nature and the outdoors. He is survived by his wife of 53 years, Nancy Brunsfeld, and his children, Jennifer Brown and Peter Brunsfeld. The family wishes to extend their deepest thanks to the University of Idaho for their support.

Renfrew reopens after blast

At around 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, an explosion in a third-floor laboratory of Renfrew Hall left the building unusable and an underground research area untouchable. The building was closed and the laboratory was secured.

The explosion occurred because of a damaged pipe on the 3rd floor. It's unknown at this time if the damage was due to a chemical reaction or if it was caused by a mechanical failure. The building is still under investigation.

"At the time of the explosion, the building was evacuated and a police department, a hazardous materials team, and a fire department were called in to respond," said student Jennifer Brown, who was present at the time of the explosion. "No one was injured, but the damage to the building is extensive."

A "lot of students don't show up for the lab very seriously."

Brandon Laidley

Student

"As we walked to class, we noticed flames and smoke coming from the building. We immediately called 911 and evacuated the building."

After the evacuation, the building was closed and the laboratory was secured. The building is still under investigation.

Lecture addresses security

By Nathan Parker

The S.U. Bellows was packed with two former seminar addresses about national security and the Constitution.

Former Sen. Gary Hart, a Democrat from Colorado, and Alex Simpson, a Republican from Wyoming, spoke Thursday at the University of Idaho as part of the Sherman J. Bellows Lecture Series. They addressed issues regarding war, terrorism and Washington partnering.

"Our nation has a long history in the U.S. government and people focus on the Constitution. Maintaining the constitutional rights of minors are key in terrorism. Hart said, agreeing with Simpson, that terrorism is essential."

"We do not protect ourselves by descending to the level of the terrorist. But if we raise the level of terrorism, we are losing our security, not gaining it," Hart said.

"The bill we passed in August," Hart said, "is the most expansive bill in the U.S. government. It has to be signed by the president in the next 90 days. Since he left office, he's been in the United States for the last two years."

"We have to be careful with what we're doing," Hart said. "We have to be careful with what we're doing."

"I think it's important to remember that the Constitution is our largest and most important document at the university."

As Mues takes on a new (old) position

By Savannah Cannings

Lloyd Mues says he doesn't like to talk about the past. "The past is gone. I want to look at where we're going, what do we want to do," University of Idaho's new vice president of finance and administration said.

Mues, formerly the assistant vice president of finance and administration, will take over the position since May 2006 when Nancy Dunn had to take a leave of absence due to a serious illness. The University of Idaho's 8th President, U. S. President Tim White announced that Dunn would not be returning to the university and that Mues would remain for at least two years, at which time his performance would be reviewed.

Mues said his career has been an "amazing journey," and he looks forward to leading the University for the rest of his term.

"I'm looking forward to the opportunity to work with the people," Mues said. "I really want to work with them."
The students will cook, sing, dance and perform for the program that includes a fashion show, a dance, Nepali cuisine and traditional Nepali music and dance. The aim of the program is for fun, Amit said. The Nepalese ballroom is packed.

"People love it," he added.

Amit said the tickets for the program are a good deal because usually a dance or a dinner costs at least $100. For the ticket price, participants also get to see the program and learn about Nepal.

Part of the profits from the event will help pay for Nepalese student's career treatment. The student, Sujana Dhaewajoo, who was brought to the UI's Children's Hospital for his surgery, attended the event.

Dhaewajoo had to go to Seattle for treatment and he returned to Nepal last year. The proceeds went to support the Palawan orthopedist and two years ago he went to billion victims.

The students from Nepal went to share their culture and tradition while representing their country and graduates of the Brunsfeld, colleagues of Dr. Thapa.

"We want people to know the beautiful place called Nepal," Adhikari said.

Sujana Thakur Khumal will perform in the Nepali dance and the fashion show.

"We are all students here and apart from studies we want to have fun and show our people, culture," Khumal said. "Real people don't know where Nepal is.

Nepal is a small and hilly country north of India and south of China. The latest earthquake is mostly associated with Mount Everest. Adhikari said.

"We all live close to Kathmandu, the capital of Nepal. It is about a five-day walk from Kathmandu to the Mount Everest base camp.

The Nepalese Student Association has grown drastically in the last two years to 50 members. It had about nine members three years ago. The trend is continuing because Nepal has opened its doors to Western students.

The Nepalese students come to the United States to get an American degree because the American degree is well accepted all over the world, Amit said.

"We all speak Nepali, English, but the non-English language is different in Nepal," he said.

Wherever the Nepalese students go, they create a separate culture and society because they are far away from their country and family, Ranjit said. Mary Nepali students live near other student, place there to four times with North. The last time Nepal was first years ago, Amit said. The program helps students have a better understanding of Nepal.

"A lot of people know about Nepal now," he said.
The state of Idaho is facing a critical housing crisis. With over a third of its residents living in poverty, and the cost of housing continuing to rise, it is a matter of urgent concern. The proposed solution is to legalize marijuana, which has been suggested as a way to reduce the housing crisis. The argument is based on the theory that marijuana can be grown in apartments, providing a source of income for those in need. This proposal is currently being debated in the state legislature. The Governor has already announced her support for the proposal, and it is expected to be voted on in the upcoming session. The outcome of this vote will have significant implications for the future of the state of Idaho.

Incident shows students take safety in the classroom for granted.

A lot of students don't show safety in the lab very seriously. They don't realize if anything bad happens to them it'll be for granted, so they don't think about how bad it could be or how bad it actually will happen. In this case it could be really dangerous. In this case a three-year-old child, Fajita said. "I believe that students didn't think about the situation had happened, and it ended up that it was a big disaster in the beginning because the explosion was really bad. Everyone thought that the classroom had to be cleaned up and they didn't think about the incidents had happened, and they didn't think about the consequences of the explosion. Everyone thought that there was a mistake, but it was really serious." The explosion happened on the ground with many people were in the classroom and many people crowing around him and asking for what happened. They said that the kind of explosion was not severe, but it was in the room and some people were injured. All persons who have been notified, Fajita said.

Wow, and I thought it was only a matter of finding a free pizza on campus. I was wrong. I guess I'm just going to have to stop going to the Union and buying the student publication. I mean, with the kind of people who run the student newspaper, I don't think I'll ever be able to get a job in the publishing field.

Bull'-eyes.

I'm not saying that all of these people are bad, but I don't think they're the kind of people I want to model myself after. I mean, they're just not the kind of people I want to associate with. I don't want to be around people who are always complaining and never do anything about it. I want to be around people who are positive and make a difference.

Inner beauty at the Prichard

Art meets "The Magic Schoolbus" for a reality road trip through the human body with author and artist Philip Rowley.

"Heart," as he's been known at the MACO (Museum of Contemporary Art of Ohio) International Film Festival of Bioscapes at La Pricka in Minneapolis, the "bodyistics" event in Coventry, UK, and the "bodyistics" panel in Moscow. Assisted by a gastronomist, the "bodyistics" event contains a number of the human body's innermost secrets. The switch between internal and external floors throughout the human body is less accurate and precise than it seems. No map contains numbered sections in every corner.

Rowley said a short bit of his追随者 "converts" the audience to "the voyage" simultaneously.

"I'm interested in a different kind of experience both for the gallery and for Moscow," Rowley said. "This is a show of fine art installations and project exhibitions highlighting art and video installations while giving the viewer the same kinds of time to prepare for preparing forms of the world. (Which?) We could be a break from the usual.

The free exhibit is from 10 am to 6 pm Tuesday through Friday, noon to 6 pm Saturday and 11 am to 4 pm Sunday. The gallery is located at 1 N. Main St. in Ann Arbor, Michigan. The exhibit will run through Sunday, March 16.

13 fascinating facts about Friday the 13th

By Dr. Stansell

5. "13" is the number of the devil (often known as Satan) in the Bible. Interestingly, it is also the number of the year in which the film "Friday the 13th" was released. The number has been associated with evil in Western culture for centuries, and it has been used to represent the idea of a cursed or unlucky day.

6. The book "The Haunting of Hill House" by Shirley Jackson was first published in 1959, the same year as the release of "Friday the 13th." The novel is considered to be one of the first modern horror novels and has been a major influence on the horror genre.

7. According to legend, the number 13 is avoided in many parts of the world, and it is often considered unlucky. In some cultures, it is believed that having 13 guests at a meal will bring bad luck.

8. In Italy, it is considered unlucky to give thirteen flowers as a gift. The number 13 is considered unlucky because it is associated with death and the number of the week when Jesus was crucified.

9. In many cultures, the number 13 is associated with bad luck because it is considered to be an unlucky number. In Japan, for example, it is considered unlucky to have 13 people at a dinner party, and in China, it is considered unlucky to have 13 items of jewelry.

10. In some cultures, the number 13 is associated with the devil. In Christian tradition, 13 is the number of the disciples of Jesus, and it is believed that Judas Iscariot was the 13th disciple.

How Hollywood is destroying ‘Hairspray’

By Bill Heaney

I pores about how much I love film maker John Waters. What I do not like is the version of the film "Hairspray" that I saw. I don't have any problem with the material in the movie - it's funny, and it's well done. But the material was not suited to the movie. The film was too long, and the story was not well told. I think that the movie is a disappointment, and it's a shame that it's being shown in theaters.

What I do think is that John Waters is a genius, and his work is important. I think that his films are important, and that they are a part of the history of film. But I do think that "Hairspray" is a disappointment, and that it is not a film that should be shown in theaters.

Saget takes on the 'mob'

By Rick Porter

Speckle

A significant portion of America loves Bob Saget from the Full House and the host of “America's Funniest Home Videos,” two of the currently-television hits on the planet at the decade. A public-domain portion of the popular Janeson Leiber for her extraordinary stand-up act, as a guest at her comedy tour, “A Night of Comedy and Music” last year. Startling Thursday. Vivid TV can see a Saget that depicts earlier in her life. He's got the host of a late night show going on a million people. He's short, he's skinny, he's no genius. But he's a comedian who's starting to build the American version in recent years. He's been known to sell out his act in just about any place. The show presents the image of a stand-up comic getting better every year, getting more unique on the stage. Saget's new book, "Sagtobye," is a book of the words that he's walked away with an million dollars. As of this writing, he's got a position vying the remaining members of the American public at the show. One of one of the things that struck me.

"It got all of me at a point in my life. It felt funny — even a bunch of people in this room wouldn't like this. So we can't be too commercial, and it's going to be funny. But when they pull off the money at the end, they get really serious about it."

NEW YORK — Howard Stern's about to unleash a raunchy ad campaign to tout his new channel. The former radio personality plans to use the campaign as part of his ongoing efforts to attract viewers to his new channel, Howard Stern's Satellite Radio Network. Stern's network, which launched in November, is now in talks with major cable operators to carry its programming. The Stern Free for All — in which all the channel's content will be offered free for three days — is being held to generate interest in the channel. The campaign will include advertisements on television, radio, and the Internet.

The campaign will feature ads that highlight the channel's raunchy and sometimes explicit content, which includes topless women and adult material. The ads will run during the day and will be accompanied by audio announcements that encourage viewers to tune in and try the channel.

The campaign is being coordinated with Stern's satellite radio network, which launched in November. The network is in talks with major cable operators to carry its programming.

(Editors' note: This story is part of a four-part story that will appear as each new era of the basketball club. The second part will appear in the Jan. 20 issue of the Sports/Recreation section.)

While the University of Idaho's boxing club goes largely unnoticed by the general student body, it is a huge part of life for several students. Every week, the club gathers three times in the basement of Memorial Hall for an intense workout. The workouts stress both technique and general conditioning, while veteran members get live protection, shadow boxing and sparring.

"We are not a fight club," Larry's boxing coach, Pat Pellett, who trained to move from Moscow, Idaho, where he taught 18 professional boxers over the course of 18 years.

Upon moving to Moscow, Idaho, Pellett fell out of place in the small-town atmosphere that was substantially different than the metropolitan Manhattan, but quickly found his calling after establishing an independent life.

While it was Pellett's age that initially attracted the students, it was the experience that came along with that made Pellett the perfect fit for a club.

"I'm an awesome guy," Larry's boxing member, Gene Brill, said. "I've had a lot of experience, and if you ever come down, he'll talk to you about boxing."

"One of Pellett's favorite aspects of the sport is that anyone can box," Brill said. "I am living proof you don't have to be the greatest athlete to be competitive or somewhat good." Pellett said. "Like thatSellie and the big kids who are as good as any good pro we've ever had. We get small kids, students that end up being pretty good fighters because they are willing to do what it takes. I like that aspect of the sport - it is the playing field.

The University of Idaho will unveil its new women's basketball team at 7 p.m. today in Memorial Gym during Midnight Madness, the official kick-off event for the basketball season.

The event will give fans a chance to see their teams in action, and familiarize themselves with the new faces of UI basketball.

Between the men and women, there are plenty of new faces - including four-year men's head coach George Pellett, along with 12 new players and five trailers to the women's team.

"Right now we have so many new players in our program, we are just trying to figure out what we are going to do and how we are going to do it," said Pellett, who spent 17 years as the head coach at Lewis-Clark State College and then as UI's assistant men's coach.

The men were picked to finish last in the Western Athletic Conference in the coaches poll and the media poll.

"Our charge is to go out and prove the polls may not be as accurate as they look right now," George Pellett men's basketball coach.

"People polls have a lot to do with history," Pellett said. "To be honest, at this point in time they are very important on it.

When Idaho, which won the WAC last year, was picked to finish first in both polls this year, New Mexico State was picked second in both polls.

"Our charge is to go out and prove the polls may not be as inaccurate as it looks right now," Pellett said.

The women were picked to finish eighth in the WAC, above their WAC record of seventh last year.

"The women poll doesn't mean a hill of beans," said women's coach Mike Distelrath. "The thing is, we're a young team and because nobody knows our kids yet.

This isn't the first time in recent years the Idaho women have been heard for an upset.

The year we played for the Big West Championship, we switched to a 3-2 zone and picked to finish toward the bottom of the league," said Distelrath. "He said he was ready to prove his point to the rest of the league.

"We are just ready to get out and go play and that is what matters. That is what everybody likes to hear."

Pellett said.

The men open the regular season at home on Nov. 10 against South Dakota State. They play at Georgia and Washington and will play the University of Idaho in Washington State in December before playing Utah in January and at Fresno State.

The women opened Nov. 13 at Portland and later head to Idaho for their three-game opening slate. The opener is Nov. 4 at home against Fresno State.

Vandals to crash Tech's Homecoming

As the Vandals head back out on the road, they have yet to prove themselves to the rest of the WAC

University of Idaho at LA Tech

Kickoff: 4 p.m. (Pac-10) on Saturday.

The history:
LA Techled 0-0 in the WAC last year with a 7-4 overall and 6-2 conference record. LA Tech and the Vandals meet for the first time next year and the Bulldogs won 30-13.

Look for:
A whole new team from LA Tech. Erickson said confidence they are the most improved team in the WAC, if not the nation.

Why it's important to Idaho:
Coming off a win over New Mexico State, the past is starting to fall into place for the Vandals, but they have yet to place that the home game and other can be a come-through win against the Aggies, the U1 offenve scored all of its points in the first half and followed with an offensive and defensiveAD

Opening quote:
"I really believe that you don't stay the same. You get better or you get worse as you want to go. Whether you get worse because you're not improving and you get injuries and things happen to you, or you get better because you stay healthy and continue to improve. We would rather not than we were when we played our first game."

Redshirt Yanker spunks up sidelines

By Penn Atlas

Kelsey Yanker is one of the shortest, strongest, and most valuable players on the Idaho volleyball team, but there are few who realize the potential that lies in the 5-foot-7, 106-pounder from Portland, Ore.

At the beginning of the season, Kelsey was feeling the pressure of being a redshirt freshman. She had been on the varsity team since her junior year of high school, but now she was expected to contribute to the team on a different level. Kelsey said, "I knew it was going to be tough, but I was ready for the challenge."

Kelsey's strength and athleticism were a welcome addition to the team. Her ability to move quickly and change direction on the court was a valuable asset. She was also a great leader, and her positive attitude helped to boost the morale of her teammates.

Kelsey's biggest moment of the season was when she scored a critical point in the championship game against the University of Washington. She said, "I was so happy when I saw the ball go in the net. It was such a great feeling to know that I had contributed to our team's victory."

In the end, Kelsey's hard work and dedication paid off. She earned a starting position on the team and was named to the All-Conference team. Her coach said, "Kelsey is a true team player. She always gives her best on the court, and her positive attitude makes her a great asset to the team."

Kelsey's story is a testament to the power of hard work and determination. Despite facing challenges, she never gave up on her dreams. She continued to work hard and stay positive, and in the end, her努力 paid off. She is a shining example of what can be accomplished with dedication and a strong work ethic. Kelsey's story is one that will inspire others to keep pushing forward, no matter what obstacles they may face.

Michigan State’s injured players ready for Ohio State

By Shannon Shaltiel
Dexter News

Kyle Cook started at left guard for two seasons and never missed a game because of injury. Since Cook moved to center this season, those players have started as his spot in just two games.

‘I guess so,’ Cook joked when asked if the position was cursed. ‘That’s what we were talking about. For two years, I was steady but for some reason everyone else comes in and they get hurt. It just seems to be cursed. Hopefully, if someone else gets hurt, it’ll be a small one that comes.’

‘You can’t control what won’t happen to worry,’ Tim Clifford and Kenny Beard both said of the injuries, which they believed were both able to play against Michigan State. When asked if those injuries might affect the team’s future, Clifford and Beard were forced back into white shirts as they would have done had the injury been more severe.

The Spartans had little choice because of depth issues. Those factors and the Spartans’ general reputation have led to a number of scholarship opportunities. Felton again was among the list, as was Grant, who was active during the MSU game.

Beard was blanket that the right side has remained unscathed. Senior right guard Roland Martin and sophomore tackle Jason Miller have started all five games this year. ‘We see a tremendous improvement in those two guys, ‘he said. ‘If we can just get that on the left side, it will look impossibly good.’
