Universities are made up of many parts: students, faculty, administrators and support staff. If any one of those groups is unhappy with the way things are going, a school is on hard times, as the University of Idaho faculty have several reasons to be unhappy.

Denise L. Chambers' rough draft of the Yardley Report, which criticized CFS and used unflattering language to describe faculty culture, is just one reason the university newsletter, Argonaut, Dickow, local union president of CFS, and an insurance in the Local! Hamp- ter, Interim Provost for Idaho. Among them are the charges of faculty benefit, low salaries, excessive workload and the way the administration communicates with faculty. The most recent blow to faculty morale came last week, when the report, containing more than a year's worth of information, was released. Among some of the findings released in the summary of the 42-page document were statements about "senior faculty cultural issues." Idaho the U of I, Dickow said. "And they faculty members lack national perspective, are overly focused on just their area and lack a mandate of national prominence."

The faculty felt a little insulted by the "yardley," said, "It put a lot of blame on the faculty -- I protest that.

what is YARDLEY?

Released in December, the Yardley Report was commissioned more than a year ago by the University of Idaho to assess UI's graduate program. The Yardley Research Group is a national, higher education consulting firm, Yardley collected data from interviews with faculty, administrators and students and entered program details in an automated database that was compiled by the University of Idaho and included such factors as student-to-teacher ratios, faculty salaries, and class size. The report was completed and was an effort to be collected in Idaho and spring. Faculty were asked to come up with a rough draft and it is current- ly in revision. • Each candidate running for the ASUI Senate was asked the following three questions. Responses have been edited for spelling and grammar. For complete responses to the questions, go to www.uiargonaut.com.

3. What qualities do you possess that will make you a good senator?
4. What is one thing you think would improve the University at Idaho?
5. What is one thing you are going to dor for the students if elected?

Matthew Draper

One of the most important qualities I possess is my passion. My entire college career has been entwined with my passion for sports and I believe that I have the ability to be a good senator. I have served on the ASUI Faculty Council as the student representative. This position has given me the opportunity to learn the needed skills to effectively serve the university. I have also helped contribute to the last year's alumnus important project the creation of the Idaho Student Experience Center. I will be representing the Idaho student body and will be the one to do it, I will do everything that is necessary for the university. I am running for the position of ASUI senator I will represent my constituents with dignity and will do what is right to do, I will do everything that is necessary for the university. I am running for the position of the highest level constituent at the highest level UI has to offer.

Osama Mansour

I think that I have a passion for making life better and do what I can to achieve that. I have experiences with planning and programming, which I will use to accomplish my goals.

ASUI is something we need to see

If elected I would like to mainly work on creating awareness among students as to what ASUI is, what we do, and how they can help and also work on a more streamlined football.

They emphasized that the forum was designed to educate students and not to right the wrongs of the legal system. The goal is to create a safe space for students to express their concerns, while also holding law schools accountable for creating a welcoming environment.

A panel of experts including law professors, student organizers, and legal advocates discussed the current state of the legal profession and the need for change. They shared stories of personal experiences and offered solutions for how to address the issues.

One of the main points discussed was the lack of diversity and inclusion within the legal profession. Many students shared stories of feeling excluded and marginalized, and called for more action to create a truly inclusive and welcoming environment.

"We need to work towards creating a more equitable and inclusive legal profession," said one of the panelists. "We must actively work to ensure that everyone has a voice and is represented."

What qualities do you possess that will make you a good senator?

Casey Atchley.

I would be a good senator, first of all because I have a very strong work ethic. I am an active member of the Argonaut, the student newspaper, and I have a job on campus. I have always taken the organizations and various positions I have held very seriously, and I will continue to do so if I am elected to the senate. I work very hard and always try to do my best. I am also very passionate about the things I care about. If I were to run for the senate, I would want to represent the best interests of the students, and I would work very hard to do that.

Patrick Bradbury

I have a passion for music and a strong understanding of the issues that affect the student body. I have been involved in many campus organizations, and I have a lot of experience working with students and faculty. I am comfortable speaking in front of large groups, and I am confident that I would be able to represent the views of the student body.

Alex Ganievsky

There are three strong qualities that come to mind. The first is leadership. I believe that I am a good leader, and I have the ability to effectively communicate with others. The second is empathy. I am able to put myself in the shoes of others, and I am able to understand their perspectives. The third is determination. I am a hard worker, and I am willing to put in the time and effort to achieve my goals.

What is one thing you need to improve at the University of Idaho?

Administrative transparency is a major issue that needs improvement. Without full disclosure of the decision-making process, it is impossible for students to hold their leaders accountable. The current system of open meetings and public forums is not effective in ensuring that all students have a voice in decision-making. In order to improve administrative transparency, we need to ensure that all information is made available to the public in a timely manner.

The university and ASUI have given us a great first college experience. However, there are certain aspects of the university that we feel could be improved. The first is community. Lack of communication and interaction between students and faculty is a significant issue. We need to find ways to encourage students to connect with each other. The second is campus. There is a need for more housing options and for improvements to existing facilities. The third is administration. We need to ensure that administration is accountable to the student body.

I think every senator would probably agree that communication is key. We need to make sure that students and administration are in constant communication. I believe that I am a good candidate for the senate because I am passionate about the university community and I am committed to working to improve the lives of students. I have been involved in many campus organizations and have a strong understanding of the issues that affect the student body. I am confident that I would be able to represent the views of the student body.

We have faced many challenges this semester, but we have also found ways to overcome them. We have been able to bring about change and make the university a better place for all students. If I were to be elected to the senate, I would work to continue this progress and to ensure that the university remains a place where students can learn and grow.

There are many areas of ASUI that need improvement, and one area that we can make sure that senators are accessible to diverse students in the same way. There are many ways to get involved with ASUI, and it is important that we make sure that students feel included and that they are able to have a voice in decision-making. In order to do this, I believe that we need to ensure that there is an intersection of the students' voices.

Our main goal is to make sure that students have a voice in decision-making. We need to ensure that the university is a place where students can learn and grow. If I were to be elected to the senate, I would work to continue this progress and to ensure that the university remains a place where students can learn and grow.

Finally, I would like to encourage all students to get involved with ASUI. There are many ways to get involved, and I believe that everyone can make a difference. I am grateful for the opportunity to serve the university, and I am committed to working to improve the lives of students.

Students learn art of fencing in the University of Idaho’s fencing program and student club

Photos and story by Jake Barber
Argonaut

There is only one place on campus where two people can duel each other with three feet of steel, and not only will professors allow it, they encourage it. Welcome to the University of Idaho fencing program. Students of any skill level can join one of the fencing classes offered for credit, and for those more serious about it there is the Fencing Club.

The exact age of the fencing program at the University of Idaho is unknown, but Norm Pendegraft, one of the fencing coaches and a professor of information systems, said that the program has been around since he came here 25 years ago. Video reels and receipts for equipment can be found in the equipment closet that date back more than 40 years.

Pendegraft, along with post doctorate of MMBB Bob Behal and instructor of economics Steven Peterson, teach the beginning and advanced fencing classes and Pendegraft and Behal coach the club, which has about 12 members and is growing according to Behal.

The University of Idaho track and field team heptathletes will get an opportunity to showcase their talents for the first time during the outdoor season.

The team will travel to Eastern Washington this week where they will compete in the Pacific Invitationals in Cheney.

The team is coming off participations at the Mt. St. Helens Invitational that produced seven regional qualifying marks, five of which came in throwing events.

"Our throwers did a pheno-nominal job last weekend," Idaho coach Jim Teverson said. "Del insight also did a good job too. Last year he was trying to fill the shoes of his brother but this year he did it on the first day.

UO will taking nearly its entire team to the meet with the exception of a couple of distance runners who will be held out.

Among the athletes who will get a chance to showcase their talents are those doing the marks in the hept.

The heptathletes consist of around 15 the 100 meter hurdles, high jump, shot put, 200 meters, long jump, javelin and 800 meters.

Four of the events are done on the first day of the meet and the last part of the day is the hept.
