MER urges city to rescind nudity law

BY ANette DAVIES

The Moscowans for Equal Rights and AIDS Run, sponsored by the campus Student Activities Board, closed the council meeting Monday night with a protest against a resolution passed by the Moscow City Council last Thursday. They asked the council to rescind the ordinance.

The board made specific complaints against the ordinance, which prohibits nudity in public places and establishes fines for the violation of the ordinance. The group expressed concern that the ordinance would be enforced in a discriminatory manner, and that it would have a chilling effect on free speech and the exercise of First Amendment rights.

The group also called for the city to rescind the ordinance and to engage in public discussions about the issue before passing any legislation. They urged the council to consider the potential impact of the ordinance on the city's residents and visitors, and to ensure that the ordinance is enforced fairly and equitably.

The Moscowans for Equal Rights and AIDS Run is an organization that works to promote equality and inclusive policies in the city of Moscow. They have been advocating for changes to the city's public nudity ordinance for several years, and have been frustrated by the city's slow progress on the issue. They are hoping that Monday's protest will draw more attention to the issue and pressure the council to take action.

New group gives students a third choice

Students interested in protecting individual liberties and freedom to make personal choices will find an organization to support them. The Campus Libertarians will hold its first meeting in the Gold Gala Room in the UI Student Union Building Thursday.

The Campus Libertarians will be a student organization focused on promoting individual liberties and freedom to make personal choices. The group will work to inform UI students about political and social issues affecting them and to provide them with a sense of community with others who share their values.
Economy grows in graduate programs

BY JOANNA WRIGHT
The Washington Post

The University of Idaho\'s graduate programs have increased in size, with a 3 percent increase for the 2009-2010 academic year compared to two years earlier. This is the same as the national average, but the average growth rate in the sector for the past five years is 2.6 percent. The university now offers more than 110 graduate programs. But the university\'s 2009-2010 graduate student numbers, 836, were not as high as the university\'s expected 860. The university\'s vice provost and dean of graduate studies, Lynn Hargis, attributes this to ongoing economic challenges. Hargis says, "We\'re in a period of economic downturn, and people are thinking twice about pursuing graduate studies.\" However, these students could be found in areas such as education and business.

The university\'s graduate programs have also grown in size. For example, the number of students in the university\'s business school has increased by 10 percent since 2007-2008. The university\'s business school offers 11 graduate programs, including an MBA program, and it has seen a 20 percent increase in graduate student enrollment since 2007-2008. This is in line with the national trend of increased enrollment in business programs.

The university\'s graduate programs have also seen an increase in enrollment in the sciences. The number of students in the university\'s physics program has increased by 20 percent since 2007-2008. The university\'s physics program offers 10 graduate programs, including a Ph.D. program, and it has seen a 15 percent increase in graduate student enrollment since 2007-2008. This is in line with the national trend of increased enrollment in science programs.

The university\'s graduate programs have also seen an increase in enrollment in the humanities. The number of students in the university\'s English program has increased by 10 percent since 2007-2008. The university\'s English program offers 10 graduate programs, including a Ph.D. program, and it has seen a 15 percent increase in graduate student enrollment since 2007-2008. This is in line with the national trend of increased enrollment in humanities programs.

The university\'s graduate programs have also seen an increase in enrollment in the social sciences. The number of students in the university\'s sociology program has increased by 10 percent since 2007-2008. The university\'s sociology program offers 10 graduate programs, including a Ph.D. program, and it has seen a 15 percent increase in graduate student enrollment since 2007-2008. Albany — Tuitions are rising, but the amounts of state and federal grants and scholarships aren't, and that's causing many students to borrow money to get through college. The situation may be critical to their future as what they do in college affects what they do in the rest of their lives.

Scholarships, grants and savings often don't stretch enough to cover what college will cost, and many students are being loaned money.

At Kent State University, for example, the rate of attendance is $15,670 a year for an undergraduate student. That total includes tuition, books, room and board.

At many colleges, students need financial aid to pay for books, room and board, and other necessities.

At most colleges, Kent State students can receive an awards letter, which is based on the financial information contained in the Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Grants, scholarships, aid and grants are usually need-based and students with financial hardships have access.

But when students graduate, they'll have to face the burden of higher education repayment with loans.

While many students graduate and pay-off their loans, some struggle to pay back the money.

Student loans are paid-back in amounts that are usually small, but with a high interest rate.

Kent State students borrowing, said Mark Myers, director of Kent State's financial aid office, "and there's no end in sight."

"The scary thing to watch for is when students have maxed-out their student loan resources, and they're still short money," Myers said.

The average yearly burden for Kent State students borrowing from the main four homes - Parker, Stubblefield, and pondow + $5,000 to $6,000, according to figures from Myers. A year before, that total was $5,165.

Financial counseling for students receiving federally insured loans can take place when they apply for loans, according to Myers. Students can plan to get a job that might cover loan payments and have enough to live on.

"We try to give that type of guidance in our loan counseling," Myers said.

In the case of student loan debt, it's impossible to repay all loans at once. Students are encouraged to get their loan amounts through a counsellor to get an idea of how much repay- ment might cost.

Still, "most students seem to be pretty prudence-oriented," Myers said. And the reality is that students can actualy get by on smaller loans.

"I just asked Leanne Myers of the College of Business and she said she barely repays her debt," Myers said. "Her early deal by the time she repays her debt is probably $200,000.

Her first semester at Kent State was about $15,000 in total. She was able to pay for her second semester by the time she graduated in December 2003 with a master's degree in business administration. That debt was about $81,000.

In 2001, she saw fees with room and board, and $50,000. Myers made partial payments until she could cancel- late her loans once, with a $7,000 interest rate. (In July, she made the first monthly pay- ment on her loan last year, but 28 years from when she borrowed it.)

Repaying her loan will cost Myers about $311,000.

"Buy, I went to Kent State, I didn't go to Harvard," the Akron resident said of the total cost.

(Those who graduate from school with student loans can finance the loans through a Cleveland manufacturer, and plans to take a second job to make extra money.

"There is a separate administration to pay for a home. If I already have a mort- gage, then the interest stack pays- ments," she said.

She also acknowledged her financial responsibility, "I borrowed the money, and I have full ownership of the interest now," she said.

"Ms. Myers said: "I just did not understand until she could cancel- late her loans once, with a $7,000 interest rate. (In July, she made the first monthly pay- ment on her loan last year, but 28 years from when she borrowed it.)

"I had to make the monthly payments," Myers said.

Budget crises result in tuition hikes

by Dick Polman

The Ohio State University—The red and white banner draped across the north side of the University administration building is looking a little tattered. Earlier this week, the university announced it had received the new state budget, its first in over a decade. The budget includes a 3% increase in state funding, but also an additional $15 million in tuition hikes.

About a quarter of Ohio State’s tuition increase will go toward increasing scholarship aid to meet the needs of low-income students. The university’s budget director explained that the increase in tuition was necessary to offset the state’s decreased funding. "We are seeing a lot of pressure on our financial aid budget," he said. "This is a necessary step to ensure that we can continue to provide scholarships to students who need them."

The Ohio State University is not unique in its tuition hikes. Across the state, universities are facing similar financial pressures. The University of Cincinnati announced a 4% tuition increase earlier this month. The University of Akron is also increasing tuition by 3%. The University of Toledo is increasing tuition by 2%.

University officials are hopeful that the tuition increases will be offset by increased enrollment. "We are seeing an increase in the number of students applying to our university," said one official. "We believe this is a positive sign for our institution."

Students and parents are mixed in their reactions to the tuition increases. Some are concerned about the affordability of higher education, while others are more focused on the quality of education they are receiving.

The Ohio State University has been working to improve the affordability of its programs. The university has streamlined its curriculum and increased the number of online courses available. "We are working hard to make higher education more accessible to our students," said one university official. "We believe this is a step in the right direction."

Despite the tuition increases, the university remains committed to providing a high-quality education. "We are committed to our students and their success," said one university official. "We will continue to work hard to provide the best possible education."

Budget shortfalls leave evidence on campus

A leave to trouble the ground and fall flat when no campuswide war will still fly, something feels amiss. This something is the budget deficit. And its notice is not falling by the wayside as easily as the fall leaves.

The budget and spending on education practically has come to a halt. This can be seen in the large, empty rooms that have been anachronisms on campus. It's perfectly clear that the university's fiscal year 1995 is faltering.

The budget is a document that shows the financial picture of the university. It is created to provide a picture of the university's financial status and to help in planning for future expenditures. The budget deficit is a situation where the university's revenue is less than its expenses. This deficit can be caused by a variety of factors, including a decrease in enrollment, an increase in expenses, or a combination of both.

The university's budget is divided into several categories, including instruction, research, and administration. Each category has a specific amount of money allocated for it, and the university must use this money to provide the services and programs that are outlined in the budget. When the university is unable to allocate the money it needs for these purposes, it is said to have a budget deficit.

The budget deficit can have a number of negative consequences for the university. For example, it can lead to cuts in programs and services, which can be detrimental to the university's students and faculty.

The budget deficit is a serious issue that needs to be addressed. The university needs to find ways to increase its revenue or reduce its expenses in order to resolve the deficit. Additionally, the university needs to be transparent about its budget and its financial decisions, so that the public can understand how the university is using its funds.

Nihilism almost burned my house down

Since the beginning of the academic year, I have been studying art, which I believe to own. Everything that I create is special in some way. I would love to sell it, but that's beside the point. Art is a way to express oneself, and I believe that everyone should have the opportunity to do so.

Art is not just a hobby, but a life. I have been teaching art for several years, and I have seen the impact that it has had on my students. They have grown in confidence, creativity, and self-awareness. Art is a powerful tool for personal growth and development.

But what is art? Or more importantly, who defines it? Is art something that only those who attend art school can claim? I believe that art is for everyone. Whether you are a professional artist or just a hobbyist, you have the right to create art. Art is a reflection of the world around us, and it should be available to all.

There are many ways to define art, and I believe that it is important to be open to all forms of expression. Art can be created in many different mediums, such as painting, sculpture, photography, or digital art. Each medium offers a unique way to express oneself.

Some people might think that art is only for the elite, but I think that this is a misconception. Art is a form of communication that is accessible to everyone. Art speaks to us all, regardless of our background or our experiences.

The importance of art cannot be understated. Art has the power to challenge and inspire, to provoke thought and to draw us outside ourselves. The arts are an essential part of our lives, and they must be valued and supported.

In conclusion, art is a vital part of our society. It is a form of expression that should be accessible to everyone. I urge all of us to support art and to continue to create and make art, regardless of our background or our experiences. Let us use art to express ourselves and to make the world a more beautiful place.
Silence on silver screen is golden

by Katie Bottin

The sound of silence and the aura of the 1930s will sweep over the Center Theater in Pullman Thursday.

The Pullman Civic Theater is holding a screening of "The Great Gatsby" at 7:30 p.m. with the feature film as the center of "Silent Film Night," starring Rudolph Valentino. A short entitled "Blind Skies" also will be shown, tying in to the event for which the filmmaker is being held. The filmmaker is a member of the American Silent Film Society.

The annual film is an actual short film from the 1920s, 8 minutes long in which Mabel Normand acts the male role. The musical called "Mack and Mabel" and "Blind Skies" are the center of the event for which the filmmaker is being held. The filmmaker is a member of the American Silent Film Society.

Lords of the ‘Ring’

Circles hold mystique

The No. 1 box office grosser last week was "The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring." The movie has not yet filled its theaters out, but it has already grossed $200 million. Many viewers say they will return to watch the second安装 in this trilogy, "The Two Towers." To some, the fantasy movie seems to transport them back to Middle Earth, the land of hobbits, elves, and wizards. But to others, the movie is simply a swell adventure. How did "The Lord of the Rings" become such a phenomenon?

For those who have not read J.R.R. Tolkien’s books, the film can be a little confusing. "The Lord of the Rings" is a series of three novels that were published from 1954 to 1955. The story follows the journey of a hobbit named Frodo Baggins, who is tasked with destroying a powerful ring. Along the way, he is joined by a group of companions, including elves, dwarves, and wizards.

The movie adaptation of "The Fellowship of the Ring" was released in theaters on December 19, 2001. It starred Ian McKellen as Gandalf, Viggo Mortensen as Aragorn, and Elijah Wood as Frodo. The film was directed by Peter Jackson, who also directed "The Two Towers" and the upcoming "The Return of the King.

The success of "The Lord of the Rings" can be attributed to a variety of factors. First, the movie is visually stunning, with breathtaking landscapes and detailed costumes. Second, the story is compelling, with complex characters and a well-crafted plot. Third, the movie is well-made, with a talented cast and a skilled director. Finally, the movie has a message of hope and courage, which resonates with audiences.

The success of "The Lord of the Rings" has had a ripple effect on pop culture. The movie has inspired a series of books, including "The Hobbit," "The Silmarillion," and "The History of Middle Earth." The movie has also inspired fan fiction, fan clubs, and even a new genre of fantasy literature.

In the end, "The Lord of the Rings" is a testament to the power of storytelling. The movie has captivated audiences for decades, and it will continue to do so for generations to come.

CIRCULES HOLD MYSTIQUE

I think it is safe to say that Lord of the Rings is a phenomenon. Now it’s more than just the books. Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring has attracted more loyal followers to the legions of J.R.R. Tolkien fans around the world. In fact, it has been such an extreme well-made movie, I am usually not one to jump on the bandwagon of history, but sometimes it’s a good time history. So, I decided to, well, look at the movie. And I tell you, I was not disappointed. When I decided to purchase “The Fellowship of the Ring” in VHS, I had no idea what I was getting myself into. I should have known Bill and I should have known Tolkien.

I found the start of the school year, Bill has become quite attached to this distance. But Bill, no slumbering, Bill is not at school anymore. He has many times he has watched the distance. It takes a bit of a simple action to give a fairly accurate answer. I was able to calculate if he has been the movie this day and how many times I was able to watch the distance. At the beginning of the question, I was a little more complicated. Counting the multiple viewings over the weekend is a task in itself of the film. Bill has given up on the exact number of times and simply threw out an estimated amount in how many dozens, which has reached many. Again it’s hard to know if he was seeing the movie the wrong in which he was watching the movie.

This semester, Bill and I decided not to buy any sort of cable channel, so we can stream this movie (and get HBO and that is in this approach has been effective to a certain extent. Bill and I decided to leave Lord Of The Rings in the VCR, The Silmarillion in the VHS player, watching television, as simply goes along with it. I wouldn’t say I lack grown (of the film), but I always seem to come in to the school when would be the right. All of the right. I have never seen the film, and I am not sure I would like it. The third installment has an effect on the audience, and I may wonder similarly on the wilderness in search of Middle Earth.

Lord of the nerds

It seems anything one can say that the Lord of the Rings has been a beloved film. The film, the release of a similarly successful trilogy of the same name, is a testament to the enduring appeal of fantasy literature. In the days of the Peter Jackson film, Lord of the Rings fans were rampant, well-end and happy to spoof all about the trilogy, elves and the Hobbit. The films were released to massive success, and their faithful fan base continue to grow, with time on their hands.

Time enough to remember the Middle Earth map, learn the names of every elf, list three songs and any color words in Orcish. One cannot forget the dedication of the fans to Middle Earth. The books proved to be a problem with any of them. The crew threw the list in the last minute details, the films were to make sure someone else knew they knew about "The Lord of the Rings" than Tolkien himself.

The phenomenon in the vicinity has reached the outer stages of fandom, and with the end of the film, you forget about reading. A culture is quickly revolving. A nation, if holding to its current prowess, that will reach the magnitude of the trilogy of Sindar Werdig, 2001. To call it, a few devoted followers keep the name and use of Tolkien’s Middle Earth. These fans deserved our own and request after reading "The Silmarillion," which is Tolkien’s true gift.

These fans deserved our own and request after reading "The Silmarillion," which is Tolkien’s true gift.

This book is a collection of essays about the effects of Tolkien’s work on various aspects of Middle Earth. "The Silmarillion" reads like a history book, only less interesting. One had to give the reader’s little credit for the effect. But also, the internet effect enters the equation. Now every 12-year-old for 12 years old or a student is trying to understand and appreciate what Tolkien’s work meant. So, if we can do this, we can understand the meaning of Tolkien’s work. And this is what we want to do.

If you get a chance to read this book, it will be a great experience and a chance to learn about Tolkien’s work. If you haven’t read it yet, it’s never too late. I would recommend it to anyone who is interested in reading about Tolkien and his work. It is a great book and a great experience to read it. Flaming Pie" "Freedom" and "Flaming Pie" are a man has helped shape rock 'n roll still. Paul's songs are written in collaboration with the Beatles, and his solo career took off.

Let It Be: "Hey Jude" and "Something" are among the most beloved songs of the Beatles' catalog. Whether or not the album is better than John is the subject. Paul McCartney is more pronounced in this album, but the band still shine.

I'm Gonna Find My Baby: This song is a great example of the band's ability to change up their sound. The song starts as a slow ballad, then shifts into a hard rock number.

The Last Night: The beatles brought a special energy to this song, making it one of their most popular tracks.

Paul McCartney's solo career was fueled by his partnership with John Lennon. McCartney's contributions to the band were essential, and he left a lasting impact on their sound. He has continued to perform and record music throughout his career, remaining a beloved figure in the music world.

Jurassic 5 gives everything its got to its fans

There should be more groups like Jurassic 5: a group of talented musicians who know how to put on a great show. Their music is hip-hop, yet new genres cannot describe their sound. The group's use of soul and old-school rap and hip-hop is blend that makes it hard to describe the bulk of its live shows.

The group's live shows take fans on a ride. Many bands feel confined by their genre but not Jurassic 5. They are able to repackage the sound of hip-hop and soul to make it all live in a live setting. It takes advantage of the raw energy of a live show, channelling the energy into creating a sound that has not only its roots in hip-hop and soul, but also in the sounds of other genres.

As its show at Portland's Crystal Ballroom Thursday night, the group gave all its fans something to cherish.

The most obvious aspect of 2015's show was its energy and how much fun the band members were having. They seemed to be happy to be at the show as the crowd was. It's a bubble and the crowd was seduced.

Taking its show on an underground hip-hop sensation for several years. Now that it's on a major label and enjoying increased popularity, it has no problem recognizing the bliss as the one who got to it where it is today.

Matthew, the lead vocalist, was extremely photogenic and charming, each with distinctive voices, and their songs, flowing from the crowd.

Gaucho unload on Vandals in conference soccer duel

by Colin Peterson

The University of Idaho soccer team showed some heart and scored two goals in the second half to defeat the University of California-Davis 2-1. The Gauchos, down 1-0 at the half, rallied in the second half for the win.

The Vandals seemed to gain new life in the second half as they came out strong and launched the first three shots into the net. However, the Gauchos quickly took control of the game and dominated the Vandals defense.

The Gauchos managed to score on a free kick from the penalty spot in the 61st minute. They then capitalized on a defensive mistake by the Vandals in the 65th minute, scoring their second goal.

The Gauchos are now tied with the Vandals for the top spot in the conference standings. They face off against the Oregon State Beavers in their next game, which will be a crucial match for both teams.

UI begins weekend with tough loss

by Dave Brown

The University of Idaho soccer squad remains winless in conference play after losing 2-0 Friday to the Cal Poly Mustangs. The Vandals (2-7-3 overall, 0-1-2 in conference) are now 2-7-3 overall and 0-1-2 in conference, while the Mustangs are 9-4-1 overall and 1-2-1 in conference.

The Vandals went down with their third loss on the season, falling 2-0 to Cal Poly. They are now 0-1-2 in conference play.

The Vandals are also 0-1-2 in conference play, having lost their last two conference games.

UI soccer head coach Art Arby made his debut as head coach with a win over the Vandals. Arby's system was effective, as the Gauchos were able to dominate the game and secure the win.

The Gauchos are currently in second place in the conference standings, with a record of 5-0-2. They have won five of their six conference games so far this season.

The Vandals, on the other hand, are in last place with a record of 0-4-2. They have lost four of their six conference games so far this season.

The Gauchos will look to continue their winning streak as they prepare for their next conference game against the University of Oregon on Saturday.
Volleyball cracks Pacific goose egg

By Nitaun Jerke

The first time in University of Idaho history, the Vandals prevailed against the Pacific Tigers in an exhibition match Thursday evening in the Big West Center. The Vandals were not only 0-0 against the Tigers before Thursday, they also had a rough start in the Big West. Nonetheless, the Vandal ladies grabbed one of the biggest victories in their history.

The Vandals started a little rough against the Tigers, falling behind 1-0 throughout the first game, but closed the game to lose 1-3. The second game was close throughout, but the Vandals came out to win 2-1. The third game was a nail-biter, and the Vandals won, 1-0. The fourth game was also a close call, and the Vandals came out on top, 2-1. The fifth game was completely comfortable, 2-0.

The Tigers had 10 errors and a .234 hitting percentage in the final game, while the Vandals had just 3 errors and a .300 hitting percentage. Rebecca Doherty had three kills, five assists and five digs for the Vandals in the final game. The Vandals had 18 kills and 11 assists for the match. Buchanan said, “We did a lot of good things, and we need to improve on some things.”

The game was not played well, Buchanan said. "There were eight errors. They made three errors in the last game, and we had a lot of errors in the first two games. We played really well.”

The Vandals return home to face the University of Montana tonight at Memorial Gym.

For us as a team we need to improve,” Buchanan said. "We need to look for ways to improve. We need to make sure that we play really well."
