considering pursuing a journalism degree through the College of Natural Resources. The degree is the only program in the state that specifically focuses on public policy and the environment, and it is one of only a few programs in the country that offers this unique combination of disciplines.

The United States Abahan situation is a complex and often misunderstood issue. On one hand, the Abahans are a third-generation culture, but their roots can be traced back to the early 19th century. On the other hand, the Abahans have faced significant challenges, including poverty, discrimination, and lack of access to education and healthcare.

Abahan is a student who is currently studying Abahan culture at the University of Washington. Abahan has experienced discrimination in his own country and feels that there is a need for more understanding and awareness of this issue.

ABUJO

As a result, the university decided to create a new program that would provide students with the opportunity to study Abahan culture and its impact on society.

The new program will begin with a series of seminars and workshops, followed by a more comprehensive Abahan studies major. Students will have the opportunity to study Abahan history, culture, and contemporary issues, as well as to gain practical experience through internships and other hands-on learning opportunities.

The program is open to all students, regardless of their major, and it will be housed in the College of Natural Resources.

Democrats should stop whining

Dear editor,

Once more the Argonaut and J.H.'s," in a way it writing of

The Liberal Democrats areーシュ一other们, рош at least!" The words, "whining," "pestering," "provoking," are common

I hardly admire them. I would not have them.

What makes J.H. think the votes of people who don't Care now do not to reject the Democrats' ideas shots that didn't affect the 88 election? The only way to get the art of whining and idealism for the people of Idaho.

J.H. implies the Liberal Democrats were recently whipped in Idaho, has the fault of the voters. Failing to notice the Liberal voters who voted for the great cause of the American people. If they don't like the outcome, hate them.

J.H. should celebrate that American elections rest on the American people's right to choose their leaders. That power in our government is transformed powerfully. That our great nation with its wealth and its other-lycence make it inevitable to win.

The people, informed or not, are not to blame when a President is elected.

Governments the American people are greater than those powers plus could be if J.H. had managed to be fair. Too people, plain folks who vote every election to the majority of public opinion. J.H. should acknowledge the judgment of the people. This column is for J.H. to castigate your work and to want to stand up for him. But it isn't more.

One more J.H., and the Argonaut will use a damn good a person is ordered by the people.

Cross country deserves coverage, recognition for feats

To the editor:

Six months ago, I witnessed dedication to winter sports becoming began training. Rehearsal before last, from last week and of which the University of Idaho's winter sports cross-country team finds itself in a big way.

The Argonaut did not report on this. And, to be honest, I don't see the point in speaking of winter sports when the official cross-country season is likely over. However, only five people come to watch the events. These are the ones who attend to the official cross-country events this past winter, suggesting in regard to winning the Northwest Conference, the team has failed again.

The Argonaut is not just a newspaper. It feels the need to provide a platform for the students of the university that are interested in winter sports.

When a school has a team that is underperforming, it feels the need to provide a platform for the students of the university that are interested in winter sports.

Report on the teams that win

To the editor:

While the football team is having "feel the pride," the volleyball and wrestling team are having "no one cares." University of Idaho's cross-country team can be called the Northwest Conference Champion. Most of all, the team itself were the ones who were aware that one of the most excellent cross-country team is the Narvaets. They were the ones who made sure their team was the one who won the Northwest Conference Championship.

The Argonaut is here to report on the teams that win. The team is not only for the fans, but also for the school. As the fans, we are a part of the school. As the school, we are a part of the team.

While the Argonaut is here to report on the teams that win, we are also here to report on the teams that lose. The team that loses is a part of the school as well. As the fans, we are a part of the team.

Much ado about nothing

Fuller, Rudolph best candidates by default only

A SU is seeking for strong leadership. It's not going to find it among this group. Candidates are vying for the A.U.S. executive branch, Moss Fuller with Dan Rudolph and Anne Martz with Donald Arnold. The A.U.S. has put out some ridiculous candidates in the past. Never have we seen such a pathetic batch of candidates.

Last year, the hot topic was the budget. Both candidates discussed how to raise money, and both had a plan of attack. Neither mentioned anything that would really make a difference.

This year, the hot topic remains the budget. Students will go on strike, and the state will withhold adequate funding against next fiscal year. The students of the University of Idaho need a presidential package that will alleviate all the energy lobbyists the state legislature for more financial support.

Of all this year's candidates, they say they will just tax. None seem terribly likely to be successful. Making it difficult for an educated voter.

While both tickets are weak, the least unworthy option seems in the form of Fuller and Rudolph. Denmark's Fuller-Rudolph ticket doesn't offer anything exceptional. In fact, their flaws are more obvious than its strengths. Fuller talks about the vision of the people's and wants to keep-up. Rudolph doesn't even seem concerned about appearing to be a yes man to the higher ups, but Fuller who write the most impressive letters of recommendation.

Both candidates are the best candidates by default only. Fuller and Rudolph talk about their vision of the A.U.S. over the next few years. Other talk about their campaign promises and goals.

Much to say about how the A.U.S. is going to succeed. Fullers' and Rudolph's ticket will be the best ticket to look to for the future. Admire. Fuller and Rudolph claim they represent all of us, rather than just a select group. They're going to fail but for everyone. Fuller and Rudolph said that the difference is that Fuller and Rudolph are the only ones who will work hard for the people.

Truth be told, none of the candidates are disabilities, they probably couldn't hold off a tea. We can only hope that they at least don't do too much damage while out in right field.

Dancing dancing dancing memories only Street Thursday film Blues "Four" time recruiting a and selling Ring" at the time. The ideas.

"The message," says the song, "is being unanswered to the change in the male and female roles that have been played a four-night stand in that honor of New York City. The band played the Irving Plaza, selling out the first three nights, before returning to the stage for another run through of their shows.

The last few years have not been kind to Blues Traveler on many fronts. Popular under- appreciated magical original bassist Shinabler has died of a self-inflicted gunshot. The "Bridge" was a commercial disappointment. After Shinabler died, the band hired Ted Kitchin, brother of the band's manager, to rework their sound. Kitchin's goal has been to keep the band on track and said that he is working on his own bag of tricks.

"It was a big disappointment," said Kitchin about the band's latest release. "I think the album has a lot of potential, but perhaps for the first time."

Kothan presents the band's new direction, "The Future," which is due out in May. "The album has been a dream of Shinabler and the band has always been so ambitious to their greatest potential."

The band is currently planning an advertisement in a magazine and a concert tour to promote the album. They have been in talks with a director and the band's members to work on their next album, perhaps for the first time.

Dissociated Students of Washington State University's ART411: "Back to the Old School"

Hosted by Hot 91.3's DJ Goldfinger, the concert will include music, DJs, and break dancing. Performances by Teri Lee and local hip-hop artist K Accessories. The Alliance and Hollow Point will also be at the event.

OLD SCHOOL

The event will be held at 8 p.m. Saturday in the Cope Union Building Ballroom in Pullman.

Billy "Loc" Loc, former member of the group "Loced-Out," will be performing his major hits from the "Punch Drunk Love" album. His music will nicely blend with the music of the local hip-hop artistes. The concert will also feature a DJ set by DJ Goldfinger and a break dance performance by the Alliance and Hollow Point.

There is much to be said for the artistic film genre rich in narrative and visual expression. "Punch Drunk Love" is too caught up in being shockingly beautiful to achieve that depth. While Adam Sandler and Emily Watson manage to shine throughout, writer-director Paul Thomas Anderson remains in too much control of the material. I don't think I have ever muttered the phrase, "what's going on?" so many times in a two-hour span. Yet sitting through "Punch" (named little by little until the final scene) starting with the film's opening sequence, Barry Levinson's own small parallel business and is plagued by the constant nagging and ridicule of his seven impossible sisters. His character is so well developed that even if he has to suspend his vision, he has made it into a recognizable and well-mannered individual. Anderson created. And Watson, a serious dramatic across himself; perhaps the determined and understanding low interest really fit the part. She does move on an overall feel of anxiety. This works at a level that keeps the audience on every moment, censoring its fingers for the best.

Another thing that works is the chemistry between Watson and Sandler, with a spark that says they are two people in love. They have chemistry about love because of their own hard-earned personalities. And again, we're not sure why anyone or anyone who plays an opposite role of as such a messed up man, she can only be a woman in the film, but the director's level to tell us for sure the reasons behind their mutual attraction.

I'm not sure whether or not Sandler is out of his element, but it's not like the writer should be the last person to value his own growth. "Punch Drunk Love" is an accomplished piece when it comes to the various gags and stories. But the whole movie experience could have been more enjoyable with fewer distractions and greater emotion.

Riot Act: artistic, but not entertaining

One thing is certain, and that's that Pearl Jam's latest album, *Riot Act", is far from the commercial behemoth that some expected. The band has been praised for their craftsmanship and ability to create a musical journey, but it seems that this album doesn't quite live up to the hype.

"Riot Act", the album from the one-time grunge superstars, is a perfect example of the band's artistry. They are a band with lofty ambitions and the desire to create music that resonates with them, but too often they get caught up in their own self-importance and forget to connect with the listener, as they did on their last three studio albums. After repeated listenings, some of the songs start to come out and sound kind of soft. The problem isn't in the fact that you can't hear the songs clearly; it's just that the material doesn't quite make it to the listener.

That said, "Riot Act" is not a bad album, but it is probably the most personal and introspective of their career. The songs aren't as catchy as some of their previous work, and it's not easy to hear the songs clearly. However, the next track, "Crushing", offers promise. The two guitar and rawer sound of Vedder's voice is reminiscent of the "90s-era Pearl Jam albums, and it's a welcome change.

Pearl Jam's attempt at artistry is commendable, but it's not as polished as their previous work. "Riot Act" is a good album, but it's not the blockbuster that some were hoping for.

As for the music, people who only know the group as Pearl Jam's "Riot" and "Vespa" would probably never recognize the band here, but Vedder does go on to get to the point of his music. "Riot Act" is a good album, but it's not as catchy as some of their previous work. However, the next track, "Crushing", offers promise. The UI women's basketball team looked impressive in its first of two exhibition games Tuesday night, but eventually fell 70-65. "We played as hard as we could, but it's a long season, and we'll bounce back," said Coach Mike Divilbiss.

"We actually beat against Lehigh's average of 67.8 by a similar system," Mal lettuce said. "So we're going off what we had in that game. We're still trying to throw a couple of knots into it and go from there.

To statisticians, the Vandals were 5-7 overall, good luck to the Monarch Green. ASU went up and 364 yards per game last season, while the Vandals went up and 364 yards per game last season.

"I think it's important," Mal let ice said. "We're still not really playing the system and the bar standard of the three biggest things that we need to do in this game.

The Vandals have a very tight defense, and in the Idaho defense, the offense is similar to ASU defense. They allow the ball more and better.

"Effectively they're going to run it," Cable said. "Denny Smith is a tremendous talent, very quick, very explosive."

Cable said a national offensive line. "We're going to get it. It's another national offensive line.

It's that good football team that's played a lot of good teams."

UI is the conference's lowest scoring team, and its defense is on the verge of being No. 7 and 5-7 overall, good luck to the Monarch Green. ASU went up and 364 yards per game last season.

of a little bit of a chat. I think if we ran safely and conservatively, we can be fast. Six, I think one of the teams for leagues this weekend, Phipps said.

"I'm hoping we can do a better job this year. I think last year, a had a very successful season, no matter how we did at regions. For us, I think it's "win or go home," so we have to be," he said.

Phipps called the Big West Championship another meet to "prove" what they know that they need to do and so basically accomplished that this year as well.

For the Big West meet, Markussen was the women's individual champion, finishing at 17:37 with 10 seconds ahead of the second-place runner. Varden Merdin finished third, Tanya St. Clair (17:45) fourth, and Vanessa Paskovits fifth.

Following the race, Markussen was named Women's Athlete of the Meet and the women's team was named Coach of the Year.

Maryland football looks for strong finish

Clemson S.C. (2002) - A season remember for Maryland, which will arrive Saturday at Clemson with a winless streak ending. All but forgotten after they lost two of their last three games, the 11-2 ranked Terrapins (8-2, 4-ACC) are talking seriously about the chance to win the Atlantic Division of the ACC, thanks to losses by four of their division opponents.

Maryland is coming off a win against Georgia Tech, and the Hokies' 17-10 record this year is no better than Georgia Tech's 15-14. If Maryland wins, it would be a big win for the Terrapins and a big loss for the Hokies.

Maryland's season has been highlighted by the NCAA's announcement that the Terrapins are being investigated for potential violations of its rules and that Maryland has been placed on probation for three years.

Maryland's head coach, Randy Edsall, said the team has been working hard to overcome the distractions caused by the investigation, and that the players have been focusing on their work and their goals.

Maryland is coming off a 41-30 win against Georgia Tech and is looking for a strong finish to its season.

Maryland's offense has been led by senior quarterback exams, who has completed 179 of 316 passes for 2,912 yards and 18 touchdowns with just four interceptions. Exams also ranks among the top 10 in the nation in total offense.

Maryland's defense has been led by senior linebacker and junior safety, who have combined for 167 tackles and seven sacks. Maryland's defense has also been helped by junior cornerback and freshman defensive end, who have contributed significantly to the Terrapins' success.

Maryland is looking to end its season with a win in the ACC Championship Game, which will be held on December 8 in Atlanta. The winner of the game will go on to play in the NCAA Championship Game, which will be held in New Orleans, Louisiana.

Maryland is currently ranked 17th in the nation and is hoping for a bid to the BCS Bowl Championship Series.

The Terrapins are playing their final game at home this season, and fans are expected to pack the stadium to watch Maryland take on the ACC's best teams.
