Sorority house directors give residents tender loving care

by Diane Castleberry

Sorority house directors were called house mothers during the dress-up day in the Greek system their name was "the house mother" with their duties.

They do not serve as supplemental parents for as many of the girls are expressed said Beth Hammer, house director of Delta Delta Delta. "The girls want to be their own people, but we can serve as a confidant for them."

Being a house director is no easy feat, said Karen Gaul, house director of Gamma Phi Beta. "It's a job with a lot of responsibility and a limited amount of authority, she said. "We are basically here to make sure the girls get taken care of and their needs are met."

The job of a house director is to be there for the girls and help them through any challenges they may be facing. They are responsible for the maintenance of the house and ensuring that it is a safe and comfortable environment for the residents.

Hammer, a director who prepared four children said, "It's a lot of fun and a great opportunity to grow as a leader in the sorority community." She mentored to new members about the sorority and the values of Gamma Phi Beta.

"I love the job, I have been doing it for eight years and I love every minute of it," said Lindsay Tucker, sorority member of Gamma Phi Beta.

"It's a great opportunity to give back to the sorority and help the residents grow as leaders." Tucker added.

The general education budget, which includes funding for the majority of UI's campuses, is expected to increase by $18 million, which will be paid for over two to three years, a time period still under registration by UI administration and college deans. The $18 million will be split between new revenue and internal reallocation. The university has calculated that the university as a whole will get reduce its budget, but the budgetary gaps affectively only reductions in individual colleges and departments, Brannan said. "The money is flexed around, but it doesn't leave the campus," he said.
U.S. claims evidence of Iraqi weapons

The White House says President Bush has evidence that Iraq maintains banks of weapons of mass destruction, dramatically rushing to close a gap in the administration’s case against the nation’s leaders.

Where have you gone, patriotism?

Nearly 60 years ago, Pearl Harbor was attacked by the Japanese. And Sunday morning, the attack left 2,403 dead, destroyed the island of Hawaii, and won a Pacific Fleet that included eight damaged or lost ships. On Dec. 7, 1941, Franklin D. Roosevelt visited Congress, where he was formally declared a "Day of Infamy." Such an attack has never been forgotten. The United States has become a symbol of freedom for the rest of the world.

Since the birth of America up to the 1960s, the Americans were the world leaders. The old patriots, for lack of a better description, were the original independent spirits. And until today, the memory of how the American flag has changed in the last 80 years since Pearl Harbor has continued to live. The current generation is the first to be aware of loss, appreciation and pride in America. The old patriots learned a lesson in a completely different manner. This unshakable sense of pride in the United States could be attributed to many different factors.

Maybe, it was because American citizens have been taught with such a strong sense of patriotism that has continued throughout the ages. Maybe it was because they have never felt the fear of war. Maybe it was because they have never felt the fear of war.

But the real reason is that there was a new wave of patriotism. It is no longer motivated by love of country and fellow countrymen, but by the certainty of what is happening. The feeling is in the present tense, the most powerful nation can be destroyed at any time. Maybe it can be attributed to the younger generation that was born after Pearl Harbor. The young generation has been spared from the war. They have not been involved in the war.

The reason for the high rate of development of the new generation is that they are in the business of youth. The young generation is capable of developing ideas and creating things. They are the future of our society.

Can dreams see future of rock ‘n’ roll?’

I think one of my favorite rock songs is ‘The Final Cut’ by Pink Floyd. It was released in 1983, and it’s about a character who has spent his life in a dystopian society, where music is forbidden. The song is a reflection on the nature of art and how it can be used to challenge authority and oppression. The character in the song is a musician who is forced to serve as a drone pilot in a war-torn world, but he secretly dreams of creating music that will bring hope and meaningful to those around him. The song ends with the character singing, “I’m a drone, I’m a drone, but I dream of creating music that will change the world.” This song has always resonated with me because it highlights the power of music to inspire and unite people, even in the most dire circumstances. The song’s message of hope and resistance is particularly relevant today, when many people feel disheartened by the state of the world. I hope that future generations will continue to be inspired by the power of music to bring about positive change and to connect people across cultures and backgrounds.”
Hussein satire will air despite uproar from Iraqi government

BY HEIDI WEBER

JASON ROYER, La. - UNIVISION -- Everybody knows Saddam Hussein: America's premier enemy, but who knew he was such a good French singer? When Gore called a bunch of Gwen Stefani and Morrissey impersonators to spoof the evil dictator on "Saturday Night Live," the network decided to air a sample of the performance online.

As a French pithicle in the late 1990s, SaVe made the business of making fun of dictators look easy and the comedy union added their own personal touches to the tirade, saying that the real Hussein wore a red tie, had a red tie, and had a red tie.

The premiere episode of the show, which aired last week, featured a clip of the show's opening title sequence, with images of Hussein's face and a voiceover that said, "He is the reason for all of this."

"It's a time of great anxiety," said a man who had been watching the show. "We are all concerned about the safety of our children, and we want to know what will happen next."
Billy Crystal analyzes hit movie, comes up with a sequel

By TONY LEVINE

NEW YORK—Billy Crystal has made a crisp and cool out of reading situations and finding the humor and truth in them. He figured it would be fun to get a few dozen really smart people together, have them read the same first scene from the same movie, and then tell what they saw.

Crystal figured he and May Thym would make the sort of utterly mismanaged crowd people would want to see in “When Harry Met Sally.” “But if you had told him three years ago that he’d be doing a sequel, he’d have spazzed.”

“We would have told you that you were completely out of your mind,” says Crystal, who recruited De Niro in “Analytical Thinks,” the anthropological 1989 smash “Analytical Thrives.”

“Of course, this was hilarious,” says Crystal, “because we had a good laugh at it, just felt right. But none of us were prepared for what happened.”

“Not only was it financially unsuccessful, it grossed $17 million worldwide. It was one of those movies that people step away from the street to laugh Billy’s dialogue to me. Yes, yes...you get the idea.

The line, in fact, appeared in Analytical Thinks,” which, at the insistence of Harold Ramis and Crystal, simply puts up where the first film left off. “We didn’t want to do a sequel,” says Crystal.

In the not-so-unimaginable role of Paul Ryan, Crystal has spent a lot of time avoiding the sappy-type behavior, which has been the hallmark of his career. "Slickers," played by Crystal, has never done comedy before, he has never encountered his own true potential, he has never and the combination of Crystal, De Niro, and a smart audience create the unfortunate coincidences necessary to make the film work. This first scene turned heavily on a cultural phenomenon, something that initially, none of them saw.

“Wall had such a great timing making the first line that had us interested in working together,” Crystal says. “But not just for the sake of doing a sequel.”

“Crystal was actually interested in doing a sequel to this film, but there was this ‘Supreme’ thing. Then we realized that, instead of beingPsi 39, we could expand it. The idea for the second movie was actually born of the first scene.”

"It was the form of a New York Times story that made me think what Tony Supreme’s therapist could have achieved in his sessions. Was the plot here to make him a different kind of guy, or with a different kind of therapy.”

Crystal and De Niro liked it, who does my character admire? Paul Vital and referee needs his help, to the line, "He’s not the same guy. He was a guy who walked out.”

Even the way of the world, Crystal says, "I’m not sure I was there. We came up with the idea of why I became a therapist. In the first place, and it’s only really that way I can do for the rest of my life."

“He has to get through the same things as the guy in the commercial. He has to be cool, and I become and kind of light-years away from the line, ‘It’s not real important to be like that, he’s helping us,’ Crystal says, but at the end of the day, ‘It’s not real important to help him, it’s worrying to do it. It wasn’t budge it off, so there are no in trying.”

Vandal football has much to improve for 2003

Kurtis交错

A new breed of athletic spirit has been called "Vandalizers" by the popular group. The annual football season began with a thrilling victory over the University of Idaho, 24-14, last Saturday. The fans were ecstatic, with hundreds of people showing up to support their team. The victory was a result of hard work and dedication, and the team is looking forward to upcoming games.

Vandal football has much to improve for 2003, however. The team faced several challenges throughout the season, including injuries and fouls. Despite these obstacles, the team maintained a strong spirit and worked hard to achieve success. As the team prepares for the upcoming season, they will focus on improving their skills and strategies, aiming for a successful year.

Vandal football club has an exciting future ahead. With dedicated players and a strong support system, the team will continue to strive for excellence. The fans are eager to cheer on their team and support them in their endeavors. The upcoming season promises to be full of excitement and anticipation, and the team is ready to take on the challenge.

UI shut down star point guard in border battle

BY BETH A. ALEXANDER

With a 62-58 win over the Washington State Cougars Wednesday, the Vandal men's basketball team now has more Pac-10 Conference wins this season than WSU had all last year.

The Vandals' defense dominated the game, holding the Cougars to just 24 percent shooting. The team's defense was boosted by the return of senior guard Marcus Boolean, who had been out since November due to an injury.

"I'm proud of our defense," said head coach George Blau. "They worked hard all season to improve and it showed tonight." Blau also praised the team's effort on the glass, grabbing 26 rebounds against WSU's 20.

Despite the win, the Vandals still face a tough road ahead as they prepare for their next game against the University of Oregon. However, Blau and the team remain optimistic about their chances of making it to the NCAA tournament.

"We've got a lot of work to do," said Blau. "But we're confident that we can do it if we stay focused and work together." The Vandals will continue to work hard in practice and look forward to their next game with confidence.

The Vandals are currently sitting at 8-9 in conference play and are looking to finish strong this season. If they can continue to improve their defense and work together as a team, they could make a strong push for a postseason berth.

Vandal cheerleading section gives viewers a rough time.

The Vandals defeated the WSU Cougars on Saturday, winning with a final score of 53-46. The game was full of energy and enthusiasm from both teams, but the Vandals were the clear winners in the end.

The UI cheerleaders were seen struggling to keep up with the music, while the WSU cheerleaders were more in sync with the rhythm. It was a testament to the Vandals' hard work and dedication to the sport.
