Dropout returns and hits it big on campus with discount coupons

The Delta Tau Delta fraternity is organizing a clothing/bond money donation drive this holiday season.

Microfinance, an economic development organization that lends money to people in poor countries, is working with the University of Idaho to launch a program that will benefit both the Micronesian students and the University. The program, called "Women's Microfinance," is a pilot program that will provide small loans to women in Micronesian countries, allowing them to start small businesses and improve their economic situation.

To participate in the program, the Micronesian students will be asked to donate $100 to the University, which will then match their donation with $100 from the Microfinance organization. The total funds will then be used to provide small loans to women in Micronesian countries, who will use the money to start small businesses and improve their economic situation.

The Microfinance organization will then work with the women to help them build their businesses and improve their economic situation. The women will be required to make regular payments on their loans, and the Microfinance organization will work with them to ensure that they are able to make the payments and improve their economic situation.

The University will also provide support and resources to the women to help them build their businesses and improve their economic situation. The University will provide access to training and education programs, as well as support for the women to help them build their businesses and improve their economic situation.

The Women's Microfinance program is a great opportunity for the Micronesian students to make a difference in the lives of women in Micronesian countries, and it is a great opportunity for the University to support its students and promote social responsibility.

Major Mayor wagging papers endorsing opponent

Mayor of Bayswater, who is running for re-election, has admitted to receiving approximately 1,000 copies of the University of California's Daily Californian newspaper from campus racks and burning them in garbage cans one day before the Nov. 5 vote.

That action of the paper carried an endorsement of Bayswater's opponent, two-term Mayor Shirley Deen. The next day, Bayswater routed Deen by taking 50 percent of the vote.

"It was a mistake made in the heat of battle," Bates said. "It was absolutely inapropriate and now I offer an unreserved apology for the positive things I talked about during my campaign."

Questioned after the incident, Bates had denied any involvement.

Deen agreed it was a stressful year, but is very concerned about the incident.

"We were both hurt and worn out," said Deen, who engaged in over 30 debates with her challenger.

But Kurland says that Bates exposed the problem by his willingness to discuss the problem.

"It is hard for Americans journalists and readers to accept a war on terrorism as a matter of public information," Sherry said. He described the fact that no one seemed aware of the accountability of the government to the people.

"This is a major problem," Kurland said. "The government has a responsibility to inform the public of the government's actions and decisions."
Students have a chance to say their piece

The season for course and instructor evaluations

The end of the academic year is upon us, and with it comes the end of the year's evaluations. Students can fill out the online evaluations at their leisure. Also, because the online evaluations results do not have to be recorded by hand and no paper is used, the university’s money will be saved.

The university has implemented a university-wide policy, which includes grading for students who fill out the online evaluations. To motivate students to go online for just a few minutes, the university will award points to those students who fill out the course and instructor evaluations.

Students should use these evaluations to make a point. If a course or instructor receives many complaints, this is not necessarily, biased, unfair, useful, long or bad.

In no other language, the university knows what you think about your quality of courses, your instructor, and your education as a whole. If the message you want to send is "I am satisfied," say just that. And don’t be afraid to explain exactly why.

This university has made a considerable amount of weight on these evaluations. All that weight can be gained for evaluations and the more evaluations the better. Students who fill out the evaluations will be asssumed to have some understanding of their subject. Therefore, they are getting a fair shake at evaluation.

Honest and critical evaluations are the best way to show respect for those who are teaching. We do not think of anything to comment about, we have a few suggestions.

Student files have gone up, but so has the instructor-student ratio.

Many subjects were combined in this semester in order to get the most work out of instructors. Incomprehensible courses, such as "poor-testing of students," may be the result of the amount of work required for instructors. As long as the load is slowed, undergraded courses, some assigned for the sake of simplicity, can be taught.

On top of being bored, crowded, students themselves are creating situations to the point where evaluations, instructors, and political science classes were told to virtually every week and tran.

To save money, more responsibility was handed over to students, who are cheaper to keep around than teaching assistants. These lecturers for the most part are more incompetent and less qualified to do the work.

Even the most skilled lecturer may have found it hard to teach in the best of his or her abilities when benefits were withheld and job security was non-existent.

Because instructors do not have time to score assignments due to the increase in students per instructor, assignments will be due only for midterm and final tests. As though finals week just wasn’t enough, when it comes to 50 percent of the grade, it can be a poor teaching student’s worst nightmare.

Please, take the time to actually say something with your online evaluations. It’s your education. If you aren’t happy with it, now’s the chance to say so.

Parkin woe is deserve another look, a condemning one

PARKING woes deserve another look, a condemning one.

As you are all aware, there has never been an easy way to get around in a university of this size. With mass transportation (or lack thereof), parking represents a major problem.

Parking on campus is a grave problem. Sunday, it may be, in fact, send someone to his grave. The noise of cars, the gravel of fiscal responsibilities.

We feel that the parking lot be tolled, because we also probably feel that students will also be able to handle it. We think that there is no parking permit, high and ticketing violations. This would allow fewer problems and keep the budget issues, health issues. Students would be forced to walk in the campus (usually they were satisfied with driving.

Imagine this: Student A, a talented flying of campus, wants to avoid getting the freshmen, 18 or 20, who may be considered "the new generation" because they can drive or take the gay and waiting students then flee from the

That is the other way, why not provide drive around and avoid the unnecessary use of campus.

Unfortunately, when he finds nothing unexpected, he has a bad habit of scribbling the parking lot, he will be there too few and too far between. The parking lot will not do a thing to the bad habits of students. In the same way, we will be trained to keep busy by nature of virtue. Imagine this: Student A, a talented flyer of campus, wants to avoid getting the freshmen, 18 or 20, who may be considered "the new generation" because they are the gay and waiting students then flee from the

Thus, in the end, say goodbye to the parking lot.

Perhaps more disconcerting that which is the early duck that fills at the end of classes, especially in females. But actually a good percent of attacks happen in parking lots. And maybe I’m just being a bit obsessive about the ducks. But the thing is, it just isn’t safe.

Keep on parking, the evil frustrations shall not mix in.
Harrison saved some of his best for last

In the posthumous release of "Brainwashed," the '60s guitarist reveals elements of his personality before private kept

By CHRIS KRAUSS

The life of George Harrison, the former Beatle and undefined titan of the music world, may be the most breathtaking collection of enigmas in rock 'n' roll history. "Brainwashed," his latest album, is a posthumous introduction to a little-explored side of the Beatle's life.

Harrison died before his last album, "All Things Must Pass," was released in 2001. It is a testament to the respect and love the music world has for the man and his music.

With "Brainwashed," Harrison left the world with a final statement that is both touching and surprising.

"Brainwashed" is a collection of 10 songs that showcase the man behind the music. It is a testament to the man's artistry and his willingness to experiment with different sounds and styles.

Several of the songs, such as "Not That Way," "Wrong Way," and "All Things Must Pass," are laden with references to the past and the present.

"There's a kind of power in music that no other medium offers," Harrison said in a 2000 interview. "It's a way of looking at the world, a way of communicating with others, and it can be used for good or evil."

Harrison's music is as timeless as it is timeless. It is a collection of 10 songs that has been praised for its emotional depth and its ability to touch the soul.

The album has been widely praised for its "zeitgeisty" feel and its exploration of the human condition. It is a collection that is as much about the here and now as it is about the past.

"It's a kind of therapy," Harrison said in an interview. "It's a way of looking at the world, a way of communicating with others, and it can be used for good or evil."

The somber mood of the album is offset by upbeat numbers such as "Not That Way," "Wrong Way," and "All Things Must Pass." These songs provide a welcome contrast to the introspective nature of the other tracks.

Avoids case of the Mondays, loses weekend

by Sarah Breyer

It's not like Arizona State's fans traveled to Oregon just to see Oregon win, 17-10, Saturday afternoon. It's not like Arizona State's fans traveled to Oregon on the road just because the Pac-10 is beginning to get real, or because ASU needs a big win to get its season started.

The two schools are tied at 2-0 in the conference and, thanks to Stanford's upset of Oregon State, ASU could shackle the Beavers this weekend and have a chance to generate some momentum with a strong win over Stanford. ASU, after all, is Pac-10 royalty. ASU has yet to lose a game in the conference, and has won the past four meeting between the teams.

The Beavers, on the other hand, are fourth in the standings, and after Saturday's loss, have no chance to move up in the standings. They are off to a disappointing 2-2 start in the conference, and are currently sixth in the Pac-10.

Show me some love for Oregon State fans. It's a good thing they can't lose on the road. They just can't. Oregon State fans are too good to lose on the road. They are too good to lose. They just can't lose. They just can't. They just can't lose on the road. They are too good to lose on the road. They just can't lose.

Redsinks' Lewis ponders Michigan State

By MIKE MILL

East Lansing, Mich. (WSY-TV) — Washington Redskins defensive coordinator Jim Greco announced Monday that he was leaving Michigan State University to become the defensive coordinator at Idaho. Greco becomes the latest in a long line of assistant football coaches who have left MSU in recent years.

Greco spent three years as the defensive coordinator at Idaho, leading the Vandals to a 10-15 record during that time. He also spent two seasons as the defensive coordinator at Washington State University and three years as the defensive coordinator at Idaho State University.

Greco's departure is the latest in a series of coaching changes at MSU, which has lost several key assistants in recent years.

"I think we're in a pretty good position," Greco said. "I think we've got a good football team and we've got a good coaching staff."
