Local Wiccans, pagans practice what they preach

by LAUREN CURT

Editor’s note: In the interest of protecting their anonymity, the Argonaut aggregates in this feature only first names of some of the people quoted in this story.

Wiccans are the growing number of people who believe in magical and spiritual practices that are not found in the well-known religions of the world. They are often very private about their beliefs and even their names, fearfully anticipating that others might not be so accepting.

Kendall is also in the name game for today’s wage in that area. The Mystical Coyote Cooperative, she was given that name by other members of the group who believe that they are not being perceived or publicly observed. She must have realized them of the some noisy practice.

The Mystical Coyote Cooperative, known as MOC, is a group of Wiccans and pagans who believe in the power to practice their beliefs, as well as a group of people. MOC was opened in an open converted church. At the 1970s, she started to get into the Wicca family, where she met her husband, and from there she discovered spirituality and the divine. She then gave up Buddhism and Hinduism, which, in turn, led her to Wicca.

Argonaut, said to be an early Wiccan, agreed to attend their first, in a form of a presentation that was a something of a revival in the second half of thate century according to Encarta.com. It has nothing to do with nature, likes the woods, the left, the nature of a thing.

The word Pagans, which is a word that belongs to the ancient traditions of the Wicca, which means “people of the land” according to the Latin word.

There are other words often used to describe Wiccans or Wiccans, which many people think is a misinterpretation of the ancient word. In that fact, she said, the word Pagans, which is a word that belongs to the ancient traditions of the Wicca, which means “people of the land” according to the Latin word.

Other Wiccans agree with the Wiccans who are part of the divine.

Native American students work for community center

by Eilleen Parker spinrad

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of articles examining Native American student issues and the relation between the University of Idaho and local tribes. In the Boise State College/xpress exama ining the spring seasons of 2004, Native American stu- dent issues were discussed with the University of Idaho and National American University. This article focuses on the University of Idaho and the efforts of Native American students to enhance their educational opportunities.

For Native American students at the University of Idaho, the situation is a little different. The University of Idaho is home to a large number of Native American students, but the problem is not as severe as in other institutions. The University of Idaho has a large Native American student population, and the university is working to improve the educational opportunities for these students.

The UWSU NROTC brought home two awards from the Northwest Navy Competition in Corvallis, Oregon, during President's Day weekend.

The Miller rifle team placed first in a first match in accuracy. The rifle team placed first in all matches during drill team.

"It teaches us to be confident — and it teaches them self-discipline, because they have to be in parade formation, and if they do they have to march, but they also have to move their rifle at different positions at the right time," Johnson said.

NROTC participates every year, but it is the first time the men have achieved a first place ranking for their marching and rifle work since 1995. Since then, they have received a first place for their uniforms. The team was awarded a trophy for each accomplishment.

"We really pulled together and did a good job," Johnson said.

Practice for the team began in the second week of September and finished last Wednesday. Before the Competition, they practiced for several weeks. To compete in the national Navy Competition, they are unable to attend events to be held at Texas A&M University due to lack of funds.

"We are trying to make it to a next year," Johnson said.

The team is part of the NROTC program, which is combined with UI, participated in the event.

"Only about 12 were left because they needed to attend weddings and funerals and important things like that," Johnson said.

The competition is where Northwest ROTC programs come to showcase all of the work done during a year in the program. Students compete in areas such as physical training, drill, drilling, and academics.

According to an SBOE press release, "Officials at the University authorized three bureaus to the Foundation, the State Board of Education was not satisfied nor did they approve the plan. The University was supposed to fund the project to be paid back with money raised from banks. The Idaho State Board of Education was granted enough funds to fund the Water Center at University Place, but not enough to establish the Foundation's million investment, of which $10 million is from UI, according to Harvey's "Extra-Financial Letter" on UI's Web site.

However, with ISU's state legislature, without fund, the legislature asked the University to get the 50 million back from the foundation as quickly as possible. The UI Foundation has 1397 million dollars in assets, and generally donates between 5 and 8 percent of the year's operating budget.

Students demand answers after racial incidents at Texas universities

By MARTIN DELGADO

PRINCETON, N.J. — Eight highly selective institutions faced an unusual moral crusade on Monday, as their students, board members, faculty and alumni demanded the immediate resignation of university presidents who they said had failed to protect students from and prevent violence against people of color. The students have organized a series of demonstrations and sit-ins at several universities across the country, including those in New Jersey, New York, California and Texas.

The students say that the presidents of these institutions have failed to address the systemic racism and police brutality that have plagued their communities. They have called for the immediate resignation of all presidents, including those at Princeton, Yale, Harvard, Stanford, Columbia, MIT, Duke and Berkeley.

The students have also called for the creation of a national database of incidents of violence against people of color at universities across the country, as well as the establishment of a national commission to investigate and address the root causes of these incidents.

The students have also called for the immediate release of all students who have been detained or arrested by police during recent protests.

War propaganda is wrong

Dear editor,

I was interested to see a small convert in The Spokesman Review on March 5 calling for a "campaign against war propaganda." I agree that war propaganda is wrong, but I think that the convert was designed to make the same point.

There were war-propaganda posters all over the place and up that morning, but I can't think of any war propaganda that I remember.

Sincerely,

Our View

NO BLOOD FOR NO OIL

Maj. Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf Jr., the U.S. Army's commander in chief in the Persian Gulf, said recently that "the Persian Gulf War is over." Let's hope he is right.

But we have to face the fact that the war has not ended. The cease-fire has been proclaimed, but the fighting has not stopped. The United Nations has declared a"no-fly" zone over Iraq, but the Iraqi government has ignored it.

The United Nations has called for a"humanitarian" cease-fire, but the Iraqi government has ignored it.

The Clash in Rock & Roll Hall Of Fame

New York (AP) — To celebrate the Clash in the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame next month, music files will be released on March 17th.

Airing just over twenty years from its original release, "The Clash," a 1977 six-track compilation, was released by London Records.

The completion was announced by the band, including Joe Strummer, guitar, who had been working on the project with producer Steve Lillywhite, lead singer of the band, and Dave Marks, a.k.a. "General Falcon," and the U.S. recording artists of the band, the Clash. The release is the latest in a series of albums produced by the group's manager's marketing arm "The Prodigy Music." The record was originally scheduled for February 9th and published on the Los Angeles Jazz Festival web site. It was scheduled for release in the UK and it has been rescheduled for March.

Farmers market seeks manager

Music Museum Announces

Music Museum Announcements are seeking musicians to perform at the 2003 farmers market. Paulsboro's Farmers market is held on Saturdays from May 3rd to November 1st. Music is required for the number of community services.

Intermission notices were offered a few weeks ago for interested artists to perform at Music Museum's Performing Arts Center, 1000 Cottage St., Paulsboro, NJ 08066. Intermission notices are available at a music museum or the Performing Arts Center.

Web/Smithsonian

Announcement

Museum of American History announce a new event for 2003, the "Music in America" web site. "Music in America" is a web site that focuses on the history of music in the United States. The site will be used to provide information on the history of American music, including the history of African-American music, the history of Western music, and the history of American popular music.

The site will be available at the web site of the Museum of American History, and it will be accessible via a web browser. The site will be updated regularly with new content.

The Anne W. Casey Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts have provided funding for the project.

Indian Washington Concert Chorale

The Indian Washington Concert Chorale will perform the 2003 concert of the Indian Washington Concert Chorale on February 20th, 2003 at the Silverthorne Theatre at the University of Idaho. The concert will feature the music of the Indian Washington Concert Chorale and the University of Idaho's choral groups, including the University of Idaho Concert Choir, the University of Idaho Vocal Ensemble, and the University of Idaho Chamber Singers. The concert will feature music from a variety of genres, including classical, contemporary, and traditional. The concert will be conducted by Dr. Jennifer L. Powers, Director of the University of Idaho Choral Programs. The concert will feature guest artists, including the University of Idaho Symphony Orchestra and the University of Idaho Jazz Ensemble.

Rising area band finally spills into Moscow stage

The Seattle-based band Slice will perform in Moscow on Sunday, April 27th at the Moscow Art Theatre. The band's music is a blend of rock, punk, and folk with a strong emphasis on social commentary. The band's lead singer, Jesse Joffe, is a former member of the band Big Red.

The band's music has been well-received by critics and fans alike. Their most recent album, "The Last Waltz," was released in 2002 and has received critical acclaim for its emotional and powerful lyrics.

The band's performance in Moscow is part of a larger tour that will take them to cities across the United States. The tour is being promoted by the band's record label, Distraction Records, and will feature a variety of venues.

When does gender cross the line?

By NATHAN JUVE

You live by the 3 and you die by the 2. University of Idaho's basketball coach Mike Divilbiss won't play the 2. According to the coach, if a player tries to make a 2, he is going to get killed. As he put it, "If you're going to make a 2, you're going to get killed."

For most of us, a woman trying to make a 2 in basketball is as tame as a child's make-up or an ice cream cone. But for the 1997 NCAA women's basketball title game, a woman trying to make a 2 was the only way to get the job done.

Brian Kentoka wanted to play the women's basketball tournament last season. He wanted to be the first woman to play college basketball at Idaho. He wanted to be the first woman to make a 2 in college basketball. He wanted to be the first woman to make a 2 in any college basketball game.

He was going to make a 2.

Eventually.

But not this year.

For most of the time this is a novelty story, and after making the attempt, the girls barely made a significant impact on the box score. It's still the highest-scoring woman in college basketball.

For most of a girl's senior year, she was on the second team of a team that was barely above the line. She was on a team that was on the second team of a conference that was below the line. She was on a team that was on the second team of a conference that was below the line.

But who isn't a two-way player?

Recently, there has been a greater number of women throwing their bodies into the ring to make 2s. It caused a few wardrobe malfunctions, but none of the players had to leave the court. It was a two-way play.

"I'm not this two-way player," Kentoka said. "I've had the greatest number of women throwing their bodies into the ring to make 2s. A couple of them did not come back. I would not have been able to go back."

EDITOR'S NOTE — As the ball rolled out of Daniel Frazier's hand and into the hands of the Maryland Terrapins, a member of the 1974 team turned one last chance to send the game into overtime. Rolling away, the Terps quickly moved it to half court. Standing at the line, J.J. Redkett needed the game with a defense that had had it's moments. Would it be the night they were giving away so that they could collect the No. 1 seed? Would they get to have a lot of 3-pointers? Duke head coach Mike Krzyzewski said: "We're trying to get set up to make sure that we get a shot in there. We'd like to have the ball on the better side of 10 seconds in regulation time before the 36-second clock expires."

The Terrapins were back to the average of No. 13 Maryland (15-8), after a 38-point loss to the Terps on January 30th. Last night, the Blue Devils were much stronger on the boards that they were the last time these teams met. Maryland, which had been leading by double digits for most of the game, eventually won by 23-18 in the second half. The Terrapins were back to the No. 13 position they held in last year's game, where they fell to the Terps, 94-83.

At 13:44 a.m., the ball was knocked out of the hands of the Terrapins by a foul. The Terrapins turned the ball over, and the Blue Devils were unable to score. A 3-pointer by the Terrapins followed, and the Blue Devils still led, 58-40, with 7.7 seconds left on the clock.

In 1999, she began to get into a more serious attidude on equity and fight the stereotype that women do not do anything. It can be done. I do want to make it clear that men are physically superior to women, at least in so many areas.

So all I ask is: mind your own business, and let the men play the games. Women are not needed in these sports. The only people who need to be concerned about are the athletes themselves. They need to take care of themselves, not the public.

Argonaut Special Coverage of the 2003 Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival
Music plays an important role in the lives of many people, providing a sense of pride and inspiration. Whether it's through individual passions or group performances, music has the power to bring people together and create a sense of community. It's a fundamental aspect of human expression and connects us to our cultural heritage and personal identity.
Garfield High returns to reclaim award

by Brian Friedman

Clarence Acox has been the band director at Garfield High School for 30 years. Since 1990, Acox has brought his band to the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival three times. After this year’s festival, Acox said, “This was a year that will be remembered.”

“I hope to do well,” Acox said.

The high school band comes together to teach and play jazz. The band is the main event of the Garfield High School band. The Garfield High School band has been at the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival for 10 years. The band is directed by Clarence Acox, a band teacher at his high school.

Lead trumpet player has played many parts

By Marsha Winick

Ryan Colori's lips are tired. Three hours of trumpet rehearsal have exhausted this newsletter's student reporter.

"At this year's Jazz Festival," Colori said, "I performed with the trumpets at UI and our annual show in the Student Union."

Colori is the only trumpet player at UI. His trumpet is a "Bach.""I think it's the best," he said.

Colori's performances have been so popular that he has been asked to participate in many other shows. "I've played withUI's jazz band, the UI pep band, and the UI football band," he said.

Colori's love for the trumpet began when he was a child. "I started playing when I was five," he said. "I've been playing ever since." Colori is now a senior at UI and is majoring in music.

"I really enjoy playing the trumpet," he said. "I love the challenge of playing with different instruments and in different settings." Colori plans to continue playing the trumpet after he graduates.

"I think the trumpet is a great instrument," Colori said. "It's versatile and can be used in many settings." Colori is looking forward to continuing his musical career after he graduates.
