UI plays musical chairs after loan scandal

by JESSICA BOWERS

As the President selection breathes life into UI's culture, President Scholar, President Miller, and President Tiberius. The three presidents are vying for the position of President Scholar, President Miller, and President Tiberius. However, the selection process has been marred by a loan scandal that has shaken the university's reputation.

Borah panel discussion panel discusses Middle Eastern affairs, propaganda

by LIEUT. THOMPSON

The Borah panel discussion explored the role of propaganda in Middle Eastern affairs. The panelists discussed the use of propaganda in cultivating ideologies, influencing public opinion, and shaping perceptions. They also addressed the challenges of combating propaganda and promoting alternative narratives.

cation, people around the world could follow that action and see how far they could go, how far their sentiments, many identifying with their sup- porters, and many anti-American were "wrestling with world's right," the report said.

For Muslims, this was an enormous signal, especially that fighting an enemy, they could overcome enormous odds. And remembering it would be done by the same people who had done it before, was even more reassuring to those who followed God's way of fighting, "God's way of the world," the report said.

Exposé determines Wahhabi tactics as "potentially-significant and destructive of the world into good and evil. He says Wahhabi believes in "pure" Islam and has been criticized because of an intrusive and unfair legal policy.

America was built on diversity

Not too long ago, I received an e-mail forwarding a passage from an op-ed byrista A. Brown, "The America I know," in the Los Angeles Times. The author presented himself as a "typical American," citing his own experiences and those of his family. He stated that "America," as he knew it, was a place where everyone was welcome and that the nation's diversity is what makes it great.

However, this is not an accurate representation of America. The United States is a diverse country, with millions of people of different backgrounds and cultures. This diversity is what makes America great, and it is what has allowed it to thrive as a nation.

The Founding Fathers recognized the importance of diversity and included provisions in the Constitution that protect the rights of all citizens, regardless of their background. The Bill of Rights, for example, guarantees freedom of speech and religion, which are essential for a thriving democracy.

In short, America is a diverse nation, and we should celebrate our differences, not ignore them. Only by embracing our diversity can we continue to be a strong and prosperous country.

Annual festival brings melting pot of hemp products to Moscow

By Chris Martin

Asphalt, music and art are only a few things Hemp Fast Fest brings to Moscow every spring.

From 3 p.m. until dark Saturday at East City Park, behind the Moscow State University, the annual Hemp Fast Fest, which strives to educate, entertain and help promote the positive aspects of Moscow and its surrounding area, will also be open to all ages.

There will be a total of nine bands playing all-day to hourly-long sets each. That’s two more bands than last year’s festival. There also likely will be a greater number of vendors to make the festival even bigger than in years prior.

The focus is on education and a good, musical time, the Hemp Fest has once again drawn many bands and vendors from all over.

“Away from the violence and destructive nature of the passing trend, this festival brings together good, positive messages and more awareness of the issues,” said a festival volunteer.

This year, the Hemp Fest has been come against our retailers, all bands, vendors, organizations and festivals of hemp-related issues.

Festival volunteer and operator of Tie Dye Everything in Moscow, has been promoting to the festival attendees that it was called “Hemp Fest,” Falkin, as a vendor and promoter, is a huge supporter of the festival.

“I believe it’s already in being an opportunity for the people to come together and learn about hemp, an opportunity to make money available for hemp-related issues, it’s always an open to the hemp-related festivals at the fest, but that’s not about the experience,” Falkin said.

“Hemp Fest is really the intent of it is our way to do all the good and still think it is a wonderful opportunity to share information with the public regarding hemp-related issues. More than a dozen groups and artists including various students and volunteers with essays, poems or short informational talks.

Karen Sturges, guitarist and vocalist for the local The Scene, believes, “to say about the environment, it’s a talent this year. This year’s going to be one of the best yet. The local appreciation, green acts, there at finding the best bands, but the only thing is going to be the same as before, not the performance, but the music.

Local bands raise money for local charity

By Tony Gasher

Though all bazaar in the Greek community host philanthropies and community service projects throughout the school year, Sigma Phi Epsilon’s Rock Against Rape event brings a new beneficiary to the tabular Alternatives to Violence of the Palouse.

Rock Against Rape starts Friday from 6:30 p.m. throughout the 800 building. John Galvin, director of programming, and Joni Galvin, vice president of programming, said he began planning for the event in late January.

“We hope to make this an annual event,” Studer said.

There will be a $3 donation at the door, but a $3 donation is not necessary for entry.

A variety of bands will perform Friday, including well-established Moscow bands like Cloud, Blurred Vision and Agony

As an event to encourage the community and raise money, the event will go on to benefit the organization.

“We’re happy to have a band with a local female singer,” Studer said.

Studer, said, commenting on the venue.

The performance Friday will be open to the public.

According to Riot, the proceeds will go to the organization.

Studer said that the proceeds will be divided among the organization.

‘Malibu’s’ Kennedy flizops in gansta parody

Experiment fails at fail-safe film

MALIBU’S MOST WANTED

The Good

(A.B.) The beginning of this movie (predictably) comedy makes a fresh breath. There’s something there. This time, instead of falling into the writing with a loud, empty boom, they’ve managed to narrate a good story. Kennedy, seems to have raised the bar, as he usually does. Talk to any voice lover reminiscing, we believe that the white rapper from the Big Finish in Harlem has raised the bar, at least, to get to see what Ennis could have done if he had known the name. Kennedy, of course, would have been a star. Every scene is filled with energy, laughter, and real emotion. The movie is more of a product than a piece of art, but it succeeds as an actual story, but it seems too serious. Not that the movie doesn’t take itself seriously, but the opening scene finds more of the comedy than the funny, in fact, finds large parts in — and most definitely needs to have audiences much from splitting the frame. We’re treated to a couple of bruises to the lips of the “Irish’, but those can be fixed. Kennedy (in full play) and Perry are as close as Bud’s lungs to white-gangster speech...

Two diggs play a classic con game with hilarious results. The movie has some good plots, but a minor flaw is that the humor is not always consistent. The movie is still entertaining, but it could have been better.

The Bad

(A.B.) What struck me so odd about the film is that its premise is very thin. The movie is very thin, but it manages to stay true to its roots.

Kennedy’s处 is to try every situation he can find in each film as a parody to the classic “Office Space.” The problem is that the film is like the three and a half minute minimal sketch from “Airplane!” stretched out to two hours. It’s a bad situation to be in, but it’s a situation that Kennedy finds himself in.

There are a few hilarious attempts at parody of “8 Mile” on battle, turns into more of a heartbreaker attempt at sketch comedy and does not get as much recognition as it deserves. Additionally, they try to be a parody out of “Blazing Saddles” but at this point, we do really want to see a Hollywood to a vaguely remembered film from two years ago.

C.M. Jimmy Kennedy’s jokes run for about 30 minutes into the movie, which is unfortunate because there were so many more that made me laugh. The movie itself is written, shot, and cut in the same way for many of the mainstream white pieces. And there are many of them. In fact, the majority of the movie points itself on continua for comedy and a popular hero, with “C.M. Kennedy” as the “meme” but try to be seen outside the box, “Malibu’s Most Wanted.”

Jimmy Kennedy is funny for the most part, but he’s a little bit too funny. He’s too funny for the audience, but not funny enough for the parody.

(A.B.) What struck me so odd about the film is that its premise is very thin. The movie is very thin, but it manages to stay true to its roots.

Kennedy’s处 is to try every situation he can find in each film as a parody to the classic “Office Space.” The problem is that the film is like the three and a half minute minimal sketch from “Airplane!” stretched out to two hours. It’s a bad situation to be in, but it’s a situation that Kennedy finds himself in.

There are a few hilarious attempts at parody of “8 Mile” on battle, turns into more of a heartbreaker attempt at sketch comedy and does not get as much recognition as it deserves. Additionally, they try to be a parody out of “Blazing Saddles” but at this point, we do really want to see a Hollywood to a vaguely remembered film from two years ago.

C.M. Jimmy Kennedy’s jokes run for about 30 minutes into the movie, which is unfortunate because there were so many more that made me laugh. The movie itself is written, shot, and cut in the same way for many of the mainstream white pieces. And there are many of them. In fact, the majority of the movie points itself on continua for comedy and a popular hero, with “C.M. Kennedy” as the “meme” but try to be seen outside the box, “Malibu’s Most Wanted.”

Jimmy Kennedy is funny for the most part, but he’s a little bit too funny. He’s too funny for the audience, but not funny enough for the parody.

Malibu’s处”处 is to try every situation he can find in each film as a parody to the classic “Office Space.” The problem is that the film is like the three and a half minute minimal sketch from “Airplane!” stretched out to two hours. The movie is more of a product than a piece of art, but it succeeds as an actual story, but it seems too serious. Not that the movie doesn’t take itself seriously, but the opening scene finds more of the comedy than the funny, in fact, finds large parts in — and most definitely needs to have audiences much from splitting the frame. We’re treated to a couple of bruises to the lips of the “Irish’, but those can be fixed. Kennedy (in full play) and Perry are as close as Bud’s lungs to white-gangster speech...

Two diggs play a classic con game with hilarious results. The movie has some good plots, but a minor flaw is that the humor is not always consistent. The movie is still entertaining, but it could have been better.
Men's golf finishes second

EL DORADO HILLS, Calif. - The University of Idaho men's golf team closed out the spring season with a strong showing at the Western Athletic Conference Championship.

The Vandals scored a total of 654, finishing second overall. New Mexico State won the team title with a score of 647.

Individuals on the Vandals included senior Kyle Alberts, who placed second with a score of 146, and freshman Garrett Johnson, who finished fourth with a score of 148.

Coach Eric Peterson said the team's performance was a result of hard work and dedication throughout the season.

"The guys really stepped up this year and I'm proud of their efforts," Peterson said. "They worked hard throughout the season and it showed in their performance at the conference championship.

"We were able to bring home a second-place finish and it's a great accomplishment for our team."

The Vandals will participate in a regional championship later this month with the hopes of advancing to the national championship.

Women's golf slips to second place

EL DORADO HILLS, Calif. - On the strength of a strong performance in the WAC Championship, the University of Idaho women's golf team finished second in the conference.

The Vandals scored a total of 1,242, second only to New Mexico State, which scored 1,188.

Individuals on the Vandals included junior Samantha Smith, who placed second with a score of 657, and senior Sophia Zhang, who finished fourth with a score of 661.

Coach Todd Beck said the team's performance was a result of hard work and dedication throughout the season.

"The girls really stepped up this year and I'm proud of their efforts," Beck said. "They worked hard throughout the season and it showed in their performance at the conference championship.

"We were able to bring home a second-place finish and it's a great accomplishment for our team."

Tennis looks for tourney success

By Diane Stone

The Big West Conference tennis championships are just over two weeks away, and the University of Idaho tennis team is looking to be competitive.

"We're competitive, that's for sure. They're going to have to play hard to beat us," said Coach Greg South, head tennis coach for the Vandals.

South said the team is preparing for the conference tournament by competing in several matches and practicing regularly.

"We're trying to get our game in order and prepare for the tournament," South said. "We're looking for a good showing in the tournament."
UI football wraps up spring with Silver and Gold game

by Mark Jones

The University of Idaho football program wrapped up the spring season last Saturday. But the Vandals are now gearing up for the fall season and have had a full-time coaching staff all the way down the sidelines. The biggest problem now, comes in deciding when to get the jobs done and when to get some rest. With your coaches now that we have about five more practices in May, I think that gives us a little more time to focus on creating an overall plan for the fall season. We still need to get our full 15 practices in for the fall season and get the players back up and ready for fall camp so we can get the season started.

The most immediate problem the Vandals must face is the end of spring practice. Like many spring programs, the Vandals have found that the spring practice is a great way to prepare for the fall season. But with the amount of personnel that are involved in the program, the Vandals often find that the spring practice is a little too much. One of the ways that the Vandals have tried to address this problem is to limit the number of practices to just a few.

Facts will be awarded to the defense for each successful stop, and points will be awarded for each successful move. For the offense, there were a few stand out practices where the team scored more points than they did in previous practices. For example, in the first practice, the offense scored 34 points. In the second practice, the offense scored 32 points. For the defense, the team scored 19 points in the first practice and 21 points in the second practice.

"We're kind of a unique situation because we don't have enough lineman or tackles to have a spring game," you know, "where we go into fall camp and we're going to do a normal fall camp. So it'll still be a pretty good atmosphere." Highlighted by senior Chad Breden's performance and Mike Halverson's group of injured players, it appears as if the offense has a group of offensive line to work with. Taken from Anderson and Miller McCoy and without the presence of the linebacker, it appears the offense will be working on the remaining of the defense.

Defensive coordinator Chris Lambler thinks the team will still improve. "To me, it's really comfortable, that's why we've been winning so many enemy or interception games. We've been pretty good," Lambler said. "I think we've been really comfortable." Lambler also said that the team was glad to get the spring game over with and move on to the next phase of the season.

LAKERS

Jason Patokat

One of the most challenging things in sports is winning a championship, or five. Simply put, any team that has been involved in any of these types of events is completely dominating. The Lakers, however, are not that far away from winning another championship. The Lakers are not only experienced, but they'reparity of talent on the offensive side of the ball is what makes this team a threat to win it all.

Guys like Kobe Bryant, Steve Nash and Derek Fisher have been integral to the team's success. Nash, for instance, is one of the best passers in the league and Fisher is a clutch shooter from beyond the arc. The Lakers have a lot of experience on their roster, which will help them when they face teams with less experience.

For those who doubt the Lakers' abilities to win another championship, they are being validated by the team's recent success. The Lakers have won the Western Conference title in three of the last four years, including last year, when they defeated the Orlando Magic in the Finals. The Lakers are favorites to win the title this year as well.

Ultimately, I have no doubt about the Lakers' ability to win a championship this year.
