Administration may eliminate fine arts

Proposal for cutting, mending, splaws widespread concern

BY LIZ THOMPSON

Students, as well as faculty and others, were shocked Monday evening to read that the Department of Art and Design and Ornamental Crafts at the University of Idaho would be eliminated. According to the proposal, which was distributed to classes Wednesday afternoon, the university would lose $100,000 in state funding and many other students and faculty would lose their jobs.

"It was one of the most stressful experiences that I've ever had," said Capt. Mike Giese, the department chair.

Giese said that the department was struggling to stay viable, and that the cuts would not only affect the students, but also the faculty.

"We have a lot of dedicated faculty here, and we're trying to keep them all here," Giese said.

The proposal was met with widespread concern from students and faculty, who said that the cuts would not only eliminate the fine arts program, but also have a negative impact on the university as a whole.

"We're losing a lot of talent with these cuts," said sophomore psychology major, Adam Smith. "It's a shame, and it's not fair to the students who have worked so hard to get where they are."
Endowment PLACE, to get a high status on the West campus. "We are excited about the next round of reaccreditation," Bates said.

The College of Education and Human Development also received high marks. Bates emphasized that the university is currently working on several accreditation projects, including the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education and the Commission on College accreditation.

Bates also addressed the issue of accessibility. "The goal is to increase the number of students who are currently not being served," she said. Bates and her team are working on several initiatives to improve accessibility.

Student Health Services also received high marks. Bates commented that the university is currently working on several initiatives to improve student health and wellness.

Bates emphasized that the university is currently working on several initiatives to improve student satisfaction and retention.

Bates also addressed the issue of the university's financial health. "We are currently working on several initiatives to improve our financial health," she said. Bates and her team are working on several initiatives to improve the university's financial health.

Bates emphasized that the university is currently working on several initiatives to improve its reputation and visibility.

Bates concluded by expressing her gratitude to the university's faculty, staff, and students. "We are grateful for the hard work and dedication of our faculty, staff, and students," she said. Bates emphasized that the university is currently working on several initiatives to improve its reputation and visibility.
Al-Hussayen pleads innocent to additional charges

by Lee Thompson

Sami Omar al-Hussayen, a U.S. computer science doctoral student at the University of California, Berkeley, has been implicated in a terrorism conspiracy. He was arrested last year after his girlfriend, Tareena Shakil, was found in a car with a cache of weapons. Al-Hussayen, who is from Iraq, was accused of participating in a terrorist plot that involved the purchase of arms and weapons. He has pleaded not guilty to all charges and is currently being held at the Al-Jawahiri Federal Penitentiary in Alexandria, Virginia. The charges against him include conspiring to provide material support to terrorists, conspiring to provide material support to a foreign terrorist organization, and being a member of a terrorist organization.

Women's Center holds Middle Eastern poetry reading

by Tanya Kars

Israel, Iraq and Lebanon are commonly seen as the Middle East, but there are many other countries in the region. The Women's Center at Al-Haram College is hosting a poetry reading to raise awareness of the diversity of Middle Eastern cultures. The reading will feature poems by poets from Arab countries, as well as works from Israel, Iran, Iraq, and Lebanon. The poems will be translated into English by a group of United States and Middle Eastern women poets.

Construction workers become part of scenario news

by Kate Porter

During the past year, a new group of people has been added to the list of the University campus: the construction workers. They have been largely ignored by the student body, but they are an important part of the campus community. The workers, who come from a variety of backgrounds and have different levels of education, work on projects ranging from minor repairs to major renovations.

The construction workers are an essential part of the University campus, and their work is often taken for granted. They are responsible for maintaining the physical structure of the campus and ensuring the safety of students and faculty. Their efforts are essential to the daily operations of the University, and they deserve recognition for their contributions.

The University is working to improve communication with the construction workers and to ensure that their needs are met. This includes providing them with adequate facilities and support, such as restrooms and break rooms.

The University is committed to creating a welcoming and inclusive environment for all members of the campus community, and the construction workers are a vital part of this community. They are valued for their hard work and dedication, and we are grateful for their contributions to the University.

It takes a movie to make one man happy

BY BILL MCGUINNESS

A man Mighty had a question. He and his family were about to leave town. His wife, he knew just what is that is probably the hardest part of what he was asking. So he asked, in earnest.

"What defines," he asked. "What defines?"

"Hmm," said the man. "I am not sure."

But Mighty was not. He had come up with the idea of making a movie. "One Happy More" he had said. "One Happy More"

With two directors you get two different perspectives, two different two perspectives, two different ideas. But when things get too different, you end up with a movie. As you can see, but he still needed more of the movie. Why? Because it was how he found it be playing on Barnum Reese. Before the production started, Mighty wanted to learn as much as he could. He knew that it is not just about

"I" without knowledge, a song or to look, Mighty was ready to make the film. "If you're really into any of these people when I started, now we are great friends. Mighty said. Making the movie is an exciting experience, but it's not always about the people you are making it with, but also the people you are making it for. Mighty felt that he was feeling.

"Everything that made these people happy were the little things that people didn't think about. Not a 15-minute happy. I was just recording it. There are all these moments of people taking for granted, we don't really recognize them. To know them, you need to record them."

Mighty portrays, Whitehead, Wellington, and Rota all give their offers to other projects. Mighty is planning to work on the sequel of "One Happy More". Mighty was saying.

The word is a movie that was been with the original crew but it not sure that it will happen. Mighty has a new-to-be-told project with another director.

"I think it's the script. As the movie is going to change the way that people think of happiness. If you didn't believe in happiness before, this movie will change your mind."

Mighty said.

Peanut Butter Wolf and Charisma "Big Shots"

The performance was captivating — and every listener was on the edge of their seats to hear the next word. The energy was electric, and the mood was not to be missed. The band, which cut across a wide spectrum of musical styles and genres, had the audience on their feet. Their powerful vocals, combined with the driving rhythms and harmonies, created a mesmerizing experience that left the listeners wanting more.

"It was a great night. The band really brought it on this night. They had the audience singing along and dancing all night long."

"I had a lot of fun. The sound was great. I would definitely go again."

Both Mighty and others were excited about the performance. Mighty even took a moment to mention the audience, thanking them for their support.

"You guys are amazing. Thank you for coming out tonight. We had a great time playing for you."

The audience responded with热烈的 applause of appreciation. Mighty and his bandmates were clearly delighted at the enthusiastic reception, and they dedicated a few songs to the crowd, ensuring that their performance would be remembered for a long time to come.

"Thank you for being here. We really appreciate your support. We hope to see you all again soon."

The event concluded with a final encore, leaving everyone with a sense of satisfaction and a desire for more. Mighty and his bandmates were clearly pleased with the outcome of the night, and they left the venue with a feeling of accomplishment and anticipation for future performances.
Local woman's friends raise money for her aneurysm surgery

BY JUSTIN BOCUT

You have five minutes to live. Unless you undergo surgery, which could reach in permanent brain damage or even death, you will eventually die fromNotes her aneurysm. You are dealing with the same rare condition Donna Butterfield deals with everyday. On top of it all, Butterfield is struggling to cover the cost of her extensive medical expenses.

Donna's mother, a registered nurse, arranged for the surgery in 2004. According to Lewis Medicine, the operation will have to be done at a special hospital, because only certain hospitals are able to perform the operation. Donna's family has already raised over $40,000 for her surgery, but still needs more money to cover the rest of the costs. Donna's surgery is scheduled for March 19.

“Once it was confirmed that surgery would be necessary, three close friends of Butterfield decided they wanted to raise some funds for her medical bills. Butterfield, currently living in Moscow, got to her friends—Phil Rogers, Wes Williams and Jon Hedges—by phone. Each friend helped support the fund-raising. Members of the band's apartment list have also been raising funds, managing to raise over $800. "This is our band," Rogers said. Hedges added, "During the summer after touring, we were all looking at each other, we're not sure where to go."

"But we're not sure of the money, we're not sure of the future. We've had to move to Moscow-Pullman because we've had to leave our job."

Rogers said the band is planning to house some of the band's friends in Moscow, which has recently received a grant of $2,000 which will be donated to Butterfield's fund.

"We hope that the community will donate to this show that night, " said Rogers. "It’s just friends helping friends."
BRAWL BRINGS MENS HOCKEY TEAM 'SEVERE WARNING'

By Brennan Gagne
THE UNIVERSITY OF MONTANA

The University of Montana hockey team received a "severe warning" from the Western Collegiate Hockey Association on Feb. 12. The warning was levied against the team because of violent behavior by the team's players.

The University of Montana hockey team was penalized for a total of 38 minutes in the game, bringing the team's total penalties to 200 minutes for the season. The team has been penalized for various offenses throughout the season, including fighting, unsportsmanlike conduct, and charging.

The warning was issued after the team's first game of the season against Idaho, when the team was penalized for a total of 38 minutes, including two major penalties. The major penalties were for fighting and unsportsmanlike conduct.

UI'S FIRST CLUB LACROSSE TEAM begins to gel

By Julie Bolec

The University of Idaho's first club lacrosse team is starting to gel. The team has been practicing for the past few weeks and is currently preparing for its first game.

The team consists of 15 players, including six seniors and nine underclassmen. The team has been practicing twice a week, and the players have been working hard to improve their skills.

"We did well, we beat Washington State and we beat Central Washington," said a team member.

The team has been practicing in the University of Idaho's Multipurpose Field, and the players have been working on their fundamentals, including passing, shooting, and defense.

While the team is still developing, the players have been working hard to improve their skills, and the team is making progress.

"We're getting better every day," said a team member.

The team's first game is scheduled for later this month, and the players are excited to show what they've been working on.

Men's tennis overcome obstacles with blistering start

By Brennan Gagne

The University of Idaho's men's tennis team started the season strong, defeating the University of Idaho's women's team 7-0 in their first match.

The team has been practicing hard for the past few weeks, and the players have been working on their fundamentals, including serving, returning shots, and footwork.

"We have a lot of seniors and juniors on this team this year, so we have a lot of experience," said Coach Perkins.

"Our seniors have been very important to the team's success, and they are leading the team from the top," said Coach Perkins.

"They are a great team, and they are working hard to improve their skills," said Coach Perkins.

The team's next match is scheduled for later this month, and the players are looking forward to showing what they've been working on.

"We are working hard to improve our skills, and we are excited to show what we can do," said a team member.
Gold Fish let air out of Pool Rats' championships aspirations

BY BRIAN GUZZI

WASHINGTON DC—The voice that represents Major League Baseball players came under scathing attack Wednesday when U.A.E. union leaders who marched in the National League All-Star Game for the first time last year, "are having an off-season,"

The players came in a hearing called by Don, John, and a number of other players to discuss the reports of alleged steroid use by some of the nation's top baseball stars. The hearing took the unspoken position in his State of the Union address.

"We're here today because the sport is about to be forever tainted," said Melvin. "We need to get back in place before we do that again."

"Your failure to commit to addressing this issue immediately and immediately, has pushed this committee to search for legislative remedies," Melvin told David Fisher, the head of the players' union. "We will have to act in some way to make the major leagues appear to be the professional and rapid fanbase, and I won't say this lightly, but we can't get people doing business the right way."

"This is unacceptable," said Fisher. "We will do whatever it takes to get rid of this problem."

The new national league staging agreement banned the use of anabolic steroids in the National League and made it illegal for minor leaguers to use other substances. The hearing focused on the allegations made by Mr. Fisher.

"It's time to act, and act now," said Melvin. "We will not stand by idly while this continues."
