Savings in the construction of the University Place project on Boise State's campus will bring the University Foundation's substantial debt and $7 million in loans off campus.

The UI Foundation, an agency that strives diligently to manage and maximize assets for the university, raised $2.2 million in the last five years to help fulfill tts financial responsibilities. The University Building Board announced on Tuesday that the University Foundation could reduce its $7 million in loans from the $12 million loans made from a UI agency account. Under its current contract with the Board of Trustees, the Foundation will be able to reduce the $7 million in loans to $2 million by Dec. 31 if it raises $2 million in five years.

"Any further cut savings in the construction of the Water Center will go to the foundation," said Michael Wilson, UW Foundation interim executive director.

University Foundation directors have less than two years to pay off the $7 million that remains from the $12 million loans made from a UI agency account. Wilson said if the $7 million in loans is reduced, the University Foundation will be able to reduce its debt by $3 million by the end of December 1998. The University Foundation will not be able to funnel money back into the university, he said.

The University Project plan would draw $4 million from a 2004-05 budget with $2 million in operating assets for the Idaho Water Center and $2 million from the UI Foundation's annual donation. The Idaho Water Center project is in its last phase and will be completed this summer in the Boise riverfront area.

The UI Foundation has been tasked with the management of the $200,000-square-foot facility, and the university will focus on finding other uses for the water center, Wilson, who became interim director of the UI Foundation in February, said he is currently working with incoming President Timothy White to refine the Foundation's structure and role within the university, an task that has been considered and debated over the last ten years.

"The future of the university foundation exists to raise money and invest it in the university's projects to provide new facilities for students. And it is committed to its annual donation," Wilson said.

Senate hearing will address future of NASA's shuttle program

WASHINGTON - Retired astronaut William Readdy has a simple message for current astronauts John Grunsfeld and Steven Smith: You're just flying something built by your predecessors.

"It's a great honor and it's a great challenge," said Readdy, who was at the NASA Spacex Launch Pad 39A Tuesday for the launch of the space shuttle Atlantis on its final mission. "We really didn't have much of a choice." But Readdy, who was an original member of the Space Shuttle Program, said that many of the components of the shuttle being launched this week are the same as those flown last year by the space shuttle Discovery.

The shuttle is scheduled to deliver satellite components and supplies to the International Space Station, then to deliver a new module to the station.

"There's no difference between going up on the shuttle and going up on the space station," said Readdy, who was the shuttle program's deputy manager during the space shuttle's first flight in 1981.

''This is a routine mission," he said. "When you go up on the space shuttle, you always come back. So this is a routine mission, too. It's nothing extraordinary."
At least 6 Navy Seabees killed in attack on base

By Carol Buehner

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six American military construction workers were killed in an attack by insurgents early Friday in the northern city of Kirkuk, north of Baghdad.

The attack was one of several that underscored the dangers faced by American soldiers in Iraq. The United States is in the middle of a major military buildup in the country, and the attacks come as the U.S. military faces increased scrutiny over its handling of the war.

The attacks came just hours after President Barack Obama announced a plan to send more American troops to Iraq to aid in the fight against the Islamic State group, which has taken over large swaths of the country.

The Pentagon said the attacks were being investigated, but it did not provide details about the fatalities or the circumstances of their deaths.

The attacks were also the latest in a series of attacks in recent days that have targeted American soldiers in Iraq. On Monday, at least four American soldiers were killed in an attack in Fallujah, and on Sunday, two American soldiers were killed in a roadside bombing in the city of Ramadi.

The attacks come as the U.S. military faces increased scrutiny over its handling of the war, as well as the ongoing conflict in Syria.

The United States has been involved in military operations in both countries, and the attacks have raised questions about the effectiveness of American military strategy.

Schroeder stands up for UI students’ views?

Dear readers,

Patrick Schroeder is very concerned in the UI Senate’s recent debate on student fees and budgets, and helped pass the biggest budget increase in nearly a decade. However, his actions have been reacted against by every student budget out there. Schroeder’s actions are an integral part of the UI Senate, as an example of a student who is not acting in the best interest of the student body.

Without a clear understanding of the situation, it’s difficult to support Schroeder’s views. The image in the mirror is us, so why does he think it’s us?

Bush negates real terrorism issues

It has been nearly 30 months since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, but they are still claiming victims every day. Every person in the United States has felt the effects of this catastrophe and is still living through the impact and urgent political laws that the United States, which President Bush openly supports. The citizens of the United States, as an overall, feel that it is important to support our government.

The problem with using the recent death toll as a measure for war casualties is that these two issues are unrelated. Whether the United States has reason enough to declare war in Iraq has nothing to do with the recent death tolls.

Believe it or not, our soldiers are killing our soldiers in an alarming rate. Something qualitatively should be done about this. In a completely unrelated matter, many questions have been raised about the recent United States’ mission for going to war. This should definitely be the topic of research throughout the nation.

Just think the two issues together in a weak attempt to prove a political point, because that becomes the lives of hundreds of soldiers in the process.

Rhythm of the Night:

Mark IV serve as local jazz headquarters for most of year

BY JOE HANRAHAN

Perhaps the most obvious place to listen to jazz is in Moscow at the ARGONAUT Jazz Club, which meets each Thursday. However, for those who need a little music in their life, there is another place to listen to jazz... the radio. The bump next to the hotel dining room may seem like just a truck stop jazz club at first, but looks can be deceiving. Black Diamond is the venue where you will find the best jazz that this area has to offer.

In fact, it is really two venues, the one at 125 E. 1st Avenue and the other at 126 E. 1st Avenue. In 1945, the two venues were started by two saxophonists, Mike Donato and Donatti, who wanted to promote local talent. Since then, the venues have hosted many famous musicians, including Count Basie, Duke Ellington, and Miles Davis.

Theater major, martial artist practices what he teaches

As an actor, Alex Horn has found that he can make a mean laugh, cry or convince you to hate. For Horn, it is all about the character. Last year, he starred in Orlando, Fla.'s, "The Elephant's Wife," a story about the unique life of a elephant. Horn loved to entertain, and he learned that from his grandmother, "Chick Horn," who was a singer and dancer. "Chick was a very talented woman," Horn said.

Horn's grandmother was a famous singer and dancer in the 1920s, and he learned a lot from her. "She taught me how to use the first five places on the voice, which is important for any actor," Horn said. "She also taught me about the importance of being present." Horn has also continued to learn from his grandmother, and he is grateful for the opportunity to work with her.

Great weather, huge turnout highlight Renaissance Fair

BY BENNETT TAYLOR

The 4th annual Moscow Renaissance Fair fills Bank City Park with nearly 800 people. The event kicked off this weekend, weather and entertainment were selected to ensure a large crowd. Renaissance Fair director Mark Leake said the event on Saturday was wonderful and the weather was perfect.

"The weather was perfect," Leake said. "It was a beautiful day, and we had a great turnout." The event featured live music, food, and entertainment throughout the day.

The event was held to celebrate the history and culture of the Renaissance period, and it was a big success. "The fair was a huge success," Leake said. "We had a great turnout, and the weather was perfect."

Any movie that boasts comedic names like Jack Black and Ben Stiller must be an instant hit, right? This movie has been the cause of much movie producers involved with “Envy” have been trying to keep a lid on, or they were afraid of, one of the many ice cream scoops of drugs. Where we begin with this movie, “Envy” is the story of a man and his life to Christopher Walken, who plays Walken, an artist, who never explains, who has a Walken-esque presence throughout the film. He honestly is the only one in the studio that actually plays Walken, and they’re probably afraid he will muck up his lines in his trademark gruff.

But, still with all these names, the one that has had the most success so far is Chris Rock’s ability to star in cinema, it’s not enough to save this movie or even bring it up to a grade level. Most of the time, it’s from the bottom 5 and ending up coming off the shelf. The biggest thing that’s different is that it is so detached and random, things happen with no explanation, and there is a half-complete lack of back story. The idea doesn’t follow a linear storyline. From one scene to another is also given nowhere in particular.

Black, Stiller should ‘Envy’ scripts of similar films.

Jack Black and Amy Poehler star in DreamWorks’ Picture’s comedy “Envy.”

Instead seems pop up arbitrary. For example, halfway through the movie the story of Stiller being in a series of black and white photos, which then is completely abandoned for an entirely different story line and then abandoned for another. It seems as if the writers were searching for anything to bring this movie to a close.

In the end, the ending is as tersely as it is a mess. Nothing new, new ideas of movies have been taken and repeated and copied and compared to another, and I should do well in the box office. 100% accurate say.

PCEI shows ‘Touching the Void,’ raises money for educational branch.

By Frank McGuigan

For more than an hour after the University Performing Arts Center’s Friday evening screening of the政部 film ‘Touching the Void,’ there was a palpable sense of excitement in the air. A quiet, humbled audience clapped as the lights dimmed. The film—which is a combination of fact and fiction—began.

The film, which is based on the book of the same name by Joe Simpson, relates the story of two mountain climbers, Joe Simpson and Simon Yates, as they attempted to reach the summit of the most dangerous mountain on earth. The film is a true story, and it is one of the most exciting and inspiring stories of survival ever told.

Throughout the film, the audience is taken on a journey of suspense, action, and survival. The film is a testament to the human spirit and the will to survive.

There is a WORLD RELIGION that teaches SCIENCE and RELIGION MUST AGREE.

The Bahá’í Faith

Religion and science are the two wings upon which man’s intelligence can soar into the heights, with which the human soul can progress. It is not possible to fly with one wing alone! Though we may try to fly with the wings of religion alone, we will quickly fall into the grotesque of superstition, while on the other hand, with the wing of science alone we will never be able to touch the heights, but fall into the despairing shallows of materialism.

UI soccer displays potential in win over alumni

ROBERT SELIG / ARGONAUT

T he University of Idaho's soccer team is hoping to end its losing trend of the last couple years, and the current roster, with a chance to show its change in mentality and playing style.

In a game the alumni team has not won since inception, it seemed like a perfect opportunity for the current Vandals to show the future of the team, while also providing a chance to win another Alumni Game.

After the game, the Vandals said they were happy with their performance.

"It was just a good game tonight," saidت Vandal goalkeeper Jacob Voss. "We just kept possession on the ball and kept the pace of the game in our hands.

The Vandals, who were leading 1-0 at the half, kept their chances of winning intact. After the half, the Vandals continued to pressure the Alumni team. The Vandals scored on a shot by Jacob Voss in the 55th minute to put the Vandals up 2-0.

"We just kept playing as a team and didn't allow the Alumni team to get too close," said Vandal forward Joe Holm. "It was a good game for us and we are looking forward to the next game."
New 4x4 club prepares for mudslinging, responsible portrayal of community activity

Group will hold meeting May 11

BY DAVE BABBAGAR

It’s official! Four-wheeling has hit the Palouse. While there have been off-road and vehicle wreck displays around the area, local enthusiasts have worked together to form a club and work toward better use and promotion of the public lands and trails.

According to a release from one of the founding members, Clay Bennett, the club met at the house of Rick and Mary Kennelly on July 21st since the Jeep was released for public use and the local off-road community may need more control.

The club will meet the next meeting at 7 p.m. at Nelson Aircraft in Pullman. For more information contact Bennett or Kennelly at 936-9141 or 936-3219.

“The jeep was one of the original vehicles used for four-wheeling,” Bennett said. “It is important to have an organized club and to make sure we are conducting ourselves responsibly.”

While the jeep’s out of commission for the moment, Bennett said the club is working on a 220-pound vehicle to be used for demonstrations.

“We want to make sure the public knows we are responsible and that we are here to help promote our area,” Bennett said.
