Vandals gain entry to WAC, will join in 2005

By Megan Jones

Of the 111 institutions that sent in proposals to join the WAC, the University of Idaho was chosen as the only new entrant, joining the conference in the fall of 2005. The University of Idaho a few months ago sent a letter to the administration, expressing their desire to join the WAC. The administration was enthusiastic about the proposal, and decided to pursue it further. The University of Idaho was chosen from a pool of 111 institutions that sent in proposals. The selection process was very competitive, and the University of Idaho was chosen as the only new entrant. The University of Idaho is excited about the opportunity to join the WAC, and looks forward to the benefits that come with membership.

Researchers seek alternatives to burning Kentucky bluegrass

By John Bohr

A group of researchers from the University of Idaho is working on developing alternative methods to burning Kentucky bluegrass. Kentucky bluegrass is a common lawn grass in the United States, but it is also a prolific weed that can spread easily. The researchers are working on developing methods to control Kentucky bluegrass without burning it. They are exploring the use of chemicals, mechanical methods, and biological control methods. The researchers hope to develop a method that is effective, environmentally friendly, and cost-effective.

Al-Hussayen jury continues deliberations

By Adollah Lofstrom

The jury deliberations in the trial of al-Hussayen, a Saudi Arabian national, have been ongoing for several days. The jury is considering evidence that has been presented during the trial. The prosecution has presented evidence that al-Hussayen was involved in the planning of the attacks. The defense has presented evidence that al-Hussayen was not involved in the planning of the attacks. The jury is expected to reach a verdict in the coming days.
Moscow hosts first ArtWalk

The ArtWalk, a new event on the Moscow music and art scene, took place on Saturday night in downtown Moscow, providing a new cultural venue for Moscow area residents.

“I am interested in promoting an interest in the arts, providing a place to showcase art and music together, and creating a place for people to interact,” said event organizer Troy Mielke.

The ArtWalk features 20 downtown area artists, and is held simultaneously with the inaugural ArtWalk Film Fest. The event is sponsored by the Moscow Community Arts Council, a non-profit organization that aims to promote and foster the appreciation for the arts in the Moscow region.

“I think the idea of having ArtWalk Film Fest while the ArtWalk is going to be popular because it is unique,” said Mielke.

The event is a celebration of the arts, with music, art, and filmmaking all being showcased in downtown Moscow.

The amphitheater is nestled among vineyards at the edge of downtown. The stage sits on the plains, providing a unique experience for those attending the event.

Event organizers said they are excited about the event, and hope to make it a regular part of the downtown area.

“I think we are going to have a really great night,” said Mielke.

Two events have been held recently that have brought in large numbers of visitors to downtown Moscow, and have helped to boost the local economy.

Last month, the Penguin Book Festival was held in downtown Moscow, drawing a large crowd of people.

“This is the first time we have had a book festival in downtown Moscow, and I think it was a great success,” said event organizer Matt Stevens.

The festival featured a variety of authors and publishers, including local authors and national bestsellers.
