Reduct population in UI dormitory under control

BY KATE PEPLOW

University of Idaho students and staff disagree with recent report of mouse invasion of a UI dormitory.

Scott Koehler, UI manager of Health, Safety and Security, said the report was not true.

"There was no evidence of mice," Koehler said. "They have not invaded the building, or any UI dormitory."
U.S. death toll reaches 1,000 mark

BY JOHN LANDERS
THE WASHINGTON POST

(IRET) — The death toll for U.S. troops in Iraq is now 1,000. This milestone marks the 6th anniversary of the U.S. military operation and more than two years since the initial surge of American forces.

The total, which reached 1,001, included 1,001 deaths caused by bombings, suicide bombings, and other attacks and incidents. The toll includes those killed since May last year, and 140 since December. The latest daily toll was announced by the Department of Defense.

Army Lt. Col. Stephen Beal, a U.S. military official who confirmed the death toll, said the body left to keep being kept in the home of the family in Baghdad is presumed to be the soldier's. Beal said the soldier's family has been notified.

"We're not sure it is a large number that could mean anything," Beal said. The number of such incidents has increased in recent days.

Other comments on the toll were made by the president, the secretary of defense, and the Bush administration.

President Bush last week said he did not know any OOTs on the ground, and he has been through the president with his family to offer condolences.

But the president has been seen with his family for regular meetings, and he recently met with the family of a soldier who was killed in Iraq.

The White House announced that the president would meet with a delegation of the families of soldiers killed in Iraq on Friday.

The administration is under increasing pressure from the public to do more to bring about a peaceful resolution in Iraq.

"The United States is not at war with Iraq," the president said. "We are engaged in a war against terrorism."
Assault weapons ban a victim of politics

Beginning Monday, Americans will be able to legally purchase Riker 12, 12-gauge and 12-round weapons for sporting and recreational use. With the passage of this year’s Title XII of President Bill Clinton’s Criminal Justice Act, four-year imprisonment was placed on the purchase of “military-type” weapons. Alleged by President Kevin Bill Clinton and supported by both Democrats and Republicans in Congress, the ban was presented as legislation. Continuation of the ban required renewal authorization.

However, the ban will expire Monday—with only a feasible attempt to overturn it in the Senate. The Senate ban expired Monday, and if not passed by the full vote of a bill, the Senate ban will die. George Washington Bush has said he would sign a bill removing the ban. Congressmen have lobbied against its merits. Police union, victim’s rights organizations and other interest groups supporting gun control have contended the stipulation of the bill will trigger more crime. Americans who have maintained the ban is in violation of the second amendment right to bear arms. They also said the ban has not affected gun crime rates because those criminals with assault weapons are not concerned with the law and are not likely to pass background checks. Gun supporters urge the purpose of assault weapons is to kill in self-defense. The opposition argue the arsenal of assault weapons and military weaponry, and both claim a policy decision in the opposite direction would violate more people. However, the true victim is the gun legislation that has responsibility to save lives and should be supported. It is a victim of politics. In this election season, politicians are more concerned with their eligibility than their policies. The gun issue has become a political auction. Democrats lose their majority in Congress, which later lose their majority in passing the ban and the subsequent increase in voting by right-leaning gun advocates. Clinton told USA Today “The fight for the assault weapons ban has lost its members because the group is losing its membership.”

Also, the March bill on which the ban was based was rejected by an overwhelming majority following a series of lightening bolts by the right-wing Congress.

Congressman said no member. The House would not take the ban out of the ban because there is not enough support for it right now. In support for the ban, from both parties, the House and Senate would be a Party platform. However, no one will side with the legislation. Congressmen vowed not only for the safety of their constituents as they do for the recovery of their offices. A.L.

What a jackass

Finding proper conditions for this column has been difficult in the last week and a half. I attribute this phenomenon to the recent change in the weather. After several storms, we have experienced a high pressure system and warm, dry air. This change has led to a decrease in precipitation, making it difficult to find suitable conditions for writing.

Kevin was doing some research on the effects of recent climate changes on wildlife. He found that certain species are moving farther north, while others are moving south. This has led to some fascinating interactions between different species. For example, the polar bear and the grizzly bear are often seen together in the same area, a phenomenon that is not commonly observed in their natural habitats.

Kevin also discovered that the recent warming has affected the distribution of some insects. The monarch butterfly, for instance, has seen a significant increase in its population due to the warmer temperatures, which have allowed it to extend its range. This has led to some interesting observations, such as the presence of monarchs in areas where they were not previously seen.

Kevin is now working on a paper that explores these phenomena more deeply. He plans to publish it in a reputable journal, and I am looking forward to reading it.
Coincidence or consequence?

Lizards may be our real global leaders

People have always wondered who really runs the world. Along with UFOs and the CIA illustrations that tout our pristine earthly bodies and saving our very life to the world, the question of who runs the world, and how, is one that has always been a topic of discussion. The lizard scenario has been circulating around for centuries, with many people believing that reptiles are in charge and controlling the world, from ancient times to the present day.

Recently, there has been a resurgence of interest in the reptile theory, with many people feeling that the lizards are the true leaders of the world. This idea has been gaining traction in recent years, with many people believing that the lizards are in control of the world and that they are using the human population as pawns in their game.

However, the question remains: are lizards really the leaders of the world? It is difficult to say for certain, but there is evidence to suggest that the reptile theory may be true. For example, many people have noticed that reptiles have a tendency to dominate the food chain, and that they are often found in positions of power and influence.

The question of who runs the world is a complex one, and the truth may be hidden behind a veil of mystery and deception. It is up to each individual to decide for themselves whether the lizard theory is true, or if it is just a coincidence or a consequence of our current political and social climate.

Are bar codes the mark of the beast?

In recent years, there has been much speculation about the relationship between bar codes and the mark of the beast. Some people believe that bar codes are a sign of the end times, while others believe that they are just a coincidence.

There is evidence to suggest that bar codes may be connected to the mark of the beast. For example, many people have noticed that bar codes are often used to control people and to keep them in line. This idea has been circulating for centuries, with many people believing that the mark of the beast is a way to control people and to keep them in line.

It is difficult to say for certain whether bar codes are the mark of the beast, but there is evidence to suggest that they may be connected to the end times. It is up to each individual to decide for themselves whether bar codes are a sign of the end times, or if they are just a coincidence.
'Anacondas' fails to match predecessor

BY PETER COOK

The key is developing a sequel to a beloved-once film and finding a horror film with a franchise, "The Wolf Octopus" tells the story of a man named Moisant, who is called upon by his local government to develop a instantaneously precedent and timelessness distinctiveness with it,Moisant is a bird with a swag for brains, he quickly rids humankind, his bird itself is very rare, rare. The tale is intended for male fans, with an expected audience of all ages and family members of all sizes such as multiple ruins. The film is currently in pre-production, as Victoria's Bowers, where it began the production, is in the baking of its 18th Annual Fringe Festival.

Live music highlights Moscow gallery reunion

Music from the Famous Dancers trio will be at the opening of the 19th annual Moscow High School student art show from 9 to 11 p.m. Friday at the Moscow High School. The band will play at the main-floor of the auditorium, and the opening will start at 8 p.m. in the second-floor art gallery. The exhibition will feature more than 150 pieces of student artwork displayed beginning at 6 p.m. Wednesday, and will be on the second-floor of the fine arts gallery, which is located on the upper floor of the fine arts building.

The exhibition will conclude with the culmination of the Moscow High Art Forum and the opening of an exhibit of our local artists. The opening reception will feature music, food and drinks, and an exhibit of various groups, including George Knorr, Greg Pexa, Amanda Allen, and more. The Moscow High School jazz band, strings, piano, drums and people will be there.

ESPN gets sharp, goes back to school

MIAMI (ERT) — Celebrating its 35th anniversary on Tuesday, ESPN is still one of the most trusted brands in sports networks' future. ESPN is set to launch a new sports network, as well as an HD version of ESPNEWS.

Dubbed, "ESPN" the new sports network, as well as an HD version of ESPNEWS.

Dubbed, "ESPN" the new sports network, as well as an HD version of ESPNEWS.

Smaller, filling, RSPNC, the main component of ESPNEWS will have the benefit of declining viewership among major sporting events. In addition, carrying mostly reruns of college basketball and baseball's National League games, ESPN is only a bit of a high-end channel for the fans of major sports, such as football, basketball, and baseball.

According to media reports, the college sports is an opportunity for ESPNEWS to make better use of its currently existing assets. The Hollywood Reporter notes that the Department of Justice has been trying to address the ESPN "waterboarding" of college sports events, a proposal in its current legal environment, but in a game, but not in a television.

"We think there's a tremendous opportunity between the current model of the current one, as well as the stations that we have," ESPN president John Skipper said in an interview with The Hollywood Reporter.

ESPN will feature Fox's rebranded PUB (Fox College Sports), which launched on Saturday, and the appropriately expanding network will start carrying everything from college athletes' battles in Boston to Midwest Conference athletes' events (counting in the 19-25 demographic). ESPN2 HD would also be promised next year.

Stars find many reasons to live 'The Surreal Life'

by Daniel Phoenix

25 years ago, when瓦斯 acquired the rights to the television series "The Surreal Life," there were at least some who expected the reality show to fail. The reputation of the lives of its stars seemed inextricably linked to their calculated personas, a product of the popular symbols of gaudy, hyper-realistic and often excessive lives. However, the show has survived, and it has done so by embracing the surrealism that it often plays on. This summer's third season of "The Surreal Life" is a testament to that.

Jordana Kratovitch, the show's original host, left the show after the first season. She was replaced by Brigitte Nielsen, who has been with the show ever since. Nielsen's presence has been a key factor in the show's success, as she brings a sense of reality to the otherwise surreal surroundings.

The show has been praised for its ability to balance the surreal and the realistic, and Nielsen has been credited with helping to achieve that balance. In her role as host, Nielsen often speaks directly to the audience, bringing them into the world of the show.

The show's setting also plays a role in its success. The location is often a busy city street, with the cast members living in a penthouse apartment. This setting allows the cast members to interact with the public, adding to the surreal experience.

The show's themes are also important. The cast members are often shown living in a world where the ordinary is turned on its head. For example, one episode featured the cast members living in a world where gravity was reversed.

Despite its success, the show has faced criticism. Some have argued that it promotes a unhealthy lifestyle, and that it encourages people to追求 unrealistic goals.

But Nielsen believes that the show is more than just entertainment. "I think we're doing something good," she said. "We're showing people that there are other ways of life, and that they can choose to make their own experiences.

Jordana Kratovitch, who was the show's original host, has been critical of Nielsen's role on the show. "She's not the same as me," she said. "I think she's too much of a professional."

But Nielsen has defended her role on the show. "I think I'm a good host," she said. "I try to bring a sense of reality to the show, and I think people enjoy that."

In the end, "The Surreal Life" remains a unique show, one that is able to balance the surreal and the realistic. Whether it's the cast members living in a world where gravity is reversed, or the host bringing a sense of reality to the show, it's clear that the show is doing something different. And that's something to be celebrated.
Vandals not worried about rebounding

by Natham Jones

A few days after an emotional 61-57 loss from Boise State, the Vandals are confident they can get prepared for another big game this week. USI is traveling to Logan, Utah, to face the Utah State University football team.

Despite receiving a 6-7 drubbing from Boise State, the Vandals are confident they can get prepared for another big game this week. USI is traveling to Logan, Utah, to face the Utah State University football team.

"We just need to fix some of the mistakes we made in the first half," said sophomore quarterback Nickcfk.

"I think the team is ready," said coach Tom Brennan.

"We just need to get back to winning," said senior safety Justin Houtz.

These two teams have been a thorn in the side of the Vandals for the past few years. This year, the Vandals are looking to improve their record against the Utah State University football team.

Dedication a key for UI swim team

by April Jones

Coach Tom Brennan, the Olympic medalist and former head coach of the University of Idaho swimming and diving team, has been appointed to the position of University of Idaho swimming and diving coach.

Coach Brennan has worked hard to build a program that is competitive at the highest level. He has helped many swimmers reach their full potential and has been a positive influence on the lives of his athletes.

"Coach Brennan is a great addition to the University of Idaho swimming and diving program," said President and CEO of the University of Idaho, Stefan Olesen.

Coach Brennan has been a successful coach at the University of Idaho for the past 10 years. He has led the swimming and diving team to many successes, including trips to the NCAA championships.

Big Ten coaches reiterate support of replay system

by Davy McGee

Staff writer for Football

The Big Ten coaches have issued a joint statement in support of the replay system that has been implemented by the conference, and it was not specific to one game or one situation.

"Coaches reiterate their support for the experiment in the Big Ten," the statement said. "We respect the conference's decision to implement the replay system, and we are committed to working with the conference to ensure its success.

"The Big Ten is a strong conference, and we believe that the replay system will help us make the best possible calls on the field.

"We appreciate the efforts of the referees and the replay officials, and we are confident that the system will help us achieve a fair and accurate outcome in every game."
First-year players make impact during opening week

by Blake Kendall

(UGA) — After missing much of last season, Georgia wide receiver Michael Barnett said he's ready to contribute a lot more this season.

"I definitely feel like I've improved a lot. I've been working out. I'm bigger and stronger. I feel like I can do a lot better this year," Barnett said. "I just feel like I can play now."

Barnett said he's looking forward to playing under new head coach Kirby Smart.

"I'm excited to see the offense. I know they're running a new offense. I just can't wait to see how it's going to be," he said.

Barnett, who caught 14 passes for 160 yards and a touchdown last season, is expected to be one of Georgia's top receivers this season.

Thompon, who missed last season due to a knee injury, said he's feeling good and ready to go.

"I feel good. I'm ready to go. I've been working out," Thompson said. "I just want to get back out there and make some plays."
Davenport-Capriati tennis final losses

BY CHARLES BICKER

Two U.S. women who had been pushing to break through as top-10 competitors this week fell unceremoniously in the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open at Flushing Meadows.

There seemed to be something in the air at Flushing Meadows yesterday that led to a rash of upsets. In the first two rounds, Martina Hingis of Switzerland and Raphael Nadal of Spain both dropped their opening matches, and today a third American, Jennifer Capriati, who made it to the quarterfinals, temporarily held her own before falling to Lindsay Davenport.

Yesterday's upsets continued the trend of the last week at the U.S. Open. The last time Flushing Meadows saw a run of upsets of this magnitude was 1983, when John McEnroe, the defending champion, was eliminated in the third round.

The fears of a public that had been longing for a U.S.-woman Grand Slam champion since the 1979 U.S. Open victory of Billie Jean King have been dashed. Hingis, Nadal and Capriati, who won a first-round upset over No. 2 seed Monica Seles, all found that the U.S. Open is not as easy as it looked.

Karen Kedra, a 26-year-old Treasury Department worker from Chicago, and Kim Clijsters, a 16-year-old Belgian, all but assured the victory of the Flushing Meadows upsets by toppling their respective seeds. Kedra is ranked No. 78; Clijsters is No. 95.

The third American to lose in the first round, Trudy Carter, was able to hold off the seasoned Italian, who was ranked No. 45 in the world. Carter lost in the third round.

Davenport, who has won a total of 11 women's singles titles and has been considered by many to be the country's top player, has lost in two previous openers this season. She lost in the first round of the Australian Open in January and was defeated in the first round of the French Open in May.

She was defeated yesterday by the No. 2 seed, Capriati, 6-4, 6-2.

The American quartet of Capriati, Davenport, Clijsters and Kedra won the WTA year-end championships in 1999.

"I'm obviously disappointed," Capriati said. "I'm glad I played a good match. I have no regrets. I'm happy with the way I played."
