Faculty ask for more opinions on plus-minus grading

By Steve Thomas

The University of Idaho Faculty Senate wants more research before it makes a decision to switch from a plus-minus to a letter grading system.

After hearing a report on student and staff opinions at their meeting Thursday, faculty members said they wanted to survey a greater range of students and staff before making a decision.

Council member James Reid presented opinions he gathered from ASUI leaders, student members of the Boise State Student Senate, and students from the College of Arts and Social Sciences.

"We need more input from students," Reid said. "I don't think plus-minus grading is useful to someone who has not been exposed to it."

UI student survives 50-foot wave at sea

BY CYNTHIA VANDEVEN

Life is as unpredictable as the sea for University of Idaho student Amanda-Jo Brumble, who recently survived an experience that could have been far worse than the present one.

Several students, including Brumble, were pummeled into the stairswell, unable to keep up with the thrashing of the water as waves rose up to 20 feet. The students were forced to hold onto the side of the ship to prevent being swept overboard.

As the wave increased in strength, the ship started to rock severely. The students were trapped on the side of the ship and had to move around to the other side of the ship to avoid being swept overboard.

Two of the students, including Brumble, were pummeled into the stairswell, unable to keep up with the thrashing of the water as waves rose up to 20 feet. The students were forced to hold onto the side of the ship to prevent being swept overboard.

The ship, which was an excursion vessel, was powered by the engine of the ship's propulsion system. It was not a commercial vessel, but a private vessel.

The ship is owned by the University of Idaho and is used for educational purposes.

President Bush opens with a joke.

State of Union with partisan politicians

The road of Pr unes is uneven and unpredictable — yet we know where it leads. These words opened President Bush’s State of the Union address on Wednesday to Congress. Overall, his message was one of conviction and optimism. In fact, “strength” and “freedom” were the mantras woven throughout his speech.

That is not in any sense of the words moving. There is one flaw Bush and other conservative leaders share. It is that the benefits reserved by our seniors and those preparring to retire now would not change. He appeared to speak twice when he claimed “these are plans that are based on facts and observations.” Here is the good problem. The way this statement with that has already been made mind up. Not only did he present only portions in his campaign, but he also said, “The best way to do that is by making the option better for younger workers.”

President Bush's address presents a ripe opportunity for political parties and partisan analysts. More time was devoted to the privilige of social security than any other domestic issue. He promised that the benefits reserved by our seniors and those preparing to retire now would not change. He appeared to speak twice when he claimed “these are plans that are based on facts and observations.” Here is the good problem. The way this statement with that has already been made mind up. Not only did he present only portions in his campaign, but he also said, “The best way to do that is by making the option better for younger workers.”

Bush seemed to gain more confidence. He called for increased freedom to criminal offenders, work from former offenders and former Groc.

Bush has supported community health centers for impoverished neighborhoods and NIMBY and urban planning process to expand the use of public education and brain power to improve the quality of life and the efficiency of government. "We can be here to do it," he said.

Unfortunately, much of his excellent plan does little more than

SpongeBarbara SquarePants: Devious queen

SpongeBob and Squidward, Geeks Gay Bob as Squidward, called me. He said that since I was in charge of supervising and regulating the school's computer lab, I had to do something. He said that the school was in the process of upgrading to a new software system, and that he needed me to help with the installation. I was really torn, because on the one hand, I was excited to get to work on a new technology project, but on the other hand, I didn't want to be responsible for something that could potentially go wrong.

Just as I was about to decline, SpongeBob turned to me and said, "Hey, if you help us out with this, you'll get a gift card to the store of your choice!"

I couldn't resist the offer, so I agreed to help. We spent the next few hours working on the installation, and I was able to get the new software up and running. SpongeBob and Squidward were thrilled, and I felt really good about myself for helping out.

After the installation was complete, I received the gift card to the store of my choice. I was really happy with the outcome, and I felt like I had done a good job.

Wrigley receives poetry award

By Andrew Stelz

Richard Wrigley, Idaho poet

The University of Idaho's Richard Wrigley is one of the 10 recipients of the National Endowment for the Arts' Poetry Fellowship.

"It's a tremendous honor and absolutely overwhelming," Wrigley said. "You don't expect to be chosen for something like this, and I think to be chosen two years in a row is more than I could possibly imagine."

Wrigley, who was named a poet laureate for the state in 2001, will receive a $25,000 grant for artistic projects. Two poets from Idaho have received the grant in the past - Robert McFadden and Anne W. Newman.

The Neustadt National Book Prize is administered by the American Poets Conference and funded by the Rosenwald Foundation.

"Bob has written a book that other poets wish they had written," said Kirk Barnes, who teaches at the University of Idaho.

McFadden, who teaches at the University of Idaho, has written two books with every line edited by his wife, Teri McFadden, who teaches at the University of Idaho.

"He's a great writer and has been able to make his words work that have written themselves," Barnes said.

"Richard Wrigley is a poet who has written a lot of different books. He has written about his poetry and his life. He has written about his writing and his life. He has written about his writing and his life."

Moreno brings grace to ‘Maria’

By TYLEN WILSON

While many of last year’s most talked-about moves were performed by established performers (think Leonardo DiCaprio in The Aviator), perhaps the most powerful performance in film this year is one by a young actress, Maria, who plays Maria, a Columbian drug mule, in the film Maria. She offers a job as a drug mule, one who cures drugs into the United States by swallowing drugs in grape-sweetened, herb-infused capsules. The film, in Spanish with English subtitles, takes place in the United States, and what happens when Maria realizes the gravity of what she’s doing. The entire film centers on Maria, and Moore’s bold performance is both aspirational and heart-wrenching, and Moore is an acting visionary. Her performance, from 2004, is hard to remember that Maria is a fictional character, and that her horrifying experience is the only one of a fictional girl. Moreno is a Latinx aristocrat, from a Latinx aristocratic, but she’s also a representation of everyone. The mesmerizing thing about Maria’s role in Maria is how Maria’s decision to go a drug mule is for the right reason. For Maria, taking life in peace or death in war is the opportunity to lead a better life. Through America, America can sometimes forget that Maria is a woman available in this country, who serves as an ambassador of American drug enforcement and a salute to America’s hopeful ideals.

Where blowhards, prima donnas and scabies are the norm

BY BERNIE WARNER

With the Super Bowl looming on the near horizon, Penn State football fans will once again demonstrate their thoroughgoing devotion to the team and its interests. The circus atmosphere surrounding the team will create a special type of pressure on the players and coaches, who will have to stay focused on the task at hand.

Brennan: Let's kick this off with a bang. Nathan - if this was your last day in football, what would you be sending packing out of your office?

Nathan: Probably all of the Philadelphia bars because Eagles fans are severe enough when their team loses. I can't imagine what they'd be like after a Super Bowl victory. They'd be heading out to third- and fourth-tier bars, but they'd probably not understand the main third person thing and wind upジョージ ParsonsもしくはCustomパーソナライズされた特別な分け隔てを作ると、必要なものがある。したがって、よく観察し、自身の体を守るためのちょっとした手順を考えてみてください。

Brennan: That's interesting. OK, then, let's talk about some specific things that will be going on in Philadelphia. What would you say are the most important things that fans should know about the team's upcoming game?

Nathan: For one, the team is coming off a tough loss last weekend, so they'll be looking to bounce back this week. Also, the fans will be excited to see the return of some injured players, including a key offensive lineman.

Brennan: Interesting. So, what do you think the team's chances are of winning this game?

Nathan: It's difficult to say. The Eagles are a very talented team, but they've also had some struggles this season. I think it'll come down to which team can execute better on the day of the game. If they can do that, I think the Eagles have a good chance of winning.

Brennan: That's a good point. Well, thank you both for your insightful commentary. We'll be back with more Super Bowl coverage soon.
