Forum grills candidates for ASUI positions

JENNIFER KARINEN

The 16 candidates running for ASUI offices were grilled in an open forum at the Student Union Building food court Wednesday.

About five students, who weren't senators or running for Senate, participated in the forum. The sounds of microwave chitter from the adjoining room almost drowned out the candidates' responses over microphones.

Candidates lived on 89.5 KUCI, the question and answer session lasted 90 minutes. The forum will be rebroadcast Tuesday at 6:30 p.m.

ASUI President Jim Dalton, KUCI Station Manager Shannon Kim, and Argonaut Staff Writer Jennifer Karinen made up the panel that grilled the candidates, running for Senate, Vice President and President. A microphone was provided for questions from the audience. It was used once by a senator. A few callers phoned questions in to the radio station.

Ten candidates for six open Senate seats

"How many Senate meetings have you attended?" was the first question for the candidates. Three candidates attended a Senate meeting this year. This excluded Hill and Coyne, who are running for re-election.

Candidates named UI's image, recruitment and retention, parking, and student fees as important issues facing students.

Ian Hays, Angela Brown, David Glass, and Joel Webster were discussing to get equal student representation. Craig Sodberg, Nat Begley, Meli Kissel, Charli Linder, Kerri Hill and Rebecca Coyne see a Senate as a complex issue to be discussed and considered.

We've been conflicting versions on how many students were in particular living groups. One candidate said there were 11,000 students on campus with two-thirds in the dorms and one-third off-campus.

However, Bruce Pittman, dean of students, said 9,694 students were registered on the UI campus as of the 10th of November. There are 1,276 students in Greek housing, 1,347 in the Residence Halls, and between 200 and 300 international students. That leaves about 6,676 students living off-campus.

One running unopposed

Three running for vice president

Candidates for vice president responded to questions on their pandemic skills, the vice president relationship with the president and the Senate and a caller's question about student versus public use of the UI golf course.

One of the vice president's jobs is to ensure senators are visiting the living groups they are assigned. Senator Katie Hoffstatter asked the three candidates how important they think it is that senators visit their living groups considering only 40 percent (36 percent) of students live within a living group.

Representative. In a brief speech he told students he was qualified because of his experience as a senator and because being from Moscow, he knows many of the faculty members.

Faculty Council to discuss shorter spring semesters

ERIN SCHULTZ

Once a policy is in place for a long time, few people usually think to question it," said Bill Voxman, Faculty Council chairman. The University of Idaho's current academic calendar is one example of this.

Last spring the Faculty Council was asked to look and approve an outline of the academic calendar through the year 2030-31. This time, a few people decided to take another look at it. One of the main questions raised was why our spring semester has consistently been one week longer than fall.

"As we understand it, the longer spring semester is caused by motel/restaurant capacity problem in the Pullman-Moscow area housing. If Washington State University and UI had commenced on the same weekend, many parents wouldn't be able to find accommodations," reads the report put out by the committee, proposed to look into the issue.

Teresa Gordon, one of the members of the academic calendar committee, said this has been the case ever since she first arrived 12 years ago...

Comparing the UI calendar to peer institutions, the committee found that Idaho State University starts one week later in the spring and ends at the same time. Idaho State University has the same start and finish dates, and WSU starts at the same time in the spring but goes out one week earlier for summer break.

"One problem that comes up is as a teacher is that if you are teaching the same course fall and spring semesters, you end up rushing through it in the fall," Gordon said. "Unless you're doing the syllabus, you probably wouldn't even realize it. I guess you could say that as a student, you're getting more for your money in the spring," Gordon said.

To alleviate the inequity, the academic calendar committee discussed several options. The one they settled on, which will be presented to the Faculty Council Nov. 18, is to share the problem with WSU by having alternating early graduation dates. Odd numbered years could be UI's early graduation and even numbered years could be WSU's.

Other options included having a "true" dead week before finals where no classes are held, having a two-

Librarians asking for funds to upgrade service statewide

MOSCOW — Idaho's librarians are asking Gov. Phil Bitter and the Legislature for funding for a will put access to books and magazines in small communities on par with the largest libraries.

The Idaho State Library is leading a campaign on behalf of the more than 700 locally-funded public libraries in the state to connect all of them through the Internet and to provide huge magazine databases for library users. They have submitted two requests to Bitter for inclusion in his budget proposal to lawmakers.

A one-time allocation of $60,000 would buy software to allow incompatible computers at different libraries to communicate more easily through an Internet site known as LILIN or Library Linking Idaho.

People could find books held in any Idaho library.

The second request is $465,000 per year for a statewide license giving all libraries on-line access to 1,300 complete magazines, plus parts of 1,500 other publications.

University signs memorandum with northwest tribes

PULLMAN — Washington State University and regional American Indian tribes have pledged to work more closely together in the future, through classes on campus and ties to Indian communities.

A memorandum of understanding, one of the first of its kind between a university and tribal leaders, was signed Wednesday during a reception.

"The memorandum between WSU President Sam Smith and representatives of 10 tribes creates an Indian advisory board to the president, which will promote a campus climate friendly to Indians, promote American Indian studies, and strengthens services to Indian communities," said Thomas S. Smith, chairman of the Northwest Regional Native American Council.

The memorandum calls for twice yearly board meetings staffed and funded by the university.

As a land grant university begun with land from the federal government, it makes sense for WSU to work closely with tribes, Halfnoff said.

Samuel Penney, chairman of the Nez Perce Tribal Executive Committee in Idaho, said the memorandum was the first agreement tribes had signed with a major university.

Signers included representatives of the Yakamas, Spokane, Kailyla, Warm Springs, Umatilla, Nez Perce, Coeur d'Alene, Kootenai, Confederated Salish and Kootenai tribes.

BOISE — Legislators who have a big influence over tax legislation that goes before the Idaho Legislature said Wednesday they are wary of a proposal to slap big increases on the state taxes on beer and wine.

"I think they probably are a little excessive," said Rep. Donna Jones, R-Payette, chairman of the Revenue and Taxation Committee. "But Revenue and Taxation will look at any proposal any member brings." Jones, who represents a legislative district bordering Oregon, said lawmakers must be sensitive to the economic impact that raising taxes could bring.

Sen. Hal Buncher, R-Meridian, proposed big increases in beer and wine taxes, rates that would make Idaho's tax highest in the country. Bernson would like to see the revenue from his proposal spent on alcoholism treatment programs or used to cut property taxes.

Bernson's proposal could raise taxes up to 10 times what they are now.

An industry lobbyist Bill Rhoen of Boise said the best way to cut state income taxes is to raise rates on non-specific products.

The tax on a six pack of beer will rise from about 8 cents to $1.74 cents. Wine taxes would increase from about 9 cents a bottle to about 64 cents.

The vice chairman of the House tax panel, Rep. Jim Keimper, R-Ablon, said similar proposals have surfaced in the past.

He said in the past, the committee had supported the Idaho industries without piling taxes on them.

"I do not believe the tax committee member," Rep. Dave Blevins, R-Meridian, said perhaps it's time to look at the beer tax, which hasn't been increased since 1951.

But he said there are many lawmakers against raising taxes and putting the revenue into a dedicated fund, which can't be used for any other purpose.

Woman killed in shed fire; Investigators blame overloaded cord

BOISE — Investigators said an overloaded extension cord and water apparently caused the fire that burned down a shed and killed a woman who may have been living there.

Deputy Fire Chief Steve Minnis said the woman identified by the Ada County coroner's office as Catherine Hansen, 44, has a history of alcoholism, a condition that immediate recognition in Tuesday night's blaze. It was a Wednesday morning.

Minnis said a man renting the house adjacent to the shed apparently had loaned Hansen a 20-foot-long extension cord, which was plugged into a multiple outlet in the shed along with the entire television set, microwave oven and space heater.

"We believe the cord failed at the connection, burned through the carpeted wooden floor and ignited the shed," Minnis said.

"With an extension cord that long, it's extremely dangerous," he said.

Vandal challenge shows UI to Latin American Students

Yvonne Wagner

Grace Salinas, president of OELA, will remember two things about last weekend: her 24-hour round-trip to southern Idaho on a bus and the success of the leadership conference she helped organize.

OELA, Organización de Estudiantes Latinoamericanos, which is made up of, but not limited to, students of Latin American descent invited 22 top high school students from southern and central Idaho to visit the University of Idaho last week as part of a new program called "The Vandal Challenge."

The program was sponsored by the Latin American student organization and UI Student Affairs, with the goal of providing information about UI to Idaho high school students, and hopefully recruit them for their higher education.

OELA members decided to organize the conference after attending the Idaho Hispanic Youth Symposium in Sun Valley last spring. "We went down there and found out that a lot of students didn't know about the UI," Salinas said. "The students who were interested said they really weren't getting the information they needed, like material in Spanish." After a long and noisy bus ride, the excited students arrived in Moscow on Thursday morning.

Both Thursday and Friday they slept in the Residence Halls where they were housed by 22 UI students.

Alvaro Almanza, a 17-year-old senior from Skyline High School in Idaho Falls, thought it was a good idea for them to stay in the dorms; it gave them the opportunity to experience a major aspect of college life. Almanza came to the conference to learn about what the College of Business at UI bus to offer him.

The students attended a variety of presentations, including information on preparing for ACT and SAT tests, and financial aid, marketing themselves for scholarships, and cultural programs at UI. Students also went to the UI-Boise State University volleyball game on Saturday night where they helped cheer the Vandal to victory.

The group was also given the opportunity to attend a class relating to their potential major, accompanied by an OELA member.

Laurelia K. Herndon, an OELA member and senior majoring in criminal justice and sociology was pleased they were able to give students the chance to sit in a college class. "It gives them this opportunity to get a feel for the learning environment in a college atmosphere."

Alvaro Mendoza, an 18-year-old senior from Rexburg, Idaho, came to the Vandal Challenge conference to open his eyes to what was available to him and "to get his feet wet." He enjoyed meeting other people and particularly appreciated the opportunity to get to interact with some of the university leaders.

A professor panel, made up of teachers from a wide variety of departments, including sociology, engineering, forestry, wildlife, and criminal justice addressed the students and informed them of the different types of courses available on campus.

Salinas said the group has received a great deal of support from across the campus. "There isn't a large number of Latin students coming to the UI right now," Salinas said. "But that could change if we expose potential students to higher education and give them a chance to see what college life at the UI is like."

Cycles must heed same laws as autos

DEVER HAMMS
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

The Moscow Police Department receives many complaints about bicyclists riding on the wrong side of the road on Sixth Street between Deakin Avenue and Line Street. Most of the complaints have consisted of motorists noticing bike riders riding on the wrong side of the road in the bicycle lane that is on the south side of Sixth Street. "Some of the bicyclists I have stopped have told me that they were riding the wrong way as there was no bicycle lane on the north side of the road. This is incorrect," Officer Tom Weber said in a press release issued by the police department. "There is a bicycle path on the north side of Sixth Street that runs from Deakin Avenue to Line Street."

He said that this is the reason there is no bicycle lane painted on that side of the road. Weber also reminds bicyclists that under Idaho code, "any person operating upon a roadway at less than the normal speed of traffic at the time and place and under the conditions then existing shall ride as close as practicable to the right hand curb or edge of the roadway."

Bicyclists must heed laws and are entitled to all of the rights of motorists, which includes riding the bicycle in the same direction of other vehicles.

"The Moscow-Pullman Highway lanes are fine, other than that there's no other ones except on Sixth Street," he said.

Weber said that they do make a difference, but motorists should pay more attention to the bicyclists.

"It seems like every time I go out on my bike I either come very close or see someone else almost get it. They (motorists) are not looking for us," he said.

Motorist and off-campus student Katie Cooke, a senior marketing major, said she usually never has problems with almost hitting bicyclists. "I think the bike lanes help tremendously. They allow for more room for bicyclists and establish areas for drivers to see where bikers will be."

Cooke also said that she has rode a bike throughout campus several times, and she feels better when she rides inside the lanes. Weber also reminds bikers that it is getting dark early and a light, visible up to 500 feet to the front of the ride, and a reflector visible to the rear, are required unless bicyclists stay on the sidewalk. That violation is also a $37.50 fine.

Every time I go out on my bike I either come very close or see someone else almost get it.

week spring break, or extending Christmas break.

Gordon said that Christmas break will most likely stay the same. "People seemed adamant that while two weeks were not enough, in four weeks people would get bored."

Gordon also pointed out that many UI students currently take classes at WSU and it would create additional problems to extend our Christmas break one week longer.

"I did notice that we got out a week later than schools that started at the same time as us," Jen Gill, a UI junior, said. "I think I would prefer getting off a week earlier but I would also enjoy a two-week spring break. Getting a week off earlier in the summer would be more practical though."

For now, the academic calendar committee’s main goal is to explore ideas and present them to the Faculty Council to be discussed. If the council likes the alternating week idea, the committee will proceed from there, Gordon said.

Marijuana being explored as legal cash crop in Idaho

JR WRIGHT

The prestige of government has undoubtedly been lowered considerably by the Prohibition Era. The government is now more destructive of respect for the government and the law of the land than passing laws which cannot be enforced. It is an open secret that the dangerous increase of crime in this country is closely connected with this.—Albert Einstein, My First Impression of the U.S.A., 1921

The beginning of the end is coming for the War on Drugs and it’s not being solely led by university students and freedom activists. Farmers, politicians, and even some law enforcement officials are seeing in the benefits of cannabis.

The old, conservative, prohibitive perception of marijuana Idaho has held for decades is being threatened by a new positive and freedom-promoting outlook. As the old-generation — many people our grandparents’ age and, especially their parents’ age — begin to lose their power-grip in Idaho to you —

1. How did the administration want to increase enrollment at the university?

5. What did the administration hope to achieve?

The DEA has authorized some university research fields, but not nearly those at the University of Washington, requiring elaborate and expensive safeguards to keep the plants out of the wrong hands. The “IBI kind of convicted us that with all the forcing and alarm and security systems that would be required, it would be very hard to make it commercially viable,” said a Republican who is chairman of the House Agriculture Committee. “They feel like it is still has some intoxicating stuff in it. Or it might be like the truth that grows wild on farm now and could be mixed with more potent marijuana, sort of like a Hamburger Helper for vegetable smokers.”

"The area we live in is very, very great need of some industrial development," said Head. "We’ve been trying very hard in this area to get in some economic development. I thought this might be the perfect crop for our area. We don’t have access to irrigation. As long as we can do agriculturally. Hemp is growing wild in the creeks around here right now, so I think our land would be perfectly suited for it."

Wes makes acquiring student information sound easy

JON DESMARES
QUOTED COLUMNIST

Once again, Wes Rimpl has spouted off about something that he obviously did not research when he started.

Just because someone has your student ID or your Social Security number does not mean that they can walk to the nearest pay phone and dial-up all they want on it. It is not that easy.

First, if someone asked to see your driver's license, they would write down the ID number on it, not anything else. They could then take this number to the Department of Motor Vehicles and ask for all the information on this number, for a price. That is how the new group got the information on those people. The new program probably used to show this flaw in DMV record keeping, and to show the value of student IDs. This really has no significance to your Social Security number or student ID.

If someone was to get one of these numbers, they would have to jump through some major hoops to obtain any type of information that would be useful.

The average person could not do this easily either. For a student to gain that access, one would have to acquire a staff account by either stealing the password, or creating a new account. That would, however, grant only a small amount of access. If one would want to get financial information on a student, they would have to gain access from a specific staff group. For the average person, this would be no easy task.

If one was able to get a Social Security number, the matter of obtaining the information would not be so difficult, but still not as easy as Wes made it sound. There are many databases on the Internet that allow access to names and social security numbers of everyone in the United States, so picking one off a web board would be much too trivial, if you had the choice to pick one person to get information on. One could then take the number to another database on the Internet and bring up tax records, DMV records, current job status, or how many people that they have with an immediate family.

Again, the average person muscling on the database is the easy part. You cannot simply go to Yahoo! and type in the person's name.

If Wes's point was to show the flaws that the student elections had in terms of anonymity, then he only needed to go so far as to say that requiring the student's ID number is a breech of anonymity. If he was trying to show that the university is creating an environment for hackers to run wild in, he needs to go back and do some more research.

Keep supporting campus radio

I urge the ASU to continue to support radio KUOI 89.3 FM. The station provides important services to the campus and larger community by offering regional news, community announcements, nationally syndicated issues-based programs, live broadcasts such as the Renaissance Fair, and diverse music.

Our campus station has greatly enriched my university experience. As I leave Moscow I will greatly miss KUOI.

As a listener, I've enjoyed daily broadcasts of musical genres world-wide, tex-mex, lounge, punk, techno, funk and country-rock. Each DJ has his own specialty, and many bring much knowledge and insight to their listeners.

As a DJ, this station has been an incredibly valuable experience for me. I have been able to expand my musical tastes by exploring the station's rich archive of albums which date back to the 1950s.

Playing music has been equally rewarding—a weekly session of therapy for the stresses of earning a doctoral degree.

Anyone can listen! Anyone can apply to become a DJ! Thank you KUOI! I'll miss you!

Wes is right — election was a joke

After reading Wes Rimpl's latest article in the Argonaut (Nov. 7), I decided I needed to write and say what a great job he has done with the past couple of weeks covering the latest referendum.

I am in total agreement with Wes on how the entire election was a complete joke. It was made clear to me from day one that the so-called committees did not have the votes in favor of a yes vote. Anytime that I approached one of the members of this committee to ask them a question, especially in the concern category, they would completely freak out and become defensive.

Most recently I asked them, "I'm a senior — how do you consider this building to be my building?" They gave me an reply. I also asked why they couldn't just build a new weight room, since that is clearly the only crowded recreation center on campus. Once again, I received no reply. They clearly had no grounds to consider themselves unbiased.

Finally, on Monday when the referendum came out with their tent and cookie in front of the Library, a guy had some pamphlets on why we should vote no. He asked the people behind the desk if they would leave the pamphlets on the table so people could look at them. They said yes, but as soon as he left they picked up all of his pamphlets and away and then proceeded to call him a jerkass.

I could hardly believe what I saw. I also couldn't believe that the referendum passed so easily considering that everyone I talked to was going to vote no but it just didn't add up.

Thanks to Wes for the articles — they were very informing.

Celtic wave hits Moscow

HEATHER C. FAYE
STAFF

This is the weekend of the Scottish invasion. Two prominent Celtic-influenced musicians will be playing here at the University of Idaho this Saturday and Sunday. However, while both share similar roots in their musical influence, their styles are vastly different. William Jackson plays soul-soothing harp melodies while Natalie MacMaster is a spirited Cape Breton fiddler.

William Jackson is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and takes his musical influence from the Gaelic traditions of Scotland and Ireland. He plays the "clarsach" (Scottish harp) and a number of other traditional Celtic instruments. Jackson co-founded the highly-acclaimed Scottish band Oisine and has been playing with them for almost 20 years. He also performs many solo shows, as is the case for his Saturday night show at UI.

Jackson spends six months per year touring in America and the other half both touring and spending time with his family in Scotland. "I like being in America," Jackson said. Indeed, he has been well-received here. His shows draw large audiences in Montana and North Carolina and he is a familiar voice on the National Public Radio program "A Prairie Home Companion." His concerts usually draw a mixed crowd. Some come because they are fascinated by the harp. Many come up and tell me of their distant roots in Scotland and Ireland," Jackson said.

Jackson's tunes are mellow. His melodies evoke images of mist-shrouded highlands, dotted with black-roofed shepherds and stone cottages. The voice of his harp is compelling, and soothing. He does his tranquil tunes with spirited pipes and piano. Between songs he uses his dry wit to spin amusing anecdotes and gives a history of both the music and the land from which it was born.

Jackson also performs for an audience of a different kind. He studied at the London Guildhall School of Music to receive his post-doctorate degree in Music Therapy. "People think that music therapy consists of playing music for the mentally handicapped. But it is really a way of giving them a connection to the outside world," Jackson said. He works with autistic children, cerebral palsy patients and the mentally ill. "My favorite is working with the autistic children," Jackson said. He will be conducting workshops today at Lewis and Clark State College on the subject of music therapy and Scottish harp ornamentation.

Though born of the same roots as Jackson's music Natalie MacMaster plays a much wilder brand of Celtic music. Natalie MacMaster was raised in Cape Breton which is a small piece of land off the coast of Nova Scotia. It was settled in the 1600s by Gaelic-speaking Scots that were driven from their homes in the Hebrides during the infamous Clearances. They brought with them the Gaelic language and musical traditions of the Scottish Highlands and carefully passed them down, generation to generation.

MacMaster's mentor was her uncle, Buddy MacMaster, who is an undisputed master of the Cape Breton fiddle. A lifetime of hard work for the railroad prevented him from finding fame. Natalie MacMaster, on the other hand, has been in the spotlight since childhood. She learned step dancing at age five years old, fiddling at nine and was touring by age 13. Today, at 25, MacMaster has produced four albums and toured extensively, sometimes opening for such major bands as The Chieftains and Santana. She has won countless awards in the east coast folk and bluegrass circles and is in great demand at festivals. She has gathered quite a following in her native land as well. The Celt-influenced rock scene has been gaining popularity in Canada and Cape Breton fiddlers, such as MacMasters, are in a premium.

While she does play primarily the spry jigs and reels of the unique Cape Breton fiddle, MacMaster also takes influence from the folk and bluegrass styles in America. She also has a good deal of Irish music and even a few Texas swing tunes in her repertoire. Don't expect to be sitting down through one of Natalie's concerts. Her music is highly spirited and infatuated and she steps as she plays, sometimes delivering waist-high kicks as she wails with fervor upon her fiddle. While she does play a few soulful tunes, most of her show will keep your hands clapping and your toes tapping.

Jackson will be playing on Saturday, Nov. 15 at 7:30 p.m. in the University auditorium in the Administration Building. MacMasters will be performing Sunday, Nov. 16 in the SUB Ballroom at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are available through G & B Select-a-Seat (1-800-325-7328) and the SUB Information Desk (885-6484). Spicy ballet visits Beasley

The Elisa Monte Dance Company will be supplying the audience Sunday night with a favor of Cajun flair.

In a piece entitled Feu Follet, the troupe from New York City will combine techniques from balado, Cajun folk dancing and modern dance. The 55 minute long piece is a Cajun love story based on a poem by Henry Wadsworth. The title, meaning "creepy fire," describes the marsh lights often seen on the Louisiana bayous. The piece is only one of three dance works to be performed.

The narrative ballet, created by choreographers Elisa Monte and David Brown, traces the history and stories of the French migrants who were forced to leave Canada after the English invaded the area. "It was really kind of a horrible historic tone," Monte said. "People were just thrown on ships arbitrarily and families were separated. It was a very cruel act that happened."

Monte and Brown, a husband and wife directing team, traveled to Louisiana to research the Cajun culture in hopes of bringing back its vitality and energy into their work.

"I was very impressed with the culture," Monte said, "It's one of the few in the States that has a dance and music culture that is still very much alive. You'll go to the dance halls and there will be children, parents and grandparents all together. It's quite common for a family to go dancing two or three times a week." Original music for the dance was also influenced by musicians and dance halls from the area.

Music by composer Prokofiev will be the inspiration for another piece, Sensu Unico, to be performed that evening. The United States debut of this piece after a tour in France will be marked by the Pullman performance.

By request, Monte's signature pieces, Trending, will also be listed on the program. This duet, described as personal and quiet, was Monte's first piece.

Monte has danced professionally since the age of 11 and has worked with such dance greats as Lar Lubovitch. She described her decision to dance for a livelihood as a personal need. "We all struggle through life trying to understand why we're here and what we're doing. For me, dance has always been my way of communicating — finding answers," Monte said.

The troupe, lead by Monte and Brown, is currently celebrating their 16th year as a professional dance company. The company is internationally recognized for their virtuosity and innovation, and in 1982 the troupe won the award for Best Company at the International Dance Festival of Paris. Managing director Amy Blackman listed several of the 39 countries visited including those in Europe, Asia and North America.

The current eight member troupe is preparing for a tour in Russia. "Russia has such a strong dance tradition, it will be interesting to bring our dance there and be able to exchange ideas," Monte said.

Dancers in the company come from a wide range of backgrounds, explained managing director Amy Blackman. Members and directors come from many different countries including Jamaica, France, Japan and the U.S.

You could be the Argonaut’s Centennial Marketing Intern

The intern will work with a steering committee on the Argonaut Centennial Celebration to brainstorm promotional ideas. The internship will involve initiating ideas and implementing them with the help of the steering committee. The overall goal: to facilitate the Argonaut becoming more “visible,” in addition to bringing the celebration to the attention of the campus and community.

Annual Recycling Day tomorrow

KIKE CALVO

Communities all over the nation will be celebrating National Recycling Day on Saturday.

Moscow has a recycling program that is recognized all over Idaho.

“We have a great participation rate,” said Heather Cataldo, Recycling Education Coordinator for Moscow Recycling.

“We get phone calls from other communities, asking for information about our program. The last call was from Mountain Home.”

“It is the celebration of the Annual Recycling Day,” Cataldo said.

“We will give 40 cents per pound for aluminum cans, instead of the usual 30 cents. This will be all day long, at Moscow Recycling Center. We will give free pizza and pop from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. And also, we will give products made out of recycled materials.

“The idea is to mark the community for their participation. Without them bringing materials, we won’t be here.”

“Moscow Recycling helps to promote the Green Star Program,” Cataldo said.

The Green Star Program was founded in 1990 by business and governmental agencies in Anchorage, Alaska. It was chartered later in the rest of Idaho through the efforts of the Lewiston Chamber of Commerce, the Idaho Division of Environmental Quality, and the North Central District Health Department.

“Green Star Program is federally funded. It’s a resource conservation program,” said Larry Kirkland, who works in environmental and energy engineering for the facilities management for general maintenance at the University of Idaho.

“The goal is to get business, schools and others to use more efficiently the energy, water and other resources.”

Green Star’s brochure reads that it “is a forward-thinking, pioneering effort that demonstrates that pollution prevention and energy-efficiency save money and attract customers.”

“Businesses get an audit,” Kirkland said, “so to see how they can reduce cost and waste. They give them 19 potential ideas, from which they have to perform at least 12. Recycling is normally one. The program really encourages recycling.”

Green Star provides standards for implementation, education for managers and employees, planning material, networking with other successful businesses on awards and recognition via media.

“Moscow Recycling has an extended educational program, funded by the City of Moscow, Moscow Sanitation Inc. and Latah County. We develop brochures and we attend community events. In the recycling process we find a problem with the distance from major cities. We have to pay shipping costs to Seattle and the West Coast. For certain materials we have to add $15-20 per ton in shipping cost. An additional cost that we wouldn’t have to pay if we were closer,” Cataldo said.

Leather fashion show steps out

T. SCOTT CARPENTER
ASSISTANT ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

Verse, Gucci. Spreague. What do they have in common? They all organize fashion shows displaying some of the most beautiful and controversial clothing imaginable. However, only one deals chiefly with metal spikes and leather.

Show organizer (and owner of Eccletica) Katherine Spreague has put together a leather fashion and gear show that will take place this Saturday. The show will transform the Moscow Social Club into a mud-splattered extravaganza, a celebration of cross-eyed skins, and a place of frolicking fetishes.

The leather fashion and gear show will open its doors at 9:00 p.m. There will be music, there will be dancing, and at 10:30 p.m. there will be people shuddering in leather apparel you can forget about seeing your mother in. Or can you?

"The pieces in our show are versatile enough that something will appeal to nearly any taste," Sprague said.

Spreague is no stranger to organizing public events. Perhaps you've been to one of the past drag shows in Moscow which attracted dress queens from as far as Seattle. Spreague was the organizer for this, as well.

The last drag show at CJ's was cancelled in what became a very controversial decision. This matter has been resolved and future drag shows will be held at CJ's. There will be a bar for those 21 and over, and a separate section for the underage with another bar of the non-alcoholic sort.

While this is the first leather fashion and gear show, there has been a leather show also brought to you by Sprague. The attendance to this show was 450 people.

"People need to show up early," Sprague warns anyone planning to attend the upcoming leather show. The place should be packed by 10:30 p.m. and the good seats go quickly.

What makes the leather show more special is the fact that most the pieces you will see were hand crafted at Eccletica in Moscow. The runway models are also from Moscow. Some of the pieces of the show, while others will be stepping on the catwalk for the first time.

Kelly Anderson, a model in the latest show, has nothing but praise for the content of the latest show. "They are incredible; absolutely amazing. Best quality leather stuff I've ever seen," Anderson said. The leather fashion show is intended for open minded adults, and because of the sexual nature of some of the gear, you must be 18 or older to attend.

"We don't legally have to exclude anyone under 18, but just for community standards we are more comfortable with that," Sprague said.

"It will probably appeal to a different audience (than the latest show), but I don't know that it will affect the turnout or how great a difference the appeal will be," Anderson said.

Admission to the leather fashion and gear show is $5. You can get in for $4 if you bring a donation of canned food with you or if you buy the ticket in advance at Eccletica. The pieces shown will be ready for purchase that night. Any other day you can check them out in Eccletica where they will always be available.

Though the year 2000 is a little more than two years away, Vandals football fans can celebrate the turn of the century a little sooner than expected.

The University of Idaho and Washington State University have signed a Memorandum of Understanding which allows the University of Idaho to move forward on plans for the Vandals to play their home games at WSU's Martin Stadium in the 1999 season.

The MOU enables both universities to move forward on a lease that would work out the details for the move to Washington State University, and may be the biggest step ever taken for Idaho athletics.

Since its move to a predominantly Division I-A Big West Conference two years ago, Idaho has failed to reach I-A status due to their lack of a required 30,000 seat minimum stadium. Martin Stadium's 37,600 capacity would allow Idaho to be declared such a program.

General comments heard every Saturday before a Vandals football game is that "why do we have to play the Chicago Cubs of college football, why do we schedule teams that are from a league that we just left?" The problem is simple: quality opponents will not play us if we do not count for postseason bowl consideration. We had California on our schedule this year but with us not reaching I-A status they dropped us from their schedule, forcing Idaho to call Portland State and ask if they would like to be tossed around for an exchange.

"The competition level and the teams we play will be raised. That's why we play; so we cannot let the things we are in competition to the better teams in the nation," said freshman quarterback Ed Dean, who will most likely be the first quarterback taking snaps in Martin Stadium, "We are obviously capable of playing at that level or I would not be stepping behind center." While playing real I-A teams will increase crowd support, it is also a financial situation.

Idaho, UCLA, and several other teams are also under consideration for the future. One of those games is worth $325,000 to the school. With games like these we would financially be able to support the additional 22 scholarships that have been given to the fall 85 for Division I-A.

What about next season?

Along with the proposal for the move to Martin Stadium, President Howard, in his presentation in Kansas City, also asked the NCAA Division I-A board of directors to waive the six game rule for I-A schools. That would allow teams to begin to schedule us now, and getting things a lot closer to the road for the 1999 season.

"Universities are hesitant about scheduling us because of the uncertainty of our situation," said UI Director of Athletics Oval Jaynes.

If the Division I-A board of directors and the boards of each institution in our conference approve the move and a lease is worked out with the two respective universities Idaho will then play in Martin Stadium.

That leaves just one more roadblock for Idaho. The move to a 30,000 plus stadium clears one of the requirements, but attendance is still in the way.

In the first four years Idaho would be required to have an average of 17,000 fans in one of those years to remain Division I-A.

With an average home attendance this season of 11,910 Idaho is surely lacking in meeting this requirement.

"I think we would get the normal attendance, and then with the better opponents we hope to pull in the several more that are needed for our attendance figures," Jaynes said.

A section of the lease would include an annual UI-WSU football game. The odd years would be designated as an UI home game for the purpose of reaching our attendance quota.

With this matchup UI would reestablish the old rivalry with WSU and should lead to a sellout of Martin Stadium each year, and would excite some players. "I think the rivalry would be big, I would be glad to get it going again," said freshman running back Willie Alderson.

For now, the future of Vandals football is in the hands of several boards of directors that should reach a decision by January. Until then Idaho will continue its domination in the friendly confines of the Kiddie Dome with their last game just over a week away against arch-rival Boise State.

"We need all the support we can get for the BSU game, said Jaynes. "It's Thanksgiving break but those that want to stay and watch a great game should do so, it would be really appreciated by our coaching staff and the players."

First year men's basketball coach David Farrar sat on a career when he was in the eighth grade. Farrar knew he wanted to coach basketball after watching Tom Brooks at Butler University.

Farrar grew up in a community that lived and breathed basketball.

"I grew up in Indiana where basketball is very important to people and the fundamentals of the game were very instilled in me. Mr. Hinkel was a person that coached for 40 years at that level and greatly influenced basketball in our state," Farrar explained.

After sensing his calling in the eighth grade, Farrar said he worked hard to understand basketball and how best to teach the game.

Farrar played for Mount Vernon High School in Indiana and went on to play at Anderson College. He admits he wasn't the most talented basketball player, but he learned a lot through his playing experience.

After receiving undergraduate degrees in history and physical education from Andersons in 1969, Farrar received his master's degree in education and group counseling from Butler University.

Farrar landed his first head coaching job at the age of 36 at Lindsey Wilson Junior College. Prior to coming to Idaho Farrar coached Harton Community College and Middle Tennessee State University.

Coach Farrar's teaching philosophy is based upon the idea of training to be successful.

"I think that if you're going to have purposeful play, you have to have that type of effort in practice. Everybody has the will to win, very few have the will to prepare to win," Farrar said.

Farrar believes his players should demonstrate an eagerness to play and a high level of intensity. He has goals of improving throughout the year and competing for the championship in the conference tournament.

In evaluating a potential recruit, Farrar likes to know the person before he sees the athlete.

He does research to find out what kind of a student the player is and what other interests they have. Farrar also analyzes the player's attitude, competitiveness, and response to coaches.

"Then and only then do I get down and analyze their athleticism in the form of foot-quickness, their size at their position, and whether they have at least one Division I skill that we can incorporate into what we do and capitalize upon," Farrar stated.

Farrar is pleased with this year's new players and realizes that there are more important things than winning basketball games.

"The people that we signed last spring are, for the majority, very good students who are goal-oriented," he said. "If you take care of all the little things in terms of how a person acts, how they dress, and how they work, winning will take care of itself." Farrar said three assistant coaches, Mark Bernson, Derek Zeck and Mike Beck, all serve different purposes.

"The assistants I hired right now today are all primarily something other than coaches in the sense that they are recruiters first or administrators first. I would never have anybody on my staff that didn't believe in kids and didn't have a teaching identity. Teaching apparently runs in the family because one of Farrar's two daughters teaches first grade and the other writes for a newspaper." Farrar hopes to see his team improve as they face NBC Thunder Monday night in Memorial Gym.
Turkey Day battles not shaping up

Barry Graham
COLUMNIST

Why in the world do we, as viewers and fans of the NFL, have to watch Detroit and Dallas every year on Thanksgiving Day?

I know that tradition is a big reason. However, it seems that the games rarely offer anything worth watching. Especially after John Madden, Fox network broadcaster, offers up his turkey leg award to the most outstanding player in the Detroit vs. anybody contest. It always seems that he awards the leg to some large offensive lineman that voraciously gobbles up the food while giving an interview.

Anyway, maybe I am tired of having to watch the game because the Lions are bad and the Cowboys are not the poster boys for quality football especially during this time of the year. Well, let's not sugarcoat the matter, I just really hate Dallas! Let's look a little deeper into the matter. How many games over the years have really been exciting? I can remember the Dallas vs. Miami game in which Texas Stadium looked like a hockey rink and Leon Lett ended up making the highlight reel with his. "We blocked the potential game-winning field goal but I wanted some glory so I ran down to the one-yard line and jumped on top of the football to make absolutely sure I could get some press." Yes, Leon, you did get some press but it was only after your rear batted the hell away in one of the biggest blowouts in NFL history, letting Miami gain the miracle win.

This year will be even worse, unless you actually like the Lions or Cowboys. For the 95 percent of the people that are not fans of those two teams, you get to see the Bears and Giants. That's right, a team that is 1-9 and a squad that has no identity.

No, if the Giants were 9-0 and the Bears resembled Chicago of 1985, no one would be complaining. However, the aforementioned factors are anything but the truth.

Next year, the Cowboys and Lions could be the Super Bowl representatives from the NFC and the two games would still lack ratings and excitement. If only the NFL would go ahead and play one game at one of the "traditional" sites, either Dallas or Detroit, and then schedule a different team to host the other.

Holyfield dumps Moore with Lewis on horizon

In many ways, Evander Holyfield's eighth-round TKO of Michael Moore was sort of redemption for the heavyweight champ. I mean even after Holyfield triumphed over Mike Tyson several months ago, even though he was bitten twice, there were still whispers of questions surrounding the "real deal."

No one questions Holyfield's heart in a figurative way. But, there was still some discussion about whether the champ would retire. Holyfield has had some physical problems in the past, especially with his heart.

However, the champ put that past behind him. In pummeling Moore, which included five knock downs, the critics and fans who questioned Holyfield in the past now have no more fuel for their fire. Holyfield's physical conditioning was never an issue in the fight as he took a few vicious shots of his own but continued to persevere.

The next thing for Holyfield is a date with Lennox Lewis, who holds the WBC Heavyweight title. The match would allow the winner to unify the heavyweight division and become the undisputed champion of the world.

Of course, nobody even knows if the match will take place. It appears as if Holyfield is asking in the neighborhood of $25 million for the fight. Also, throw in the added variable that boxing promoters, in the past few years, have give to title shots to top contenders from the three federations, the WBC, WBA and IBF. So it would appear, that the next fight for Holyfield and Lewis will be in the spring against a top contender and not one another.

Lack of ice doesn’t chill heated hockey success

TONYA SNYDER
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

Despite the noticeable lack of snow, ice, and, of course, the absence of an ice rink in Moscow, the Idaho Ice Hockey club team is putting their opponents on ice.

Seven years ago, a couple of guys going to school at the University of Idaho wanted to get involved in a hockey team, but to their dismay, the university had no such team, nor did the town have a place to play. Soon, they learned that others who were interested in starting up a team and from these humble beginnings the team first hit the ice.

Far off it was and still is. With no ice to practice on in the area, the team must go to great lengths to get in some much-needed practice time.

The nearest ice rink is Eagles Ice Arena in Spokane, Wash. Three to four times a semester the team commutes to this facility for some real practice on the ice. Here on campus, the hockey players must take to the old tennis courts next to the Wallace Complex to roller blades for the needed routine practice. With no ice, the program finds it difficult to get the work out about the team.

Not only is the monthly trek to Spokane for practice inconvenient, it’s also very expensive. Each hour of ice time for team practice runs at about $30.

Game situations are even harder. With the lack of rink time in the area, the only time the teams can compete is late on Friday and Saturday nights, with most games starting at 10 p.m. or midnight, which can take a huge chunk out of the weekend for hockey players.

This situation presents some major problems for the Vandal team. According to player and team manager Scott Squires, this situation isn’t the most effective for the team.

"Some of the bigger teams may not be as good as we are, but they have more of the practice time that we don’t, which allows them to compete at a much higher level," Squires said.

The budget for the Vandal team is very slim, with the team earning only about half the money it needs through corporate sponsorship, player dues and fundraising efforts such as selling Idaho Ice Hockey merchandise over the Web. This still leaves the team with a $5,335 budget difference each year.

Even with the inconvenience of practice and the financial situation, the UI team has seen great success this season. For the first time in its seven-year history, the team has defeated Walla Walla and Western Washington University in this fall in this their first year of play in the American Collegiate Hockey Association since becoming an independent team in 1992.

The team kicked off the 1997-98 season with two back-to-back wins over Walla Walla, 19-4 on Nov. 1 and a 4-0 defeat over the Western Washington Vulcans the next day. Both games took place at Eagles Ice Arena in Spokane.

In the game against Western, goalie Brett Wilfongen obtained his first ever shutout. Last Friday, the Vandals took on Gonzaga in Riverfront Park in Spokane where UI was handed their first defeat of the season, 2-6. But in their Saturday rematch, Gonzaga was forced to forfeit, giving the Vandals the win.

Among some of this team’s leaders are Nate Lavers who has been earmarked as a defensive force from Calgary. John Howell leads all scorers of the 25-man team with 13 points in six games so far. He is closely followed by Tracey Trudell with 12 and Rain Timmons with eight. While many of the old faces are back on the ice again this year, Squires points to about seven or eight new players, players the program hopes to retain in years to come.

The next UI ice hockey match will be held this Saturday at the Tri Cities Arena at 10:15 p.m. The next home match for Idaho is set for Sat., Dec. 13 against Washington State at the Eagles Ice Arena starting at 10 p.m.

Check out the UI hockey homepage for updated schedule changes, player stats, game summaries and UI hockey merchandise at <http://www.uidaho.edu/hockey>.
