Students say yes to Rec Center

35.7 percent of student body turns out to vote

I passed.

When asked the question "Do you support the construction of a student recreation center on the University of Idaho campus and an increase in student fees dedicated to pay for the Student Recreation Center, not to exceed $70, with the guarantee that the fee will not be assessed until the facility is open for students use?", the majority of students who voted answered yes.

Out of 4,728 students who attend the Moscow campus, 3,440 students (35.37 percent) voted; 2,288 (60.5 percent) of the students were in favor of the UI Student Recreation Center while 1,152 (33.4 percent) of students were against it, guarding against a ratio of about 2 to 1.

"This was a remarkable turnout," said Hal Godwin, vice president of student affairs. "The average turnout in a student election is about 13 percent."

"To our knowledge, this was the biggest turnout in any election," said ASUI President Jim Dalton. "It's very encouraging to know students were concerned with this matter."

Dalton said the voter turnout was higher than usual because of the fact that the election time was extended to three days and the UI Student Referendum Committee made sure that students were well informed.

"This is the first step in the decision making process," Dalton said, "and it appears the majority of the students do want a Rec Center."

The whole concept of the Recreation Center really changes the feeling of the University of Idaho," Dalton said, "Something like this allows students to get involved and create a real sense of community."

"Although there is some sense of community in the living groups and in the Residence Halls, times have changed. There are more non-traditional students and off-campus students as well. Buildings such as the Commons and Rec Center will help to rebuild that and provide recreation and social opportunities for everyone on campus."

Whether students were for the Recreation Center or against it, raising student fees is always a big concern.

"UI is one of the least expensive schools in the West," Dalton said. "We will now be in competition with schools such as Washington State and other universities who do have Rec Centers. This will make the UI of look and feel much better."

Freshman Amy Solin said she voted no on the referendum because, "I don't think we need it... I think we need to fix the problems we have."

Solin said the people voted for it didn't really care.

"Ronald Green, a sophomore, said the Rec Center would be good for the university. "I don't think it's a big of a price increase in our tuition to say no on it."

Petition for ASUI Senate districts circulates campus

JENNIFER KARMEN
STAFF

A petition is circulating campus and if enough students sign it the issue of districting for ASUI senators will appear on the ballot Nov. 19.

The petition, written by ASUI President Jim Dalton, appeared last week. There are two ways to get an issue on a ballot. The Senate can vote for it or 1,000 student signatures can put it there.

I heard through the grapevine that senators were prepared to kill or hold the bill in committee so it wouldn't get on the ballot for students to vote on it," Dalton said. "The Senate is afraid it might happen if it gets on the ballot."

Districting would divide the student body into sections proportional to living group populations. A certain number of senate seats would be reserved for Greeks (3), residence hall students (3), and off-campus students (4).

Six senators could still be elected at-large. Currently senators are elected at-large. Students vote for anyone running. The idea behind at-large elections is that senators represent all students. They are assigned living groups to visit.

"It's very easy for a Greek student to get elected," Dalton explained. "They put their petition around their house and the sorority they hang out with and they have enough signatures." Dalton said this has created a, for the most part, lazy senate. He said they do not represent all parts of the student body, are not accountable to anyone for their actions, and think their job is to go to Senate meetings and report to their living groups. It has recently been determined that the water filter system was not the factor that caused Borah Hall to flood last week. After many other buildings throughout campus began having problems similar to the residence halls, University of Idaho staff reassessed the situation and found the problem was being caused by a pump serving all of campus.

"The source of the sand is from the pump in well No. 4 that serves all of campus," Mike Sylvester, director of Facilities Management, said.

Well No. 4 is located on the north side of Highway 8 and brings the water across Guy Wicks Field.

"The only reason the residence halls were affected was because it was pulling from that pump. We knew it was a problem but we had thought when other buildings began to have the same type of thing happening. We went in and did additional testing and determined that it was sand in the pump of well No. 4."

Staff and maintenance crews then switched the water supply over to well No. 3. Well No. 3 was pulled out of the ground and rebuilt eight years ago. Sylvester said even though No. 3 may be as old as No. 4, it is sturdier.

After this discovery the university has had to reassess the amount of money spent on damages. Sylvester said just removing the pump will cost approximately $10,000 and the actual repair could cost another $10,000 to $20,000.

Some highlights of the weekly ASU Senate meeting

Open Forum (Open forum is the time anyone can address the Senate)

Jokan Trull, International Friendship Association Coordinator

Angela Rauch, ASUI Safety Board Chair

— Money to go to crosswalk lighting and safety phones

Ben Rans, Student Union Board

— Considering how to inform students on new common

Mike Broy, ASUI Productions Board

Presidental Communications (The ASUI president addresses the Senate)

— Asked Senate to consider forfeiting their pay for the rest of the semester and donating it to the general reserve

— Explained it is against the law for Idaho to charge its students tuition. Suggested Idaho go against its laws by charging

"student fees"

— Explained distance education students pay ASUI fees but the ASUI never sees this money

— Suggested an independent audit of UI to find out where money goes

— "These are the issues you should be tackling," Dalton told the Senate. "Not arguing about districting or whether the Argonaut represents you or not."

Business Senate Bills Passed

Eliminate pay to the ASUI President’s Cha of Staff

Return $1,235 to the general reserve

Appoint Ron Sandow as Faculty Council Representative

Communications (Where the Senate addresses the Senate and the student body)

Shoelaces:

— Invited everyone to a movie

— Asked senators to find ways to send money back to general reserve

— Said a leader should stay with the group, referring to Dalton going around the Senate to get districting on the ballot

— Pointed out Corrine Flowers as an anonymous writer for Guerrilla, an independent student paper

Bowing:

— Looking into getting public bicycles for UI students

Aldrich:

— Started his community service club

— Said the concept of Guerrilla is good but it is concerned with security of their facts

Lee:

— Concerned some senators not attending board meetings and refusing to write bills for students

Baldwin:

— Called Dalton a chicken for not bending the rules and letting a student run for the senate after she missed a mandatory candidates meeting

— Will not forfeit his pay for the rest of the semester

Heffelfinger:

— Looking into getting a PR administrator for the Senate

DeCelle:

— Modeled at the Women’s Center anniversary banquet

Johnson:

— Advised senators not to use communications for personal attacks

— Agreed with Dalton that there are bigger issues the Senate should be focusing on

Averitt (Vice Pres.):

— Announced she appointed Dalton to be the ASUI student lobbyist next semester

— Reminded senators if they don’t attend their board meetings they will receive a written reprimand

At a recent conference in Chicago, the University of Idaho GEM of the Mountains yearbook was awarded fourth place in the Best of Show category by the Associated Collegiate Press.

The award is the second the publication has won since the celebratory UI centennial GEM was recently referred to as the "Brown Bible" was showered with awards and praise.

Jamie Waggoner is serving her second year as GEM editor. "I want people to realize the richness and diversity of the history of our university," Waggoner said. "I want people to value their memories."

The GEM has been published since 1903, but many argue the publication never gets the attention it deserves. "I don't think we get enough attention," Waggoner said. "Something you think about down the road.

Waggoner had three main goals as editor of the GEM: regaining color in the yearbook, increasing campus awareness and winning an award. So far, she's three for three. The 1996-9 GEM had 16 full-color pages, increased sales and has now won a national award.

"The GEM editor refuses to rest on her laurels. This year's book will feature more diverse coverage of campus events and organizations, as well as more coverage of off-campus events," Waggoner said. "I want more behind-the-scenes coverage," said UI Sports Editor Sam Dyer. "There's a lot going on about where we're going in building campus athletics."

Waggoner "one of the best GEM editors in history. Her biggest attribute is organization, but she has a real passion for this book."

The GEM is also working to save money. Waggoner negotiated the publishing costs for this year's book with Taylor Publishing Co., and was able to lower the printing costs $6,000 from last year, while retaining the number of color pages.

Photographer Jack Smith is in his second term with the GEM, and sees much improvement in the book. "It's less ad hoc now and it's a more concrete book with better photography."

Aside from its value in preserving history, Smith describes the GEM as a vital "learning experience employing students in what they might do in the future."

The University of Idaho Alumni Association will recognize 40 outstanding students at the Awards for Excellence Banquet Dec. 4.

The banquet will honor the UI's top students and the professor who has "had the most impact on them during their college career," said Temple Kinyon, alumni relation for the Association.

Faculty members voluntarily and anonymously submit nominations briefly describing the achievements of the students. Once all the nominations are in, a panel of judges, consisting of faculty, staff, alumni and friends of the university choose 40 award recipients. This year over 160 students were nominated by their professors.

Nominated students are asked to recognize a faculty member who has been an inspiration or has had an impact on them.

Those students who receive the award are then chosen to honor the professor they have chosen.

"It is in a way, to honor outstanding professors as well as outstanding students," Kinyon said.

"The Alumni Association takes great pride in developing and sponsoring this prestigious banquet. It joins our top scholars with outstanding faculty and other university leaders who are spending the time to make outstanding education possible here at Idaho," said Tim Heltek, program advisor for the Alumni Association and the organizer of this event. "We all understand how important outstanding students are to the university, state, nation, and yes, to the world.

The banquet will feature motivational speaker Elaine Ambrose, an active UI Alumna and former Associated Board member. UI President Bob Hoover and Alumni Association Director Wayne Rush will also speak.

They do not investigate issues or actively engage students.

Senators are divided on the petition and on distancing. Some like distorting don't like Dalton's proposed amendment. Some think as Senator Sam Aldrich does. He believes the Senate represents those who are not represented. These are the people who visit the Senate office and vote in elections.

Washington State Senator Mahmod Shiel message to push a resolution through stating that all 13 senators had no official opinion on Dalton's amendment calls the proposed amendment an example of "legislative pork." The senate voted not to use the meeting to consider the resolution and left the bill in committee.

Many senators argue the problem is not the system but the students. "The problem is student apathy rather than where they live," explained Senator Rebecca Coyle. Hoyt is not retarded to the issue of empty seats at Senate meetings Wednesday at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Building.

There are 7,000 students in the ASUI body. More than 10, probably closer to five, of these students have come to just listen at Senate meetings.

The petition will get a proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot so students can vote on it. The amendment has three components. (1) It allows for the creation of Senate districts. (2) It adds three senators to the Senate. (3) It adds one more day to do vote.

After the petitions went out, Coyce sent an e-mail to senators and other ASUI leaders. She wrote, "President Hoover knows that if he placed this proposed amendment in front of the Senate that in all likelihood this would never pass the Senate and would not be placed on the ballot."

She called Dalton's petition a "political play."

She said the petition combines three unnecessary issues. She saw no reason to add three senators.

A "political play for what?" Dalton fired back electronically to the long list of e-mail accounts. "FAIR AND EQUAL REPRESENTATION? YES! That is what this is all about. CHANGE! The Senate is afraid of change, maybe even afraid that this change will force them to be accountable to students."

Dalton countered by saying the three issues are connected. He said increase in senators is to insure a fair proportion of Senate seats in each district. He said this would increase accountability and representation.

Adding another voting day insures all students get the opportunity to vote, not just the ones who come to campus on Wednesdays.

Coyce also wrote that the petition is unnecessary because students voted they didn't want distorting last semester. A constitutional amendment needs a two-thirds vote in favor to pass. The amendment was 80 votes short of passing last semester. Sixty percent of the students who voted favored in districting. The amendment needed 66 percent.

"Everyone is kind of tip-toeing around the fact that this is also about Greek empowerment," Senator Alyson Lee said. Some senators believe the Senate has so many Greeks because Greek students are generally more involved in campus and community activities. They worry that by limiting the number of Greeks, ASUI will be limiting the number of qualified applicants.

The petition must have 1,000 student signatures by Nov. 11 for the constitutional amendment to appear on the ballot Nov. 19.
Kenyan women: same rights, different roles

KATIE BAKER

Take a glimpse into a country where wife-beating is the tradition, where female circumcision is a privilege, and where it is normal for a husband to have four wives.

But these issues may not be the norm in Africa forever.

On Tuesday afternoon, in a crowded room at the Women’s Center, two African women gave students, faculty and Moscow residents a glimpse into Africa.

Alice Nakatha and Kiti Tirima, both UI graduate students from Kenya, spoke about some of the issues in Africa, such as wife inheritance, wife-beating and female circumcision.

Nakatha, a Methodist Church parish minister who is now in the process of getting her master’s degree in English as a second language, explained the concept of wife inheritance and the practice of polygamy, using her family as an example.

In Nakatha’s family her mom was the last of four wives that belonged to her father. The concept of wife inheritance means that if her father dies, his wives and children are given to one of his husband’s brothers. The wives never leave the family in which they originally married.

“This is done to raise the children for the dead brother,” Nakatha said.

As a result, in Africa there are fewer widows and orphans that are in Western civilizations.

What makes wife and children inheritance controversial is that the wife does not have a choice on whether or not to remarry, even if she can support the family by herself.

Another disadvantage is that, in addition to the obligation to getting remarried, the wife doesn’t get to choose which of the brothers (if there’s more than one) she wants to marry.

The spreading of AIDS and STDs is also a concern.

Another debatable issue in Africa is female circumcision, which is a common practice among Africans.

Many girls have died because of severe bleeding.

― Alice Nakatha, UI graduate student

When girls are old enough, many undergo a circumcision in order to be “accepted by the tribe.” Nakatha said that she was not allowed on as a step child but as a tradition, a stop that all women should go through.

They have the operation done during their school break so they have enough time to heal. The healing process is called the scarification period. During this period a group of the respected women instruct the girls on how to be a good wife.

“The women learn how to become responsible members of the community, and how to treat their husband and children,” Nakatha said.

This practice has become controversial because it can be dangerous to the woman’s health.

“Many girls have died because of severe bleeding,” Nakatha said. However, if the operation isn’t performed, Nakatha added, then women don’t get instructed and they become irresponsible women in the community.

Once these girls grow up and marry, they are expected to satisfy all the needs of their husband, if they fall in any way, the husband is entitled to beat her.

Wife-beating is engrained in the African society but is not looked upon as abuse. However, it is not the same as we think of it in America.

There was a specific way in which a husband could beat his wife, which he is taught during his circumcision. It is a stick that has soft, flabby leaves on it.

“The men are only allowed to hit the upper back,” Tirima said. “And they can’t use their hands.”

Many Americans believe that wife-beating is wrong no matter what. But for African women they are born between two cultures. One culture is their own African tradition, in which wife-beating a way of life. The other is the Christian/Western culture that the British originally brought to Africa, in which they believe that any sort of beating is demeaning to anyone.

Dr. Roy Atwood, associate professor of communication who did a sabbatical in Africa for five months, said, “The African culture is so complicated — as a Westerner it’s hard to understand.”

You could be the Argonaut’s Centennial Marketing Intern

The intern will work with a steering committee on the Argonaut Centennial Celebration to brainstorm promotional ideas. The internship will involve initiating ideas and implementing them with the help of the steering committee. The overall goal: to facilitate the Argonaut becoming more “visible,” in addition to bringing the celebration to the attention of the campus and community.

This internship lasts approximately six months. Interns will receive credit for their work.

The meaningfulness of life

o, let's assume one day you will disappear without a trace of you left in the universe. And not only will this happen to you, and to everyone else, it will happen to everyone attending the university.

If this is true, our lives being meaningless?

Yes. The remaining question is how to meaningfully? Not subjecting more lives to such a reality.

The consciousness of this meaningfulness is relatively recent — it's not shared by even a small number of them, who plough on in their undiminished creations of their world. It also deals with a topic everyone could care about — overwhelming.

But if I had the power to save flora and fauna by wiping out vast numbers of human beings, it would be tempting. Me included. You want children in know of tigers or great Guerillas only in zoos (where they will eventually die)?

So you don't understand the meaning of life? Well who does? Who knows, maybe in the course of looking, we really will find something that escapes us right now.

It is terminal. We have to be selective, but once in a while we get off track on purpose for entertainment. It can be disorienting. In the end, however, when we examine our existence, "(an) unexamined life is not worth living," as some Greek who was not in a fraternity once said, we may conclude that we experienced our own lives in a meaningful way.

Actually, it took place in the very corner of our kitchen floor, with its linoleum isles. I was 10 and someone had told me that my robot was going to do before I did it, that I never could fool God. So, I stood there trying to fool God. I can be honest. I have been told to come to the conclusion that, if I am going to do the right thing in this life, I must think about the fact that I am doing. If I am not going to do the right thing, then I am not going to do the right thing.

That is what it seems to be about, anyway, being honest with everyone, especially with yourself. Power-posing just gets in the way and makes things unnecessarily complicated because there is no need to do the right thing. Because people that are honest have been honest for so long and will continue to be honest for so long, we should be careful with our lives.

The tragedy and the aftermath of that followed left a permanent scar on our school and the Greek system. Since 1993, Greeks at the University of Southern Idaho have gone to referendum with regards to alcohol. From the misinformed southern Idaho media to the overzealous Moscow Police Department, everyone seems to be waiting for the next Greek screw-up. This should be a cause for concern.

As many of the fraternity and sorority members who were here at the time of the Coughlin accident continue to spend their time reminding their younger members the importance of personal responsibility with alcohol, another Coughlin-esque accident could be devastating for the future of the Greek system.

Too many people have put in too much time, effort, and money into our system to have another, and another, and another, and another. It could be devastating for the future of Greek life.

I think that it's called solidarity. Or comradeship.

Lawsuit dismissed against Alpha Phi

It has been four years since Regina Coughlin, a 19-year-old sophomore, fell from a 12-foot window ledge during a night of heavy drinking at the University of Southern Idaho. This past week, Alpha Phi sorority was the fourth and final Greek organization to be found not guilty in the lawsuit filed by Coughlin and her family.

The tragedy and the aftermath of that followed left a permanent scar on our school and the Greek system. Since 1993, Greeks at the University of Southern Idaho have gone to referendum with regards to alcohol. From the misinformed southern Idaho media to the overzealous Moscow Police Department, everyone seems to be waiting for the next Greek screw-up. This should be a cause for concern.

Test Center has benefits

Like most students on campus, I’ve been feeling the crunch of assignments as the semester approaches to an end.

I work on one assignment (at the last minute, of course) and finish it just in time to turn it in to find that at least three more waiting for me.

And then there are those occasional exams, for which I have very little preparation since I’m working on all these assignments at the last minute. Oh, the joys of college life!

What really kills me is the testing procedure.

As a transfer student, I have found little difficulty adjusting to my work here at the university as it’s not that different from what I’m used to doing. But the testing procedure is very different from what I’m used to.

Where I come from, the school has a building called the Testing Center where almost all students go when they have an exam to take.

This is very convenient for both students and teachers. The teacher prepares the exam and gives it to the Testing Center for distribution to the students. He or she can then devote his or her lecture time to giving lectures instead of exams.

The students come to the Testing Center during their free time to take the exam they need, but they usually have two or three days (sometimes including Saturdays) to take the exam. So the students can pick the time when they will be best prepared to take the exam.

The students are also allowed to take as long as they want on the exam. I recall spending four hours on some of my engineering exams.

But then again, I’ve whizzed through other exams in half an hour. It just depends on the class you are taking.

The Argonaut provides jobs for students who monitor test takers for cheating.

Contrast this with what we do here.

We have to come to class during the scheduled classtime to take the exam. We also only have fifty minutes to get through the exam. I know that some people work well under pressure, but it only makes me forget.

And on some occasions, details get lost in the shuffle. Most if you forget to put in a certain factor in your equation or forget the conditions under which an equation can be used, you could really screw yourself over. If I and others like me had time to actually think about what we are doing, then I think we’d be less likely to make such mistakes.

What I really want to say about the Testing Center idea is the philosophy behind it. Students should be tested on what they know, not on how fast they can regurgitate what they have learned.

However, most schools focus on preparing students for a capitalistic society which subscribes to the old maxim: time is money. If you can’t cut it better and quicker than the competition, you will be fired.

I believe in capitalism only as the current system we can have under current circumstances. And since it is the best system we have, we must endeavor to keep it as long as possible.

But I also think that the university would produce more reflective and competent students (and isn’t that the purpose of education?) if it adopted the idea of a Testing Center. Giving students the time to tell their instructors everything they know allows instructors to better prepare their lectures.

Instructors have the time to give lectures and help the students understand the material since they don’t give exams in class.

I’m not complaining about the way things are here, because I’m doing quite well despite my adjustment pains. I saw my midterms grade, and if I keep up the kind of work I’m doing now, my GPA won’t drop more than a tenth of a point. So I’m handling the status quo. I’m just using an alternative system.

Why the administration is willing to entertain the idea of a Testing Center is another matter.

The faculty members believe that faculty members spend more than fifty hours each week preparing their courses. They believe that students need to be more than recreational facilities, because students come here for an understanding of the world.

They believe that students should be prepared for a career and not for the size of the pool or the number of rejection letters. They believe that those who excel in their studies under the status quo, and that’s great. I am one of them. But how many students would do even better if they didn’t have to work everything during an exam?

The wolves of the Nez Perce

KIKE CALVO

Last week, Will LaPage, director of the WERC, came to the University of Idaho campus to represent the organization. WERC, as you can read in their brochure, is a nonprofit corporation which is committed to the restoration and appreciation of wild wolves for their essential role in the balance of nature. It financially supports and actively engages in programs of education, research and volunteer assistance of wolf recovery on appropriate public lands.

“Education continues to be the key to recovering wolves in the wild,” LaPage said. “Honoring the packs as ambassadors for the wild brothers and sisters holds great promise. These wolves have a message for the world that only they can tell.”

The visitor’s center in Winchester, Idaho allows people to observe the wolves of the Nez Perce, who lived under the care of photographer and filmmaker Jim Dutcher, founder of WERC, in the Sawtooth Mountains of Idaho. There is no charge for visiting the center or for viewing wolves from the visitor’s center deck. However, if you are interested in getting a closer look at the pack, trained naturalist guides will help you discover how different cultures view wolves, wildlife and nature, especially if you have the privilege of being guided by a member of the Nez Perce Young Nature Guides program.

There are two options for guided trips to view the animals. The Wolf Meadow Trail, which is approximately one-third of a mile long, takes people along the meadow’s edge to within 50 yards of the wolf enclosure, where the wolves can be watched in their natural habitat. The other option, the Wolf Woods Trail, is one-half mile long, and runs through meadow and forest and finishes within the outer perimeter of the enclosure, where the pack can sometimes be viewed within a few feet.

“Every wolf in the pack has a different personality. Their names, most of them Nez Perce, show the pack dynamics,” LaPage said. Kamots (to go free), Lakona (peaceful person), Matii (sweet and brave), Amani (to speak the truth), Motoma (he goes first), Chemuk (black) and Wahotts (howls a lot), are just some of the names of the 11 wolves in the pack.

A statement in WERC’s brochure reads, “To hear a wolf howl is a very special and wild experience. To provoke a wolf to howl is disrespectful of the wolf and its language. Human howling is unacceptable at the center.”

“The 11 member pack is rapidly becoming a symbol of shared success,” LaPage wrote in the summer 1997 issue of the WERC newsletter.

“Two miles west of town, the pack gives Winchester the distinction of being the only Idaho community with its own resident wolves. The symbolism runs deeper, with wolves serving as catalysts for numerous emerging partnerships: between the Center and the Nez Perce tribe, between the Center and the Nez Perce tribe, whose land it sits on; and between the Center and the local community.”

People try to help the organization with economic and moral support. Often, school children send letters addressed to specific wolves to the Research Center office. Tessa Bone, in particular, wrote several weeks ago, “Dear Motoma, I was glad to hear that you are adjusting well to your new home. I’m lucky to have the opportunity to support a wolf, especially one like you. This summer, in late July, my mom, dad, and I are coming to see WERC, maybe I’ll get to see you!”

Pfilbryte’s diseased mind produces good music

_A review by_ T. Scott Carpenter

Pfilbryte is not a band. Pfilbryte is not the name of John Tosh’s new album. Pfilbryte is not a horrible rash that gets worse and worse the more you rub it. Solve will not snout Pfilbryte.

Pfilbryte means good music. Pfilbryte’s new CD, _Superimposer_ , came out in stores Oct. 21. I don’t remember what I was doing that day, but I know I wasn’t purchasing any Pfilbryte.

Pfilbryte is one man. His name is Pfilbryte. Pfilbryte is the grandson of the man who created Woody Woodpecker. Woody Woodpecker never cut a CD, and if he were to do such a thing I doubt he would have used the word Pfilbryte anywhere in it.

Pfilbryte is fun to say. Say it with me. ( Phonetically) Fil-britc. There, I knew you could do it.

This CD, is for the most part, a slow and bouncy jaunt through absurdity. The music is a potpourri of musical styles. Electronic manipulations are definitely present, along with a hint of psychedelic rock.

Pfilbryte’s lyrics speak of indecipherable nonsense, butts in Pfilbryte’s wisdom.

“I have the right of way to kill with what I say! I am the yuckmoment! I cannot brush away some senseless mind decay! so mental floss me.”

Mental floss indeed. Lyrics like these might better be in my brain. One must ask themselves, “What is Pfilbryte trying to say here? Is this a desperate cry for psychological help? Should I feel guilty for finding such pleasure in listening to the plea of a tortured mind such as Pfilbryte’s?” The answer is no.

Do not concern yourself with Pfilbryte’s personal descent into Hell. Just sit back and enjoy the ear candy that such an experience will cause a person to produce.

Plug in the stereo and check up the Pfilbryte. Go ahead, do it. Pfilbryte will cause the cows to come home. Don’t expect to feel overcome by an urge to break things and jump into the walls. That’s what you desire then play some White Zombie. Then, when that CD is over, plug in Pfilbryte and relax. I’m not saying that this CD is easy-listening or anything. It’s really sort of hard to classify this CD. If I had to, however, I would put it in the Pfilbryte category.

Let’s indulge in some more lyrical bliss.

“You suck and you suck and all of you suck! But I’m great and I’m mean, and I’m strong, and I’m here! I can bench press twice as much as you and you know that makes you a fool and me oh so cool.”

Pfilbryte believes in physical fitness.

I tried playing this CD at home, but my girlfriend thought it was a bunch of crap and she turned it off. She was quick to conclude that Pfilbryte was not good, but had.

“It sucks!” I believe were her exact words. “I don’t want you ever playing that crap in this house again!” Then she began playing her Ravi Shankar CD, and was content.

 Apparently her problem was that despite the adequate music, Pfilbryte’s voice grated on her nerves like a human skull being run back and forth across a washboard. I seemed nothing like this. I think Pfilbryte could be the next Barbara Streisand.

The "realness" of the film is one of its most striking features. The characters all move through a complex and beautifully intertwined series of extremely amusing, but very plausible conflicts. In the beginning, the sketch comedy background of the film becomes overtly apparent and interrupts the flow. However, as the film progresses, we begin to see smoother transitions and the comedy is more integrated into the storyline.

The most stand-out character in the movie is Freaky-Freaky, a mail room flunky who paces joints and advice for the lovemakers through a plethora of P.O. box slots. It is worth sitting through this flick a second time just to get another look at Freaky’s wild visage peering at us from the other side of the box.

The film’s overwhelming success is all the more stunning when we reflect that it features absolutely no major stars and no fantastic special effects. None of the general draws that inspire movies’ audiences and producers to stand up and take notice are present. Yet this simple little film created by the Filbrytcs took top prize at the 1996 Hampton film festival, won critical acclaim at three others, and has received high praise from top media magazines such as Variety and Film Maker. Chandrasekhar has already landed a pilot deal and possibly a sitcom series based on the movie, from ABC.

The screening itself went along without a hitch. This was due in part to the light turnout but also by virtue of some hard work on the part of the event’s organizers. These events are coordinated off campus by an outside company called Network Event Theater (NET). According to UI Student Activities Coordinator Kris Day, the fact that an off-campus company has been organizing the events thus far has been the main reason for the chaos at the previous events such as Scream and I Know What You Did Last Summer. NET caters to 50 universities across the U.S. most of which have considerably larger populations than our own 18,717 seat theater. However, even the larger universities had to refine patrons from some of the more popular screenings.

"WSU and UCLA had to turn people away the same as we did," said Day. A number of problems have been taken to prevent the reoccurrence of previous problems. Day has been working very closely with NET to make them aware of the difficulties that occur when students are not aware that the seating at these events is extremely limited and requires a pass. NET will also post information about the events on all flyers for future events. Passes will be available a week in advance at the front desk of the SUB on a first come, first serve basis.
Community Theatre more than meets the eye

Audience members are doing double takes of character Alfred Doolittle in Moscow Community Theater’s production of Pygmalion. It’s not bad eyesight, or a statement the stew is making about cross-dressing, there is just a woman’s figure standing behind the costume for the play’s father figure.

Language Moscow Community Theater veteran Troy Spreke can add this male role to the wide range of characters she’s played. Spreke was picked from auditions by Director Mark Dodd because she was clearly the best actor for the job.

“A traditional problem with community theater, at least from my own perspective, is that you always have more difficulty getting male actors than you do female actors,” Dodd said. The recruiting of women for male roles is not unheard of, and is just one of several quirks community theater is known for.

All cast and crew members of community theater are unpaid volunteers who get involved for the sheer love of it. Most of those involved have outside jobs and families, and finding participants who are willing to balance a rehearsal schedule that runs as often as five times a week is not an easy task.

Volunteers for the Moscow Community Theater productions come from all walks of life. “We have both high school and university students working for us, teachers, mothers... even a local plumber who builds the set,” said theater president, Jerry Schultz.

Community theaters are known for having to run on a very tight and limited budget. Fortunately, this problem is eased with help from the University of Idaho theater department. The department often shares equipment and costumes with the community theater.

The Moscow theater receives little outside funding and exists from door-to-door, explained Schultz. Musicals and well-known shows draw the largest crowds and the most revenue. This season’s performances do not differ, and will include Men of LaMancha in the spring and the non-musical drama The Crucible Feb. 5-7 and 12-14.

Pygmalion, the first show of the season, is the same story as the musical My Fair Lady. Like the musical, the play is about a cockney flower girl-sounding lady with help from her mentor, Professor Henry Higgins. Tom Garfield plays the Englishman knowledgeable in proper etiquette, and Christiane DeZelar-Tiedman plays Eliza Doolittle, the flower girl. Recognizable names from other community productions include Jewel Hunter, playing Mrs. Higgins, and Tom Brands, playing Col. Pickering.

Although both the musical and the play one with sweet romance and light comedy, they are actually quite different.

“Making the musical a lot was changed,” Dodd said. “Issues about gender and class, which are both pointed in the play and still relevant, were sentimentalized in the musical.” Dodd is making his directing debut with this show, but has performed with the community theater before, including a production of Agatha Christie’s Ten Little Indians last season.

Performances of Pygmalion continue this weekend on Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. at the Moscow High School Auditorium. Tickets can be purchased at the door or at the Moscow Chamber of Commerce and are $6 for adults and $3 for students and senior citizens.

The Vandals, which are coached by former Idaho head coach Darlene Bailey, have been with the volleyball program for 15 years, but resigned. BSU cited differences in coaching philosophy as reason for her leaving. BSU will continue to honor her contract, which runs through June 30, 1998.

Russel was picked on Dick Leake on Oct. 28 and was not present for the team's recent road trip to New Mexico State and Texas. Nine-year assistant coach Mike Woller took charge of the team for the trip in which the Vandals racked up two victories, 3-0 over NMSU, 3-2 over UNM. Woller will take over as head coach for BSU for the remainder of the season.

The Vandals have picked up their game considerably since the Boise match-up. At one point ranked last in the Big West in digs, UI has picked up their defensive game and is currently tied with Nevada for third in the Big West leader in digs, Cal State Fullerton. BSU falls right behind Cal State Fullerton's 17.14 digs per game average with 16.6. Idaho has also surpassed the 200 hitting percentage mark for the first time since in season in Michigan Aug. 29.

According to Ferreira, Idaho is playing a different and better brand of volleyball than when the two rivals schools first met. "We're starting to get better at system volleyball," Ferreira said. "The better in-system our blockers are, the more balls we're going to dig. When the front row does their random things at the net, whether they're unaccomplished or reaching, they're playing out of the system."

Individual players have also stepped up as of late. Senior Javi Hyman is a consistent and effective force for Idaho on the court, where as she also just starting to show signs of her new aggressive net attack earlier in the season. Jessica Moore, one of the all-time greatest volleyball players in Idaho history is still dominating the Vandals defense, recording six straight double-doubles. Even the return of Shalane Lynch, despite her limited playing time, has brought some fire back to the team since her return.

Several BSU players have also had standout seasons. Setter Brandt Manulis has recorded her second triple-double of the year as the posted 13 kills, 11 digs and 45 assists against North Texas.

TROY WILSON sports editor

While the Vandals have struggled with their defense, the Broncos have dominated with their offense. The Broncos' offense has been firing on all cylinders over the last several weeks.

The defense has also improved as the Vandals have been holding onto a lead lately. The Vandals' defense has been allowing just 15.3 points per game while the Broncos have been allowing only 10.8 points per game.

In addition, the Vandals' offense has been struggling as well. The Broncos' offense has been scoring 15.2 points per game while the Vandals have been scoring only 10.1 points per game.

The Vandals have also had a tough time with their season record. They are currently 3-24 overall and 1-16 in the Big West Conference.

On the other hand, the Broncos have a strong record of 21-5 overall and 14-2 in the Big West Conference.

The Broncos have been the dominant team in the Big West this year, and they look to continue their success in the remaining games of the season.

In conclusion, the Broncos have the upper hand in this upcoming game against the Vandals. With their superior defense and strong offense, the Broncos are poised to win this game.

Boise State has a solid rushing offense and possesses one of the league's top rushing defenses. The Jaguars have Mark Brunell and a core of flashy receivers. Either team has a shot at playing in the championship game.

The sleeper in the AFC could be the Kansas City Chiefs. The Chiefs have balanced everyone and finally have some big play potential on offense with the additions of quarterback Elvis Osefa and receiver Andre Rison.

At 7-2, Kansas City only trails Denver in the AFC West by a game and looks for forward to a showdown in December against the Broncos at Arrowhead Stadium.

This writer's picks, as of November 7 are Jacksonville in the AFC and San Francisco in the NFC.

Of course that all change provided the New York football Jets continue to confound the experts, including myself. Besides, the Jets are 6-3 and atop their division. Last season, they won one game out of 16.
The NBA changes faces

The NBA season opened last weekend with dozens of players and coaches still trying to memorize their new addresses. Despite all of the off-season commotion, most of the teams should remain at basically the same level as last year.

The Eastern Conference will be dominated by Chicago as usual with New York and Miami putting up good fights. The Western Conference is wide open with Los Angeles, Seattle, Utah and Houston contending. The division races will be fun to watch as new players and coaches settle in.

The Atlantic Division will feature a showdown between bitter enemies New York and Miami. The Knicks and Heat sparked a fierce rivalry in their seven-game series last year that included one of the better brawls in recent history. Both teams have made minor changes and should be slightly improved. The Washington Wizards should be close behind, battling with Orlando for third in the division. A team that could surprise people in the Atlantic division is New Jersey. The Nets have a trio of athletic guards in Sam Cassell, Kendall Gill and Kerry Kittles.

Chris Gatling will provide solid post scoring and Brian Williams is a rebounding machine. Add to this group rookie Keith Van Horn and this team may be able to sneak up on some teams.

The Central Division has several solid teams, but no one to directly challenge Chicago. The Bulls are without Scottie Pippen until at least late December, but Jordan will carry the load and they should coast to the number one seed in the playoffs.

Detroit and Atlanta are both one step behind the Bulls. The Pistons will, as always, rely on Grant Hill, but they have acquired Brian Williams who can do damage in the post. Atlanta will again rely on its suffocating defense and balanced scoring. The Hornets picked up guards Bobby Phills and David Westley along with forward J.R. Reid to help them reach the next level. Forward Glen Rice can flat out score and Anthony Mason is probably the most underrated player in the league.

An exciting team to watch in this division will be the Milwaukee Bucks. Guards Terrell Brandon and Ray Allen are very talented and should be able to give forward Glenn Robinson plenty of scoring support. The Bucks, like a lot of teams, do not have a good center and will have to fast break a lot to make up for it.

The Midwest Division is relatively weak, but Utah and Houston will have to be reckoned with in the playoffs. These veteran laden teams will try to win it all without making any major alterations from last year. San Antonio has been hypothesized as a contender this year despite winning just 20 games last year. A healthy David Robinson and top draft pick Tim Duncan are bringing high expectations to Spurs fans. If Sean Elliott and the rest of the supporting cast can remain healthy and produce when needed, the Spurs could challenge the Rockets and Jazz.

The Timberwolves are still improving and will go as far as forwards Kevin Garnett and Tom Gugliotta carry them. One team that will not improve this year is the lowly Denver Nuggets who will be very fortunate to win 15 games after trading Antonio McDyess.

The Pacific Division will be very exciting — a lot of young talent and contrasting teams. Seattle has an entirely new look.

Vin Baker replaces Shawn Kemp at power forward and he should benefit greatly from playing with Gary Payton. The Sonics have also picked up veterans like Dale Ellis and Jerome Kersey to join Sam Perkins and Detlef Schrempf. They have plenty of experience as long as all of these stars can endure the 82-game schedule. Los Angeles is scary with a healthy Shaquille O'Neal and a tremendous supporting cast. The Lakers added small forward Rick Fox and youngster Kobe Bryant gets better every game. Portland is another young exciting team. Despite all the attitudes, the Blazers are a good team and as the young players mature, they will only improve.

The most exciting team in the entire league this season will be the Phoenix Suns. After providing endless entertainment against the Sonics in the playoffs last year, the Suns traded for explosive forward Antonio McDyess. Clifford Robinson is also now a Sun, and will receive plenty of assists from point guard Jason Kidd. Veterans Kevin Johnson and Rex Chapman will lead this team as they look to advance in the playoffs.

AKL captures second intramural championship

Look to better last year's 3rd place finish in San Diego

BRAD NEUENDORF

Two cars, $20,000 dollars, and another University of Idaho flag football championship later, Alpha Kappa Lambda will return to the regional flag football championships in sunny San Diego.

After being invited to the Nike Collegiate Flag Football Championship a year ago, 10 men from Alpha Kappa Lambda took the long drive to San Diego. The drive turned out to be a little longer than first imagined when two vehicles collided with each other totaling both of the AKL vehicles. This year, to save emotional distress and lack of sleep from driving, Alpha Kappa Lambda will return to San Diego via air transportation, with hopes of improving on last year's third place finish.

"Last year I had a feeling we were going to do good, but never imagined finishing in the top three," said James Patterson, fifth year senior and quarterback for the team. "This year I feel really good about it, I am having dreams of us on the championship field and we are eliminating.

A year ago the team was just one game away from seeing that championship field. After four straight victories the snowbound Idahoan fell victim to the California sunshine as fatigue set in and Alpha Kappa Lambda lost to the eventual champions Cal-State Fullerton. With a victory in the consolation game, Alpha Kappa Lambda brought back a third place trophy to the UI.

"Five games Sunday were on us, with only 10 guys most of us were going both ways and fatigue eventually took its toll," Patterson said. "This year most of the guys went just one way and that made us much better.

The team will take seven of the 10 that participated in last year's tournament along with five new members.

"We have a lot of experienced guys mixed with a lot of young talent. That's a good combination," said Dave Klukshid, junior defensive back and returning member from last year's team. "The older guys pave the way for the younger guys to step it up."

Stepping up was freshman who gave edge to AKL as they went 5-0 in the regular season mercy ruling everyone but Delta Chi, Wha Nellsie, and Pi Kappa Alpha. They then rolled through the playoffs ousting their opponents 73-24 in three games.

"The ones added speed and athleticism to an older and very experienced team," said 6-4 freshman wide receiver, Coby Bowman.

But the championship game did not come all too easy for the team.

In a game that went right to the end, Pi Kappa Alpha was unable to connect on their final drive and an attempt to take the lead when AKL intercepted the ball and was able to run the clock out giving AKL the championship, 18-12 victory.

"If there was a team I wanted to play in the championship it was the Pi's," Patterson said. "They just have great sponsorship, and I was impressed overall. I thought we could beat them handily but it wasn't an easy game.

On Nov. 22 and 23, a more experienced Alpha Kappa Lambda will look to take this momentum into the round robin tournament in San Diego. Saturday the tournament is a round robin format allowing a team to lose and come back around, with Sunday being single elimination until the last team standing is crowned the champion.
