Rumors of tuberculosis in Moscow untrue

Despite rumors to the contrary, a University of Idaho student will not become a statistic this year. Nearly 11,000 incidences of tuberculosis were reported in 1990. Rumors that surfaced last week that a UI student was infected with the disease are untrue.

There have been no reported cases of tuberculosis in Moscow, Dr. Donald Chin, M.D., and director of Student Health at UI, said.

Charles Dickens once described the disease, saying "There is a bread disease which so prepares its victim, as it were, for death;...a disease in which death and life are so strangely blended, that death takes a glow and hue of life, and life the paint and grisly form of death...which sometimes moves in giant strides, and sometimes at a tardy slugglish pace, but, slow or quick, is ever sure and certain."

Chin describes tuberculosis as an organism that damages organs and causes cavities in lungs. He said that when it breaks into the bronchial tubes, those affected would cough up blood and phlegm, which is how it spread. "It is a serious disease," Chin warned. "There is always a sensitizing stage, but if left untreated, it could kill you."

Chin explained that tuberculosis is a rare disease in the United States, but because of the immigrant population, those residing in high-risk areas, which include border states such as Texas and Arizona, need to be tested to see if they are sensitized to the disease. Most health-care organizations, such as nursing homes and day care centers, require their employees to be tested for tuberculosis.

Chin said there are two stages of tuberculosis and that when a person is determined sensitized or high-risk, they are not contagious. Those infected are only contagious when the disease becomes active and sweeps into their lungs, where it can become airborne.

Some signs of tuberculosis are weight loss, chills, fever, lethargy, and coughing up blood. The hallmark of the disease, Chin said, is night sweats. "It is a mimic of many illnesses and a hard diagnosis to make," he said. "It is a smart organism and hard to detect."

Those experiencing symptoms of the disease are given a PPD skin test to determine if they are, in fact, at risk of getting active tuberculosis. Those fewer than 35 years old will receive free medication that lasts about six months.

Individuals diagnosed with active tuberculosis remain on treatment for as long as a year.

Mosby's Medical and Nursing Dictionary explains that if tuberculosis goes untreated, the tuberculosis, small nodules, enlarge and eventually enter the lung cavity, spreading by means of blood vessels.

The philosophy in the United States is to treat as soon as a positive skin test is noticed, but, Chin explained, some countries have different treatment processes. The problems occur when the treatment causes the individual to have a positive skin test, meaning if they were to be given a PPD skin test, they would show signs of being sensitized to the disease. When those individuals enter the United States, it is at the discretion of medical staff because most physicians have no way of telling if they truly are infected with tuberculosis.

Chin said the disease is preventable if individuals have good hygiene and periodically get tested if they live in a high-risk area.

Public defenders decline to take murder case

MOSCOW — Latah County commissioners warn they will oppose a judge's order to appoint a new public defender for a University of Idaho student charged with killing his infant daughter.

Second District Judge John Stiegman approved the appointment of Jim Stebe to defend David Pettit on a first-degree murder charge. The county's contracted public defenders have stated conflicts of interest and inexperience as reasons for appointing an attorney able to handle a capital case.

Pettit is accused of causing a 15-week-old Rebeckah Pettit's fatal brain injuries, consistent with being violently shaken.

But that means the county will be responsible for Stebe's $60-per-hour bill. The commissioners already have a $130,000 contract with public defenders Steve Maharfy, Greg Dickson and Brian Thie. All three have declined to take the case.

Commissioner Harry DeWitt said the county will not pay more money for another public defender. If three attorneys felt they cannot do the job, Stebe's sanity should come from their contract, he said.

Maharfy is the only lawyer without a conflict, but told Stebe he is not qualified to be lead counsel for Pettit.

"Maharfy is under contract to do it himself," DeWitt said. "And if he's not qualified, he should find someone that is qualified and pay for it himself."

The court-appointed statement says anyone can be excused only if there is a legal or ethical conflict found by the court.

Idaho Sen. Kempthorne giving up seat to run for governor

BOISE — Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, a show-to-in for re-election next year in heavily Republican Idaho, said Wednesday he is giving up his seat run for governor, instantly making him the front-runner. Kempthorne's plans had been the subject of speculation since Sept. 17, when Republican Gov. Phil Batt, 70, announced he would not seek a second term.

Kempthorne, 45, tied his decision to the GOP's success in returning power to the states.

"We have started something that cannot be reversed, and that is the action we will continue to shift from Washington, D.C., to the capitals of the states," Kempthorne said at a news conference. "I relish the chance to be at the center of that action."

The three other likely contenders to succeed Batt — all Republicans — said they would forgo their offices rather than oppose Kempthorne in a primary.

Idaho's Democratic Party has been so devastated in the past two elections that it will be hard pressed to come up with a serious challenger.

Republican Rep. Michael Crapo indicated Wednesday that he will run for Kempthorne's Senate seat.

That gives former Rep. Richard Stallings, a Democrat, a chance to reclaim the southern and eastern Idaho House seat he held for four terms. Stallings lost to Kempthorne in the 1992 Senate race.

Scholarship remembers Ismat Sheikh

ERIN SCHULTZ/staff

"Everyone you talk to would say her love was the best thing probably," said University of Idaho sophomore Mahmood Sheikh when speaking of his mother, Ismat Sheikh, who died last spring after an eight-month battle with brain cancer.

Ismat Sheikh was active both in the Moscow and UI communities. All three of her children—two sons and a daughter—are attending UI presently. Her husband, Abdul-Mannan Sheikh, earned his doctorate in geology from the UI, and she herself took classes offering a bachelor's degree from the University of Punjab in her homeland. Today, a scholarship to benefit international students is being set up in her name.

"She was big on promoting international understanding. She believed you should start when kids are young. She was so involved with international students all her life," said Amtul Sheikh, the oldest daughter of the Sheikh family. Ismat Arifa Sheikh came to Moscow in 1971 from her home of Lahore, Pakistan. She married her husband, Abdul-Mannan Sheikh in the same year. Ismat Arifa Sheikh worked at Lake Whalom Elementary School as a staff assistant. She helped the school establish an international week, which will now be celebrated in her name.

A past president of the International Women's Association and member of the International Friendship Association, Ismat Arifa Sheikh earned the IFA's community service award for 1997. For many years during her life in Moscow, she prepared Thanksgiving dinners for more than 100 people — family, friends and international students who otherwise didn't have a place to celebrate.

"Her main concern was people who were here alone," said Mahmood Sheikh.

Ismat Sheikh's memorial scholarship was set up to help defray the cost of textbooks or reference books for one international undergraduate each year. "My parents always talked about it (setting up a scholarship) causally, something to do if one of us died. Education was a very big part of our family," said Amtul Sheikh.

Recently, donations are still being collected for the scholarship fund. Sue Eschen, director of Gifts and Trust Administration said it is in their intent to award the first scholarship in the spring of 1999. Applicants will be selected by a committee consisting of a representative from the Sheikh family and representatives from the International Programs Office. They will be judged on grade point average and record of student leadership and campus community service, said Geneese Way, assistant director of International Programs.

"We didn't pay away, we got so much support from the community. Some of my fraternity brothers attended the funeral, so did faculty, staff and students — we got so much support that this is also our way of returning the appreciation," said Mahmood Sheikh.

"The biggest thing about my mother was that she supported us all. She was there for all of us at every event...She just told us to do 110 percent," said Amtul Sheikh. "I think it's a good way to remember her. This way she's still involved. She's still helping people."

People wishing to donate to the scholarship should contact the Gift Receiping Office at 885-6059.

Interested applicants can get more information about the scholarship from the International Programs Office at 885-8984.

Attention Students!

Midterm grades for Fall 1997 will be available on the Web registration system.

The address for the Web registration system is http://www.uidaho.edu/registration

Midterm grades will NOT be distributed in the Registrar's Office as in the past.

Midterm grades will be scanned and available for viewing as soon as they are received in the Registrar's Office. Midterm grade reports are due from the faculty by 1:30 PM on Monday, October 20. If you do not find a midterm grade for a specific course by the end of the week, contact your instructor.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT YOUR MIDTERM GRADE REPORTS

Why we strongly encourage all undergraduate students to view their midterm grades:

- Viewing your Midterm grades will confirm how you are doing in your courses. If you see any surprises or reasons for concern, you will have time to contact your instructor and your academic advisor for assistance and information.

- Viewing your midterm grades will allow you to make sure that your registration record is accurate. If you are not enrolled in a course that you are attending, you need to take action to add it. If a course that you are not attending is on your record, you need to take action to drop it.

- Checking the section numbers to be sure you are attending the correct one will alert you to any changes that you need to make. All of the courses on your schedule may be correct, but you need to be sure you are attending the section number for which you are registered.

- If you wait until you receive a failing grade to react to all error in your registration record, the process for correcting the record is more involved.
Find a penny? Give a penny

YVONNE WINGETT

What started with 3 cents in 1981 has since turned into $57,265.06. A penny saved is a penny earned. Terry Armstrong, co-founder and co-director of the Found Money Fund of Idaho must have been turning this proverbial phrase in his head while he was walking to work on Jan. 5, 1981. On this morning, he looked down and was delighted to find three pennies on the sidewalk by the Alpha Gamma Delta House. He stopped down to pick them up, and placed them in an old hair gel jar in his desk drawer.

It started out as a joke — the University of Idaho was poor — at the time, the Armstrong and interim secretary Carol Yenni decided to save their "found money." This provided relief from the bleak financial woes still plaguing the university.

Their plan was to have a party at the year's end with their savings. People began hearing of the fund by word of mouth and by the end of the first year it had collected $10.48 — too meager for a party, but enough to keep them optimistic.

In mid-April, 1982, Yenni and Armstrong decided to give the small treasure to the university as a trust account, "It was still just a joke," says Armstrong, "I mean, you don't just give people $44.00." But to their surprise, the University wouldn't accept it. The investment officer told them that the auditors would stay away from such a small account.

The founders decided to invest their currency in the "Fund for Academic Excellence," which UI uses to purchase stock; it then becomes part of the university's permanent trust fund. There was only one explicit condition: the money in the Found Money Foundation of Idaho (FMFI) was not to be touched until the bi-centennial year of the University of Idaho in 2089. Armstrong keeps record of the money in an apoly named, "found ledger," which was found in Colorado by an alumna who believes it was used to record mining data. Noted in this ledger is every dime, nickel and penny that was ever donated to the FMFI, the finder's name, the general location of the find, the amount, and a running total.

Nancy McCombie, one of PMFI's most loyal finders, says, "One of the greatest heights in the world is to find money and donate it to the fund. . . .I don't find a lot of money at once, but when you're consistent in finding small amounts, it really adds up." "Money finders" bring in or mail their coins to Armstrong, where he puts them in their appropriate coin jars and lets them sit and collect until they accumulate $25. He then rolls the coins, and counts down to the bank, where he deposits it into the FMFI account.

To provide for fair distribution of the money, a committee, known as the "High Law Committee" will be established in 2089.

“Unusual Finds” taken from The Found Money Fund of Idaho: Chronicle and Guide

Quentin Walker, a 20-year-old custodial veteran in the UI Residence Halls, saved all the pennies he found while at work in the Wallace complex. He turned them over to the Found Money Fund in May 1983. The $94.62 in pennies weighed over 50 pounds. He gifted the fund total to over $5,000.00.

Two $20 bills have been reported. Ads in the Argonaut failed to locate the loser, but the students who found and turned in the bills exemplify the honesty inherent in UI students.

Mabel Locke, whose tenure as professor and head of women's physical education at UI spans the time between 1930 and 1971, is a loyal finder. She presented the fund with a lucky $2 bill she found in front of the old women's gym in 1954. We still have the bill since Mabel insists that it will bring the fund good luck.

"Finding Strategies" taken from The Found Money Fund of Idaho: Chronicle and Guide

- Here are a few tips guaranteed to increase status among fund members:
  - Position yourself between the rising or setting sun and scan across parking lots.
  - Search around check-out counters. The floor near cash registers often yield good finds.
  - Look for lost coins in your change pouch.
  -人民银行 and change pockets.

- Fast food places are commonly excellent places to find money. The areas adjacent to drive-through windows are particularly lucrative.
  - Couches and over-stuffed chairs in the larger hotel lobbies are excellent places to look. Care must be taken not to gouge oneself on sharp upholstery tacks inside the couch or chair.
  - Metal detection systems are appropriate and valuable methods of finding.

The committee will be made up of one Armstrong or Yenni’s heirs, the oldest and youngest officer of UI with rank of Academic Dean, an Alumna and Foundation board member, the oldest and youngest registered students, the chief student affairs officer, and the “tallest and shortest students majoring in life science.” The committee will convene decide on the dispersal of the funds. Students and departments will be encouraged to submit proposals to the board; the primary requirement is that it has to be used to “somehow advance the image of the university.”

Currently, the FMFI has a grand total of

Pow-wow to celebrate Native American Month

JUSTIN OLIVER RUIEN

The University of Idaho Native American Student Association will hold its third annual pow-wow on Nov. 1. The celebration is designed to foster awareness of Native American culture and history and marks the beginning of a month of UI activities for Native American Month.

NAPA originated as a small group in the 1970s but today numbers about 20 active members, said Parren Penney, NASA co-chair. The group sends members to various conferences, and last year hosted the Northwest Indian Youth Conference at UI for 700 Native American high school students.

NAPA has joined with the American Indian Science and Engineering Society and Swaim-lwa, the Native American Forestry Club to sponsor the pow-wow.

"The pow-wow is a chance for UI students to learn about Native American culture and promote understanding," Penney said. Last year nearly 300 people attended the event.

The pow-wow will be located in the Student Union Ballroom and will feature two sessions of dancing, the first competitive session lasting from 1 to 5 p.m. After the first session, a free dinner will be served by NASA, followed by a second session of dancing starting at 6:30 p.m. Prize money will be awarded for 16 categories of dancing during the afternoon session.

"Our ancestors for the evening will be Otis Halfmoons," Penney said. "You are very knowledgeable in Nez Perce history, culture and the ways, and non-Indians will learn a lot. He will also explain the various dances, what the dancers are wearing and what the dances mean."

The pow-wow is one event in a series of activities to celebrate Native American Month. On Monday, NASA had a dinner to open the month's activities, which featured the Lapwai High School Indian Club singers.

On Oct. 27, NASA is sponsoring a storytelling session by Nez Perce elder Horace Axell in the Law School Courtroom. On Nov. 3, Nez Perce tribal executive Jamie Pinkham will speak on tribal issues in the Law School Courtroom. A dinner commemorating the close of the month's activities will be held on Nov. 10.

NASA has been able to raise money for the event by working at the Clearwater River Casino at Lapwai. "We've also received a lot of support from Hal Godwin, vice president of Student Affairs, from individual UI departments and private donations," Penney said.

Anyone seeking information on the NASA events can contact Parren Penney, NASA co-chairman at 885-4555.

Overseas labor: Nike is not the only culprit

J. R. WRIGHT

Comment

Multinational corporations other than Nike manufacture shoes in Indonesia. They would all like us to think that they don't; that they are not responsible for the rough stuff that goes on there.

A woman is seen at the athletic shoe section of a Foot Locker store; she seems to be the most recent of the popular shoes and the name given to the particular style of shoes and the particular brand in a random yet wide array of shoe boxes through the aisles. Along with other icons of the business Reebok, Fila and Avia also pay to get their products in Indonesia. I am positive that the reason for doing so are identical: profits from cheap labor. Nike also gets shoes from China and Indonesia. I am sure the reasons are the same there too — plus, perhaps, the added attraction of diversifying national production sites and a few can be seen in countries. Yet, I just read an article in the New York Times, "grizzly bears, "..." which are just one-fourth of the habitat available..." Yet you follow with "It (the reintroduction area) encompasses the entire Salmon/Selway..." which of course, includes non-wilderness areas.

Lastly, I question the credentials of the "world's leading grizzly experts." How about some recognition of who they are and I'd decide if they are experts or merely high-profile environmentalists.

Mr. Gruhl, I'd also like to point out a few other salient facts regarding your proposed alternative to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Draft EIS for grizzly bears.

First, there are three other alternatives, the one you favor is last (number four). The first alternative, and "programmatic" by the USFWS, omits the wolf reintroduction plan. A recovery area is designated as "experimental and nonessential" which means it is given special threats under the Endangered Species Act. As a result, the USFWS summary states, "There would be no anticipated impacts to natural resources and activities on public lands..."

The second alternative is "no action," wherein bears would be removed. The fourth alternative, which you support, encompasses a somewhat smaller area than the alternative one, but gives "full legal protection for bears" (as you stated). It is this legal protection which would significantly impact land use activities. Though the goal as stated, the legal protection given under alternative four would grant the bear status similar to "endangered." True, the Resource Organization on Timber Supply supports alternatives which ignore the restrictive nature of this alternative. Road closures would be inevitable, limiting my, and your, access to the back country. There would be no "grizzly," and a beaver population would be damaged, especially for black bears, and resource-based industries and economies would be significantly impacted.

Support of alternative four is support for environmental/government domination of our public and private lands; further distribution of where and how we live.

Lastly, comments from the public are very important. Without public input, the agencies act according to their own standards and those few public opinions they've received. Our system still works, it just takes a little participation. Comments regarding the timber supply plans will be accepted until Nov. 1, 1977. They should be directed to Dr. C. Serviere, Grizzly Bear Recovery Coordinator, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, P.O. Box 5127, Missoula, Montana, 59802. The phone (406) 543-4093, and fax (406) 532-3212.

One way for a worker to achieve a better position is to join other workers and to then bargain collectively. They have to organize and mobilize themselves. They need the protection and power of other organized workers. Unions are formed in order to protect workers. Workers are there only if they have better terms and better conditions. They are not able to withstand the employer. It is not a fair labor market.

While strike activity is legally permissible in most industrial countries, this is not true in Indonesia. The government reports that approximately 300 to 500 strikes occur each year. In 1984, in a nation with a population of 175 million, there were 39 strikes involving only 7,544 workers. Critics charge that this low level of strike activity is a result of widespread intimidation of workers through the use of worker organizations. Workers in public enterprises "are so convinced of being at the mercy of the state..." and it is not allowed to strike at all.

The story here is that as the University of Idaho could be unchanged by a strike. Our financially strapped state school is presented with a huge pile of cash by a wealthy capitalist. His money comes from the exploitation of workers who exist in miserable conditions. It's all part of the grand scheme of things. In the end, the fruits of imperialism have been placed on the table before us. Our politics must be to classify it as a classic context, almost magnificent in terms of its implications. Free Will with Destiny disguised as determinism. What can you do?

Letter to the editor

ASU needs better organization

I was very disappointed in the ASU last Tuesday and I wanted to share the events surrounding that disappointment with you.

My friend and I were going to attend the pre-screening of the movie "I Know What You Did Last Summer" and knowing that the theater would fill up fast, we got there an hour before showtime approximately 5:15 p.m. The doors were locked by 5:30 p.m. so even though we had the sign emphasizing that the doors would open at 5:30 p.m. we went in and sat down (we thought they had just decided to open the doors early).

At about 5:30 p.m. a woman came into the theater and said that everyone inside the theater had to leave because the doors weren't opening until 5:30 p.m. She was very rude. So everyone in the theater got up and came to the doors. Then someone came out and informed us that we were to stand in line. As it was starting under a sign that said "Line Starts Here." So we all moved to stand in line. As the time got closer and closer to 5:30 p.m., more people showed up, standing directly outside the doors to the theater, not in line like the rest of us. And someone came out of the theater and told everyone in line to go down to the lower entrance of the theater. So, obviously there was a mad dash for clothes and possessions that had to get on the lower floor.

Of course, those people standing in line got a better view of the theater and already seated when we were kicked out, should move to the front of the line, and forego any tickets that were opened up to the floor of the lower floor when the people who had gotten in.

In the end, my friend and myself were not let into the theater even though we had been there long enough before the people who had gotten in.

The fact is that we didn't get into the theater, but in the end, we are the ones who had to suffer. We didn't play any role in the troubles of the situation. As students, we were simply at the theater and already seated when they were kicked out, should move to the front of the line, and forego any tickets that were opened up to the floor of the lower floor.
Land board refuses money for public schools

I'm thinking of transferring to another school. I am sick and tired of those dang enviro-nimcakes, leftist weirdos running around campus. A guy can hardly escape them. I mean, I heard one ranting the other day about how grazing cattle on public lands amounts to corporate welfare. But anything he said was a communist. Rush says all vegetarians are communists. And this guy looked funny; he had a beard, too.

He was just going off. I tried to ignore him, but I couldn't. He was carrying about cows destroying native vegetation, damaging fish habitat and degrading water quality by pooping in creeks. I don't know what this guy's problem is. Cows have to poop somewhere, don't they? Besides, everyone knows that manure makes good fertilizer.

He went on and on. He said that only three percent of the beef consumed in the United States comes from public lands. He said that only 1.1 percent of the beef produced in the U.S. is grazed on lands managed by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), even though approximately 90 percent of BLM lands are used for ranching.

Then he said that BLM should stand for Bureau of Livestock and Mining. And he said the fees for grazing leases on public lands are a tiny fraction of the free market value, claiming that this public subsidy of private industry is corporate welfare. This statement convinced me, because I agreed with it. Am I turning pink, or green?

I listened as he described what he claimed to be his main point. I laughed. This freakazid environmentalist has a point? Yeah, right. He said that Idaho's school children are being cheated by a corrupt political power play in Boise. He ranted on, talking about how state endowment lands are mandated by the Constitution of Idaho to provide revenue for the public schools. He became more and more apocalyptic, asserting that auctions for grazing leases on state endowment lands are rigged. What a c*sh*y! All those feline ears are blocked.

He said that a group called the Idaho Watersheds Project (IWP) often outbids ranchers for grazing leases on endowment lands but the state Land Board denies leases to IWP because their goal is to let the land fall from years of abusive overgrazing. He said all Idaho public schools receive less funding because the Land Board won't accept IWP's auction bids.

I didn't believe him, and told him so. I told him some other things too but I can't print those here. He said to check out IWP's web site at <http://www.idahowatersheds.org> or IWP's website. I told him to go eat vegetables in Russia, if they have any. He just grinned and that really ticked me off!

I was sure that he had made that stuff up, and that there wasn't really any IWP, let alone a web site. Why in the world would anyone, besides maybe a communist, pay money just to "fix the land base?" What kind of hokey, new age crap is that? To my surprise, I found that web site. I learned, unless it's all a hoax, that IWP was indeed created to fix this. Our schools lose so much cash because the Land Board won't accept IWP's auction bids.

I glanced over to find that leftist weirdos still ranting. Doesn't this guy have any classes or homework? He must be a recreation major or something. I was very confused and wondered if he was all part of some United Nations conspiracy. I sat quietly and listened. He asked, "Why should the Land Board refuse money earmarked for public schools in this era of shrinking budgets and rising tuition?" I hate to admit it, but that is a good question.

I still don't know if all that stuff he said — and that I read — is true. And I think John Wayne and the Marlboro Man are pretty cool. And I don't buy into all that "heal the land" jargon. But if what that guy said is true, why would a red-blooded, conservative like Governor Butte refuse to accept badly needed funds for public schools?

I saw that leftist environmentalists again and I asked him that question, just for curiosity of course. He said it's because the right-know, "good old boys" club runs the state mainly representing the interests of resource extraction industries at the expense of everyone else, including school children and university students.

The Tannahill Weavers harmonize and capitalize

T. SCOTT CARPENTER
ASSISTANT ENTERRTAINMENT EDITOR

I am not normally a fan of the bagpipe. In the past, the sound of a bagpipe has sent me into uncontrollable seizures. Despite my aversion to this instrument, I found myself enjoying the Tannahill Weavers. In fact, I may have even enjoyed the bagpipes, but I will have to think about it some more.

The Tannahill Weavers played in the Urbandale last Tuesday. With 13 albums and over 20 years under their belt, perhaps they are best described as the Rolling Stones of Scotland.

The band was born in Paisley, Scotland and named jointly after poet Robert Tannahill and the town, Paisley's historic weaving industry. Founding members of the band include Roy Gullane and Phil Smillie, who added the full-size highland bagpipe to the band, becoming the first professional Scottish folk group to do such a thing.

It was after this addition that the Weavers began to attract attention. Local folk singer/guitarist Dan Maher was responsible for the Weavers when he brought them along to the University of Idaho. He began the show by recounting for the audience the time he bought four of their albums back in the 80s, saying he spent a lot of money foolishly back then, but those albums were one of the few good things he did.

The show began when the Weavers took the stage, and attempted to recreate a Scottish New Year by getting everyone in the audience to sing the chorus with them, assuring them that the Scottish words did not mean anything to them. After a self-proclaimed attempt at the audience's part, lead singer/guitarist Roy Gullane assured the audience of its quality and even though he wanted more, he was able to make the audience laugh.

The final flourishes of the show were for a group of their music to be played on the stage again in the form of the Weavers play with each other. Roy Gullane takes the last of the Weavers' music and shares the spotlight with each other, while the rest of the band sets up for the next song.

The music of the Tannahill Weavers is a blend of a Scott and a beer dance rhythm to a "pass out face first on the bar in a beautifully peaceful schmoo" sort of tranquility. I prefer the latter myself, being as how I can't even tap my foot to a beat without staring at it and concentrating.

The Weavers tour the world extensively, and when they are not in highland, they are touring the world extensively. They have been described as "The Weavers of the world," and are often heard on radio and television, and films such as Highlander III.

"Only at high altitudes" he said. "The Weavers' show was an event full of good music and laughter. Even those of you who do not appreciate their music would like this show. I did not know what to think of them at first, but now I own one of their CDs."
IWA Women host a South American afternoon

HEATHER FRYE

A lone woman stood wailing outside of the plain-wrap bungalow building holding a white laundry basket full of food and cooking utensils. Another young woman arrived and the two began to converse in a steady stream of mixed Spanish and English. The building’s key bearer arrived at last and the women hustled inside, filling the stark interior of the Married Students’ Community Center with their warm and colorful Latin voices. The kitchen came to life under the command of International Women’s Association (IWA) members Raquel Vidal and Ana Maria Von, both from Venezuela. More women arrived and the table began to fill with detectable South American dishes like rice, chutney-filled “trousse,” savory “empanadas,” and tasty ham-studded “pollo.” The varied group mingles for a while longer. Hearty greetings of “muchas gracias!” flooded away as IWA coordinator Jo Ann Trail stood to deliver the official welcome. With formalities aside, the small group of women descended upon the bounty that graced the buffet table.

So began “A South American Afternoon,” an open gathering for the women of IWA and surrounding communities to come and experience Latin culture in a casual come-as-you-are milieu. Though this gathering was smaller than previous ones such as “Africa Night” back in September, the intimate atmosphere allowed the women to converse comfortably and get to know each other.

Culture shock is imminent when one enters a new area, especially if it is an entirely new country. Students from other countries and their spouses sometimes feel isolated by cultural differences and language barriers. These monthly events, sponsored by the International Friendship Association, give international students a chance to meet with people of their own and other countries and the members of their host community. Some students go to improve their English and meet new people.

Often attend just to be surrounded by people that have a similar cultural background and speak their language. “I speak Italian and English at home. I come because I enjoy speaking Spanish,” said Liliana Rogers of Texas. Peru, Locals and non-international students attended these events to meet new people and for cultural exposure but also for practical reasons like improving their conversational foreign language skills in a relaxed setting.

“The exchange works both ways,” said Trail. The afternoon progressed. Videos of Chile and Argentina were shown. Brightly plumbed birds and panoramic views of the Patagonia mountains danced against the building’s black backdrop. The women from Chile, Ecuador, Venezuela, and Peru eagerly interpreted the visions and added stories from their own homelands. Between videos, a cooking lesson was held in the kitchen. Ela Maria Castillo, a Resource Recreation and Tourism major from Ecuador, demonstrated how to make a traditional dish called “Lapingachos.” They are little cheese filled potato patties and they are really good and easy to make. Ela’s slightly-modified-from-tradition Lapingachos recipe accompanies this article.

Columbian dancers were scheduled to perform but were unable to make it. The women filled in the rest of the afternoon with casual conversation until another party came along to claim the building. The last of the empanadas were quickly claimed and the women dispersed after a flurry of cheek-kisses and “adios.”

IPA and IWA events are scheduled monthly. In November, the IWA will be having a “Musical Afternoon” at a private residence here in Moscow. Non-international female students are encouraged to attend. An “International Afternoon” is tentatively scheduled for March 7, 1996. For more information call the IPA office at 885-7841.

The Caffeinated Rants of Labuser sucks

T. Scott Carpenter

The University of Idaho computers have done me wrong once again. Whereas I usually the victim of Mother Nature’s wrath, my own personal torment has taken the shape of a campus PC. Computers either have an allergic reaction to my natural odor (which resembles that of feet) or I am just extremely stupid. Given these two possibilities, I hope for the latter since I simply have no time to maintain my personal hygiene. Why? Because the Argument only lets me off my chain for potty breaks, during which I’m allowed to venture over to the window over Deakin street. Apparently the UI computers are severely malnourished, because they eat anything that I type into them. Considering the content of most of my writing, eating it can be compared to a cyber-dog eating its own cyber-bones. Which is exactly why I leave this job to the computer, although sometimes I may just take a written document of mine, stand in front of a computer, and devote it myself to spite the micro-chip laden abomination which sits on the desktop, mocking me!

My most recent cyber-struggle began last Monday, when I had it in my head that I would log-in at the Wallace Complex and do something productive. But no! Once I typed in my user name the computer recognized me and decided that he/she (you never can tell these days) would rather take a nap at that moment. The computer froze up, and I was left with no choice but to reboot the machine. Of course, doing such a thing will sometimes cause one of those problems that are never wanted about until it’s too late. By rebooting the computer while I was technically logged in, the computer sent my user name into a sort of “log-in limbo” so that I could no longer log on. Log-in limbo is where user names go to die. Sort of like an elephant graveyard, only have you ever tried to type a three to five page essay on a dying elephant? Let me tell you, it will take a while. And when you are done, your margins will be really screwed up.

Hoping to reestablish my user name, I contacted the Computer Help Desk. I was told once that they could help me if I had any cyber-problems. Judging by the falsehood of this concept, I must have been told this by a friend.

Calling the “Help” Desk did not “help.” It might have ‘helped’ had someone answered the phone. I guess they cannot be blamed for this. After all, I was calling well within their office hours. I trekked up to the “Help” Desk, hoping the presence of my physical being would be more likely to compel them to acknowledge my existence as a carbon-based life form in need of “help.” I talked to a cyber-surgeon who seemed to know what I was talking about. He liked to call my situation a “ghost log-in.” I like log-in limbo better. This person attempted to correct my unfortunate situation with no luck. I had to go to class, and he said that he would keep trying and get it figured out before I left. If he is a man of his word, then he has been in that office for a week now without once seeing the light of day. I doubt this is the case though.

With no user name, I am forced to use the generic log-in technique of Labuser.students.ui. Using this repeatedly makes me feel cheap and dirty. I could shower and shower, but the dirt would never come off. Now, every time I print up a flyer for that dorm room in Lindsey Hall that I’m trying to pay someone $100 to take, I become “labuser!” Printing up flyers for my microwave (which happens to be like new since it was only used for a month) is just the same! Labuser! I walk down the street and mothers pull their children to their sides as I pass by! They can smell the stench of labuser on me like I washed my clothes in ammonia! Gosh Blammity! I am not an animal! I am Carp7013!

Something has to be done about all this. Humans, especially students, have become so dependent on computers that, before long, computers will be manufacturing people to serve them. Those who control the puppets and they are the puppets! Why are all monkeys in cute little bell-hop uniforms and they are the organ grinders. They crash out a classy, monotonous tune as we dance to it with exaggerated zeal. We must stop and recognize computers as a threat to the freedom of creativity. Computers are more addictive than nicotine and they probably cause cancer too!

Please...when one of the big kids on the playground offer you a computer, just say no.

Dutton hurls Wolf Pack past Vandals 42-23

BARRY GRAHAM

University of Nevada quarterback John Dutton was held in check at last year's Big West showdown against Idaho at Kibbie Dome. This was a new season and the Vandals had to travel to the unfriendly confines of Mackay Stadium in Reno, Nev., in spite of shutting down the signal caller two years ago.

Dutton found his receivers early and often with 470 yards in three quarters of play as the Wolf Pack rolled to a 42-23 win, improved to 2-5 on the season and 1-1 in the Big West. The Wolf Pack hit on 24 of 32 passes including four touchdowns covering 42, 39, 40, and six yards.

"He (Dutton) is a tremendous accurate passer," Vandals coach Chris Tormey said. "We had to get pressure on him and get people in his face."

Tormey also added that the quarterback was able to find his receivers throughout the contest due to the lack of pressure.

The game had been decided in the first half as Dutton passed for 288 yards and three scores in helping the Wolfpack jump out to a 28-0 halftime lead.

The Wolfpack began the scoring barrage with drive just three and a half minutes into the game. Dutton found receiver Trevor Insley for a 43-yard scoring strike to win a 7-0 lead. Later in the first, the Nevada running game got in on the action as tailback Chris Scott ran 15 yards for a score to give the host team a two-touchdown advantage. Later in the second quarter, Dutton led the Wolf Pack on a 125-yard scoring drive with 25 carries. His longest run covered 29 yards.

Dutton again found Insley for a 29-yard scoring connection late in the second quarter to give the Wolf Pack the sizable halftime lead. Insley hied in six Dutton passes for 142 yards.

On the other side of the ball, the Vandals missed several opportunities to stay in the game. Idaho missed two first-half field goals and a fourth down pass near the goal-line attempt to incompleteness.

"If we get one of those field goals and score at the goal-line and our defense is able to hold them out once, we come into halftime trailing 21-10 instead of by four touchdowns," Tormey said.

In the second half, the Wolf Pack put the game away with two more touchdowns, including Dutton's final scoring pass, a 49-yarder to Dein Higgin. Higgin caught three passes for 78 yards. Later in the third quarter, Leonard scored from one-yard out to give the Wolf Pack a 35-0 lead.

Idaho got on the scoreboard with Troy Scott's 28-yard field goal in the third quarter. The Vandals then put up 20 points in the third quarter to make the final score respectable.

Dutton has demonstrated the ability to manage to roll up 517 total yards of offense including 361 yards passing. Vandals quarterback Brian Brennan hit on 33 of 64 passes for 349 yards and two scores but was harassed by the Nevada pressure for most of the game.

Dutton said he found Antonio Wilson, who is a defensive back, to be the key to his success.

"We are giving up more points in fifth game than our opponents because of our defense and passing," Tormey said.

Fresenman Alii Nieman made the most of her court time, finishing the match with 12 kills, four assists, seven digs, and a team high five block assists.

The aggressive attitude of Idaho's team brought out versus Pacific was still evident at the service line Friday as Idaho recorded 11 aces, including four from senior Kyle Leonard.

LaCretia Smith led the Anteaters with 20 kills and a .362 average along with 11 digs.

Cal State's conference record dropped from its 300 status to 3-4-11 overall as the Vandals headed back on the road again.

Saturday night Idaho arrived in UC Irvine's gym fired up and ready to complete their task, which they did after hitting a 4-15 loss in game number one.

The Anteaters would see no more weak links in UI's squad the rest of the night as Idaho followed with three 19-17, 15-9, 15-10 to capture the match in four.

Strength for the Vandals came in the form of a balanced offensive attack along with a solid defensive effort. The offensive edge of their experienced athletes shone through as seniors Hymas and Leonard led the Vandals with 21 and 17 kills respectively. Moore tied with match high 16 kills a piece.

Their hitting percentages were notably as Leonard had a .306, Moore earned a .424 and Hymas led the Vandals with an impressive .469.

Ironically, Idaho's leading pair on the statistics sheets are two of those suffering from substantial injuries. Moore suffered a sprained ankle during the Eastern game, and for compensating that she endured a brutal week. Hymas' shoulder, which has been problematic for most of the season, has kept her out of many of their contact drills.

Early in the season Ferreira felt Moore was the only exhibiting the maturity leadership essential for the team's chemistry. Now, many of the older athletes are sharing responsibility.

"We as coaches are extremely guided orientation in how we can teach and train. Players play, and they can have way more influence than I can have in terms of how players are going to respond to each other. Jeri and Kyle have done a phenomenal job," Ferreira said.

"If I have a player on a roster I try to find 12 different roles for people to do, and I'm not afraid to give them to.

The Idaho running game also played well in rolling up 156 yards on 34 carries. Anthony Tenter did most of the damage with 93 yards on 12 carries.

Idaho fell 4-0 to the season and 1-1 in the Big West. The Vandals must forget about this contest and focus on Utah State on Saturday at the Kibbie Dome. They will have to try to extend their 21-game home winning streak against the Aggies, who are similar to Nevada in several different categories.

"The Aggies and Nevada are similar in that they both are a one-back offense," Tormey said. "Utah State has a better running game with Denario Brown and offensive line, they should be a test for us."

Tormey encouraged students to come out and support the Vandals in this crucial Big West matchup.

"I would love to see all the students downtown cheering for the Vandals, we have a better record than the Aggies and it should be an easy win;" Tormey said.
Let's hear it for the boys

Women's hoops anticipate stellar season

TONYA SNYDER
ASSOCIATE SPORTS EDITOR

After proving all the critics dead wrong with their impressive season, the University of Idaho women's basketball team has already started preparations for another trip to the championships.

With their first official practice under their belts on Saturday, the Vandals are beginning to show their depth and championship potential not only in their physical skills, but in mental attitude as well.

"For the first time in my four-year career, this team has the drive and desire to win," said senior guard Kelli Johnson. "That's important if you're going to be successful."

"This team has a lot of potential and a lot of talent," Johnson said. "We are very athletic and we have a lot of depth in all the positions."

"We have a mental strength that we necessarily haven't had in the past. The team believes in themselves," said Vandal head coach Julie Holt.

Holt, in her fourth year of coaching the Vandals, has accumulated a 27-53 record at Idaho.

This confidence and mental strength can be attributed to the huge success Idaho achieved last year, a year when coaches and the media alike picked UI to finish last in the conference. Proving all the critics wrong, Idaho surprised everyone by their second-place finish in the Big West after losing 76-57 to UC Santa Barbara.

Idaho also racked up a .500 season record, something the team hasn't achieved since the 1991-92 season.

"Last year, we were picked to finish last and ended up with a chance to finish first," Holt said. "That's a big thing — we've been there and we know what it takes and we know what we have to do to do it again."

Johnson sees the same sort of success in the future for this season.

"This team can go all the way, we can make it to the NCAA tournament and win the Big West. I'm excited because we're going to be strong and tough to beat."

Among the team's strengths is depth in positions, with six guards, four forwards and three centers. Despite losing two starters from last year's team, Idaho has talent on the floor and off the bench. Among such talent are at least two or three strong players at the four and five position with the likes of junior Jennifer Stone and Alii Nieman. Nieman was last year's Big West Freshman of the Year and conference first-teamer.

Johnson and fellow senior Melissa McDaniel will likely rule the two spot while sophomore Susan Wolf is looking to take the helm after earning her ACL in the Vandal's seventh game last season.

Holt is also looking for big things from senior Kathryn "Kat" Gussett at the wing, naming her as a potential catalyst for the team. A transfer from Bellevue Community College, Dana Porrill looks to be a UI senior Danny Willman and sophomore Damin Currall beat the 19th-ranked doubles team in the country, Alabama’s Chris Lopez and Gaidou Oliver 7-6 (7-4), 6-3 to finish in the top 16 at the ITA American Championships on Friday in Austin, Texas before retiring to Arkansas in the round of 16 due to an injury.

Idaho was placed at the top of the “lucky loser” list after a disappointing loss to a South Alabama team on Wednesday, but were granted a second chance as a result of a team’s disqualification. Willman and Currall are now among the top 16 doubles teams in the nation.

Stride for Gold

“Stride for Gold,” a fund-raiser benefitting UI women’s athletics will be held Sat., Oct. 31 from 9-10 a.m. in the Kibbie Dome. Striders and pledges are still needed. Striders will receive free tickets to the UI volleyball game against Cal Poly, a ticket to a celebration brunch held directly after the event at the University Inn Butler and a variety of gifts.

Anyone who would like to participate as a strider in this important fund-raising event should contact UI Athletics at 883-0200 or Pam Farmer at 883-1519 for more information.

Coach Needed

The women’s club volleyball team for UI is looking for a coach. If you are interested, please contact Andrea at 883-1868 or ven03780@novell.uiowa.edu.

Practices are Sunday from 1:00-3:30 p.m. and Tuesday from 6:30-8:00 p.m.

She was one of six newcomers on the team, senior leadership is running strong, stronger than last year’s team.

“Last year we had some good players in our senior class, but I don’t think it was much of a leadership group,” Johnson said. “This year’s senior class really has the desire to win and we all want to succeed.”

One can expect a very aggressive approach to basketball from this year’s UI team. Offensively, the team wants to take it at their opponents, either by setting up the offense or running down court for the easy lay-in.

“I don’t believe in giving anybody anything,” Holt said.

“What that means is that both offensively and defensively we want to play aggressively,” Holt said. “Last year, defense, and in particular rebounding, played in comparison to the Vandal offense, something Holt hopes to work on this year by dominating the boards.

“We were not a very good rebounding team last year. It was not as effective as it needed to be for us to be conference champions,” said.

“If we can be a top defensive team and be aggressive, physical and dictate other teams, we have the offense to win the game,” Johnson said.

Idaho will need all the defensive and offensive help it can get to help them through a challenging season. In addition to their regular Big West rivals, UI will be taking on two NCAA qualifiers — Oregon and Iowa State with the possibility of Alabama in the Hawaii Tournament Nov. 28-30. Alabama is consistently ranked in the top 10 in the nation.

Holt sees the Big West Championship as a very attainable goal for this year’s team.

“In order to reach goals, you have to understand what they are — you have to see it, feel it, touch it. The core of our team already knows. We have what we have to do.”

The Vandals will be in action in mid-November with the Alumni Game Nov. 17 at 7 p.m. in Memorial Gym before taking on Simon at Memorial Gym Nov. 13.

You could be the Argonaut’s Centennial Marketing Intern

The internship will work with a steering committee on the Argonaut Centennial Celebration to brain-storm promotional ideas. The internship will involve initiating ideas and implementing them with the help of the steering committee. The overall goal: to facilitate the Argonaut becoming more “visible,” in addition to bringing the celebration to the attention of the campus and community. This internship lasts approximately six months. Interns will receive credit for their work. For more information, contact Cooperative Education, Education Building, Room 204.
