SEAC rallies to save wilderness areas

T he quiet of the University of Idaho campus was shattered yesterday afternoon when approximately 60 students and residents from Moscow and Pullman protested the construction of the Liberty Road.

The protesters gathered at noon in the Library Plaza, holding up signs that read, "Bill, Make Love, Not War," "Clinton Plays, Iraq Pays," "Oil Sucks," and "No Blood for Oil!"

Students stopped to see what was happening and some joined the protest, but relatively few stuck around to support the cause.

Kelly Kingsland, a resident of Moscow and a student at the Man Schur, said a sign he read, "End the Genocide." She said she was there giving her support because she doesn't believe murdering people is the proper way to act, nor is it the international right to sue within 90 days of the date the letter was received.

Palmier said she doesn't know whether or not she is going to pursue the case in court.

"At this point I don't know. It's a personal decision of whether or not I want to deal with personal base of pursuing this or [if] I want to get on with my life and put it behind me," she said.

Open forum discusses parking woes

STAFF

S uggestions ranged from the practical to the outrageous at the Parking Committee open forum on Wednesday afternoon.

One Parking Committee member suggested numbering every space on campus and auctioning them off to the highest bidder.

Manager of Parking Services Pamela Alsterlund thought a suspension of enforcement might irk people's interest. She wasn't that serious.

Four students and nine others discussed parking problems and solutions with the committee members. Of the four students, three asked for reserved parking spaces for Residence Directors and the fourth, ASUI Senator Jason Berg, requested a simpler pamphlet explaining the parking rules.

Serge proposed a one-page bullets brochure listing the most important parking regulations to supplement the current three-page pamphlet now being handed out.

"I've read through it two or three times and still have not found that I don't know what and when the regulations are going to be enforced," he said, referring to the 3,500-word pamphlet.

The committee, however, was skeptical.

BOISE — Legislation giving patients the right to inspect the background profiles of their doctors and other health care providers has been overwhelmingly approved by the state Senate.

"This allows choice, informed choice," Republican Hal Buxdorfer of Meridian told his colleagues on Tuesday.

The bill now goes to the House for a final vote.

Skeptics suggested that the requirement for health care professionals to disclose information on malpractice claims, criminal convictions and disciplinary actions was pushed by the Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry in retaliation for last year's managed-care law.

That bill required managed-care plans to disclose expenditures on care versus administration and figures on enrollment, in pay for some care obtained outside the plan and to permit doctors to recommend treatment not available through the plan.

Millions of young women are striving to attain the "perfect body" and they are not only risking their emotional and physical health, they are entering a dangerous zone.

From anorexia to binge eating, many women end up spending most of their day preoccupied with negative thoughts of food and their body.

In order to address this issue and help to educate young women on college campuses, Eating Disorders Awareness and Prevention will team up with educators, health professionals, and therapists and hold the annual national Eating Disorder Awareness Week on Feb. 23-28.

Activities on the University of Idaho campus will include an information table about eating disorders set up in the Student Union Building across from the Information Desk on the first floor from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Health professionals will be there to answer any questions.

On March 9, Dr. Martha Kitterow, a psychologist at the Student Counseling Center, and Mary Schwantes, a nutritionist at the Student Health Center, will present "Women and Body Image: The Pressure to be Thin" at the Donah Theater in the SUB.

This presentation will also feature the award-winning video "Still Killing Us Softly," which examines the relationship of images of women in the media to eating problems along with a brief discussion on how to help a friend with an eating disorder.

A local woman will also share her story about recovery from an eating disorder in the hopes of preventing young women from entering the out-of-control dieting cycle.

"I know that some cases of disorders ended on this campus," Schwantes said. "And people that have disorders eating need dual therapy. This presentation will focus on both the nutritional aspect, as well as the psychological one. It is a complex, multi-cause disorder and there is never just one single cause."

Schwantes said the first step is visiting the Student Counseling Center. If being a counselor they feel comfortable with. "When they're really, truly ready to get help, then I can help them, but they have to be extremely ready — sick to death of it — so want to get help."

For more information about eating disorders, getting involved in Eating Disorder Awareness Week, or EDAF's plans for inspiring society-wide action, contact EDAF at 208-382-3587.

this behind me," she said.

The New York City Department of neurology and neurological engineering in the College of Mines and Earth Sciences in August 1990. Two male professors were hired at the same time, and Palmer's assistant states that they were provided with "appropriate roofs to occupy and utilize as an office and research space" while she was given "a modified laundry room."

The report goes on to claim that the female academia... [the] department and college have been granted tenure and promotion with lesser qualifications.

"I feel that I've been treated differently and held up to a different standard," Palmer said.

She also said "the climate towards women in the College of Mines is hostile." She said that when she first arrived, one of her male colleagues gave her a presentation and used a Playboy picture of a woman naked from the waist up.

Palmer's complaint states that such instances have caused her "stress-related illnesses, humiliation, substantial mental pain and anguish, and emotional disorder."

Out of the 16 faculty in the geology department, there are only two women: Palmer and Dr. Valerie Chambertin. Chambertin agrees with Palmer's claim of an unfair work environment.

"Every woman that has come up for tenure has had a problem of one kind or another, including me," said that the university has done anything wrong," she said.

about issuing a short, all-encompassing document. They felt that such an abridged version would lead to confusion about the rules and make room for more appeals. The main functions of the Parking Committee are to make suggestions regarding policy administration.

"The simplest way to handle things, the more problems we create," said Parking Committee member Bob Bollin. "I do think that we could certainly make a better brochure," he added.

A redesigned and highlighted pamphlet seemed more acceptable to the committee. They said they would review Sorge's written proposal.

"I think parking lot signage needs a lot of work," said David Hall, a former University of Idaho student.

Hall said that one of the most ambiguous about when the regulations would be enforced, both for metered and permit spaces. He thought that Washington State University's signs were much easier to understand.

Dave Sexton, Parking Services Supervisor was at the meeting and agreed that WSU's signs were cleaner. He said the UI's signs, however, were not the work of Parking Services.

"Ours were designed by a design group to blend in with the natural surroundings," he said, and that causes problems.

The Residence Directors requested a reserved space for themselves at each of their six residences, including the south and west of the Memorial Complex and by Theophilus Tower.

Resident Assistants, who supervise the residence halls, are required to call one of the dozen before calling 911 in an emergency. It's a lot of work, it's a lot of money," said David Hall, a former University of Idaho student.

"In a little bit of a shock," responded Bollin. "It doesn't seem that far from Theophilus Tower to that parking lot. It's like what, 50 yards?"

Johnson replied that the accumulated time of running to a car, driving to another residence and then parking can be dangerous when there is a medical emergency.

Phil White, Assistant Director for Capital Planning gave a presentation on plans for lots and probable impact of the new Commons on parking. A new lot, number 6J, is planned for the area next to Sweet Avenue. Within the next three years all spaces are to be built, and accommodations for up to 400 are planned.

Rally generates support for troops & appeals for peace

Some 100 people waved flags and sang songs of patriotism in Friendship Square last Saturday in a demonstration organized by the local chapter of the Young Republicans club. "Supporters and non-supporters alike were present, and although the rally was supposedly non-partisan some of the speakers took the opportunity of the microphone to criticize war protesters, claiming protesters are supporting the enemy and are hypocritical if they say they support the troops but not the war," said one participant.

The rally began with the pledge of allegiance and the Star Spangled Banner, then the microphone was opened to various speakers, some of whom told stories of friends and relatives placed in the Gulf and voiced their opinions about the United States' involvement. Former Mayor Gary Scott expressed strong opinions on the U.S. presence in the Gulf.

"Like it or not, we are in a war," he said, "This is not an American war, it is Saddam Hussein's war.

Organizers of the event and Latah County Police expected a group of antiwar protesters to show at Friendship Square, possibly having a flag burning ceremony of their own. Concerned about a possible clash between the two groups, co-organizer of the event Richard Rock told the participants not to make any violence and to "show the same constrain the Israelis have."

Gulf War update: ground war soon

By ANDREA Vogt
News Editor

Though talk of a ground offensive within the next month has been fairly certain, President George Bush has yet to sort out the details of when a major assault could begin.

According to Associated Press reports, Bush will be advised that allied commanders still need a few more weeks of preparation before a major ground assault, this will create some dilemmas for Bush. Delaying the ground war creates some concerns that the allied troops will lose their readiness. However, a ground offensive too early would mean unnecessary risk to the soldiers.

Some allied commanders have set a goal to reduce Iraqi capabilities by 50 percent before trying to take on dug-in Iraqi combat troops and massive tank and artillery units. Military briefings have said that it will be difficult to estimate the amount of military capability which has been hindered on Iraq's side. They said that Iraq's true capabilities can only be realized when its heavily-equipped tanks and forces emerge from their positions.

Yellow ribbons color campus with support

by SHERRY DEAL
Associate Editor

About 30 students, some supportive of the war effort and some not, gathered on the Administration Lawn Saturday afternoon to tie yellow ribbons on campus trees.

The Yellow Ribbon Campaign was sponsored by the ASUI, and was neither in support of nor in protest of the war. "It's just a way for us to show our students called to active duty, especially those in the gulf, that we're thinking of them and appreciate what they're doing," said ASUI President Mike Gotch. "Hopefully by next semester we can have a follow-up campaign with them and take all of the ribbons down."

Those who attended were of all ages. Joe Hemenway, 8 1/2, of Moscow, said his father, James John Hemenway, was in the Gulf, and he was tying ribbons on the trees in hopes that his father would come home safely.

Mariana Steele said her husband, Michael Steele has been in the Gulf since Jan. 14. He is a UI student and is part of the Marines artillery unit in Spokane. "I think they (the troops) need all the support they can get right now," she said. "I'm glad the university is providing this kind of help. It's good to know students are getting involved."

Many of the students who attended the campaign did not have relatives in the gulf, but many had friends.
Think about weapons of privilege

Mostly innocent civilians will suffer from an attack on Iraq

Amanda Hennessy was a Catholic, anarchist, pacifist, and pacifist, one man revolution in America. I think that that covers it...

Amnesty said, “You’ve got to become a pacifist.” I said, “Why?” He said, “I’ll save your life.” My behavior was very violent. He said, “What is it?” He said, “I can’t save you a book by Gandi, you wouldn’t understand it. I can’t give you a list of rules that you sign if you want to be a pacifist... You’ve got to be able to put your hand in the air and acknowledge your capacity for violence and then deal with the behavior, and have the people whose lives you’ve messed with definite this behavior for you, yes. And it’s not going to go away. You’re going to be dealing with it every moment, in every situation for the rest of your life.”

I said, “I’ll try that.” Amnesty said, “That’s not enough. You were born a white man in mid-20th century industrial America. You come into the world armed to the teeth with an arsenal of weapons. The weapons of privilege, racial privilege, sexual privilege, economic privilege. If you want to be a pacifist, it’s not just giving up guns and knives and clubs and fists and angry words, but giving up the weapons of privilege, and going into the world completely disarmed. Try that.”

That old man has been gone now 20 years and I’m still working on it. I figure if there is a worthwhile cause in my own life, that’s probably the one. Think about it...—U.S. Phillips

Think about it, I thought about it. I thought about it last spring while hiking in southern Utah’s canyon country. These days I am often daydreaming of a return trip that gets closer by the moment. Hiking Utah canyons is a good way to clarify the clutter in one’s head. I thought a good little bit about what U.S. Phillips meant when he spoke of going into the world completely disarmed, without the weapons of privilege. Previously I wondered how I could possibly do that, also being a white male living in a rich, powerful country.

It eventually became clear to me one day, after a very stimulating day walking in a narrow slot called Chimney Rock, that the only way I personally, and most of us in this community, could go into the world without being armed with the weapons of privilege would be if there were no privileges for being white, male, or American. I figured it out. The concept, total equality, is simple. But the implementation of total equality is elusive. Here on the Palouse, African-Americans have reportedly been spied on in stores, as if a particular color of skin said “Thief.” All over the globe men dominate. They hold most of the power, and control most of the wealth. As Americans abroad, we benefit because our language has become the international language of commerce. Even those of us who are relatively poor by U.S. standards generally have adequate shelter and food. We can get student loans, and sometimes even grants. In general, we are a very privileged society.

We are so privileged that we can decide which countries can have certain weapons, and which ones can’t. While raw sewage flows through neighborhoods in Iraq, a result of the last attack, we contemplate another one. Mostly innocent civilians will suffer. Five percent of Iraq’s population has died since the last bombing, mostly caused by the same U.S.-backed United Nations sanctions that military action is intended to uphold.

I find it ironic that the stated reason for the planned attack is to gain access to chemical and biological weapons facilities that were largely supplied by U.S. companies. But we don’t hear much about where the weapons come from in the mainstream news. We don’t hear much about how Saddam was supported financially and militarily for many years by the Reagan and Bush administrations.

The U.S. government helped create this monster, but it is no less privileged that it doesn’t have to take responsibility. The government will take anything but responsibility. It will take the opportunity to showcase new weapons for marketing purposes. It will take the increase in military spending that comes with war, and do it with a smile and a sigh of relief.

With no Cold War, our government needs an enemy to justify continued excessive military spending upon which much of the U.S. economy is based, and with which many a defense contractor has lined his pockets.

Think about it.

Letter to the editor

Wade must be starred for attention

Often times one will encounter articles which are so skewed they are meant only to provoke others into the same mood slingly. Such is the case pertaining to Wade Gruhl’s column “Wilderness: love it or leave it alone.” While I refuse to stoop to the bottom of the barrel tactics Mr. Gruhl is used to, I will not let the opposing opinion go unaid.

Many writers were touched upon in his column, and I will attempt to pinpoint the most misleading. First off, the Forest Service does have many roads under its control. One must keep in mind though, the “multiple use” objectives which are being pursued. An example would be timber management and recreation. Both of these uses can take place at the same time, but it is obviously the two uses will interfere with another. I will be the first one to agree with Wade that many places under the “multiple use” objectives are not suited to such a goal. It would have been courteous of Gruhl to have done his homework and identified this point.

Governmental agency policy has nothing to do with the UI’s College of Forestry. This fact brings me to my second point of contention with Mr. Gruhl. The forestry curriculum at the UI has several options in its forest resources program. At no point of any of the options is a student required to take more than one “logging” course. Several of the options do offer any “logging” courses at all. What the curriculums do offer is sound scientific background in forest management. For the individuals who Wade referred to that “quit” the program, I would speculate that they left for other reasons not than not enough ecology. There are many fine professors on the resources faculty who teach a myriad of ecology courses.

Forests are continually changing the dynamic biological process. What Mr. Gruhl fails to accept is that not forests are not a static entity which will always look and behave the same way. Management of forests, whether by humans or by nature, will occur. If by nature, the consequences are almost certain to be drastic and haphazard. Through forest management these changes can be control and calculated, while benefiting the environment.

Furthermore, the faculty of the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences are an integral part of keeping the resources we all cherish for one reason or another healthy and productive. They do this by teaching us, the students, to responsibly and scientifically manage our forests, wildlife and range lands.

I believe Mr. Gruhl should take a second look at the College of FWR; I would invite him to talk to both faculty members and students. His lack of awareness of the forestry curriculum further endorses any credible point he may have made.

This type of “tabloid” reasoning is irrelevant to all. It does nothing to contribute to unrestricted solutions, and goes a long way to trending already volatile viewpoints. I can only assume that this man is starved for attention, so matter what type it is, and is willing to do anything to say something to get

-Kleidt Coulter

The masses decide what is free press

I am writing to try and clarify Wade Gruhl’s Feb. 13 column on “Free of speech, yes, but free speech!” Yes, Mr. Gruhl, we do indeed have an aggressive, “free” press. The latest example of our aggressive “free” press is exemplified by the way in which the press is covering the alleged Clinton scandal. That is not aggressive reporting I don’t know what it is.

As for “free press,” that is guaranteed in the Bill of Rights that the press is free to cover. However, it wishes the fear of retaliation from the government (except for slander, libel, and藐),. Now, you can agree that “there is not free speech when an aggressive press is absent.” What’s your point Wade? This is an abridgment of Mr. Levine’s freedom of speech. He can publish as many books or spot his story to whoever will listen. That is free speech. However, the sword cannot cut both ways even though he told the press about his story, they are under no obligation to cover it. Yet another aspect of free speech.

Wade also asks the question, “Are people in high places deciding what is news?” Yes, in fact, they are. That is the nature of our capitalist society. Except for perhaps PBS and other publicly funded media, the press is a “for profit” institution. They are going to cover what sells. In my opinion, most people do know about the conditions of developing countries. But sadly, they just don’t care about the conditions there. Thus, conditions in Third World countries just don’t “sell.” I am not saying that is good by any means, but it is just the way things work.

Finally, nowhere in the Bill of Rights does it say, or even imply, that a press is able to act as judge over justice, and that is just what that newsletter from Pullman did. There are limits to free speech out of necessity, Mr. Gruhl.

Kempton plan backed by property rights movement

Associated Press

To hear the cities of Jim Kempton’s property rights bill, you’d think the world was ending. The counties, a state representative from Albion, says he merely wants to give property owners a fighting chance against government. But city and county officials describe his bill as a strike through the heart of local authority.

They fear it will set them in court, swamp them with legal fees and scare them away from doing their jobs. They say planning and zoning agencies will be able to protect neighborhoods and landscapes from rapacious developers.

Who’s right? Hard to say.

Kempton’s fellow legislators are deferring action for now, and that’s probably the right decision. Assigning an intermin committee to study the idea for a year could yield much-needed clarity.

Kempton’s proposal is in line with a growing national movement. It’s the idea that property owners should have quick, informal recourse when government decisions reduce their land’s usefulness and value.

The Bill of Rights in the U.S. Constitution already says government has to pay for any property it takes from citizens. This is known as the “takings” clause. But the takings clause doesn’t apply when governments merely regulate land use.

That’s an important point. It means if your neighbor wants to build an X-rated video parlor next to your house, the City Council can stop him — without having to buy him out.

Kempton’s bill recognizes that local governments post their communities’ welfare. But it also recognizes that regulations can go too far. It would let aggrieved property owners take their complaints to mediation. If mediation fails, they could go before a “special master” for judgment.

As a last resort, they could go to court. The outcome of such a process could be a range of remedies. The legislation might be adjusted, the property owner might receive money for his lost development rights, or the government agency might buy the property.

On the other hand, if the regulatory action was justified, the property owner might get nothing at all.

The plan sounds workable in principle. In practice, it’s easy to imagine a small-town council being intimidated by the time and expense of such a process.

What really would happen is hard to predict. And the secret is grounds for delay. But private property rights are a politically potent movement, backed by a righteous desire for fairness.

Study Kempton’s plan, and maybe revise it, but don’t count it out.

Great Expectations paints a pretty color

A movie review by Amy Sanderson

irector Alfonso Cuaron is obsessed with green. In his latest film, Great Expectations, an adaption of the Dickens novel, Cuaron casts the color into nearly every scene, costume, and even a few hairdos.

Cuaron was quoted in Premiere magazine that the only color he understands is green. From opening scenes in an overgrown garden in Florida to a subway system in New York, Great Expectations is coated in the velvety color. Surprisingly, the effect of his reliance on green adds a lush and mysterious quality to this already visually rich film.

The story stays quite a bit from the Dickens Victorian novel with its characters now fixed into the late '70s and '80s. A few characters from the original are omitted and the novel's plot is simplified down to a story of unrequited love.

Ethan Hawke plays the central character, Finn, who is called Pip in the novel. This modern version of Pip grows up in a Florida fishing community and aspires to be an artist.

Finn falls into an obsessive and tragic passion for Estella, whom he meets during his visits to eccentric Miss. Dimmerour's crumbling estate. Several sensual scenes follow of Ethan Hawke drawing portraits of cold, beautiful Estella, played by Gwyneth Paltrow. The story is summed up in the opening line, "the girl will only hurt you terribly, but you'll still pursue her."

The film's strongest points are the beautiful cinematography and production design. Tony Burroughs earns credit for creating the crumbling estate, Paradise Lost. An ancient wedding banquet sits molding in the mansion's large garden and the interior of the mansions are gorgeous in their decrepitude. Even the airport looks pretty in this film.

The film's biggest disadvantage is its overdone happiness. How many times do we have to see the young lover, in the rain, drunk, outside a window, yelling something like, "Everything I've ever done has been for you."

Comnas linger after Anne Bancroft in her over-the-top performance as Ms. Dimmerour. With makeup that emphasizes wrinkles and a bad eyeliner job, Bancroft slugs down a martini after spotting, "Isn't love grand?"

And then there is Gwyneth Paltrow. If it wasn't for her Valley Girl delivery, her performance of the teasing and mesmerizing Estella might be believable. She simply does not show enough intelligence or sensuality to really carry the role.

Adding to the cast is Robert DeNiro, who gives a decent performance as a dangerous thug; a role he could play in his sleep.

The film touches upon a few interesting themes: vicarious redemption and fatal passion to name a few. Unfortunately the ideas are not fully developed and instead the film borders on a Generation-X soap opera.

Despite the film's poor acting and its moments of melodrama, it is hard not to be carried off by the beautiful images it presents. Artwork created by Francesco Clemente was another important part of this visually successful film. If viewers can stomach Paltrow's Ronny and Michelle performance and a few performance glitches, the film can be enjoyed simply as a wonderful piece of eye candy.

Annex plays Moscow on way home

TRAVIS BOMMERSBACH
ART

What has eight legs, plays until 2 a.m., has food from the land of cheese, and tunes withundra? That’s right, it’s Annex and they were in town on Valentine’s Day to bring down the walls of The Moscow Social Club, upstairs from CJ’s. The quartet from Greeley, Colo., allocated their regards to rock spot spoilers by playing everything from classics to original pieces.

Members of the band include brothers
Paul and Craig Hanna, Tom Steinbrecker, and Chad Rindkerger. The fourmen’s current tour has included playing three weeks in the Midwest followed by shows in Longview, Wash., and Florence, Ore.

“We were supposed to have a show in Seattle too, but it got cancelled at the last minute and that’s basically how we got here,” said Paul Hanna, lead guitarist and vocalist.
Annex arrived in Moscow last Friday and held a preview show in the afternoon at the hall of the Social Club and also played two original songs on KUOT before the concert.

Early influences for the band are Kiss, Led Zeppelin, Pearl Jam, and Rush. They have been fortunate enough to actually play with acts like Tristen, Great White, Vixen, and Slaughter.

It took an hour for anyone to start dancing to boot on the dance floor. By then Annex had already covered tunes from Green Day, Blink 182, and Neil Young. After the concert, the four dollar cover charge was dropped and more and more people started tinling in. Peeping their heads in, they wondered who these guys were with guitars out on the dance floor, jumping and spinning around.

When asked about the band’s outlook on performing, Hanna replied, “Most bands don’t even have entertaining shows anymore.
No one seems to want to have fun anymore. I mean, come on, life isn’t that bad.”

Eventually the band’s technique of crowd participation paid off. Requests were soon being shouted from the crowd and the dance floor had people on it other than the band.
The second set was even better than the first, with covers like “Are You Gonna Go
My Way?,” “Yellow Ledbetter,” and “Mrs.
Robinson.” Later in the show, the band recreated an excerpt from the movie Mean Green, humoring the audience and leaving a few spectators scratching their heads.

The final set included some Sublime, Violent Femmes, and The Beatles. The best part of the show was the ending, not because it was over, but simply because Annex closed with some really good original songs. A couple of “You Are You” and “Whatever Never.”

The band has eight songs of their own and hope to cut a six-song demo tape in the very near future. There have been scouts from record companies at some of the concerts during the tour and the band is very optimistic.

The future for the band is headed in a positive direction with the finale of this tour in Wyoming. As soon as Annex returns home, they will hit the road again for a tour in Minnesota and Indiana. They also hope for tour of the south in the spring.

Annex also brings its talent to important communty events, such as headlining the Tecum Drug Alliance show for four years and hosting their own benefit concerts supporting AIDS research.

The band members say they enjoy playing anywhere and everywhere they can.

When asked about what they got out of playing the concerts, Hanna said, “We liked what we heard and had fun.”
Modest Mouse plays Pullman

A band review by Mike Last

If you've been waiting for good live music, wait no longer. The people of the ASWSU Entertainment Committee are bringing Modest Mouse back to the Palouse. Modest Mouse is a three piece band from Bellingham, Wash. That proves there are still people out there who know how to write good songs. Whether it's a mellow-sweet slow song or gut-wrenching power song, the music of Modest Mouse never fails to be original or enjoyable.

The band consists of Isaac Brock on guitar and vocals, Jeremiah Green on drums, and Eric Judy playing bass. With these instruments and the help of Up Reents, they've made four full-length albums, and every one of them has been fresh and lively.

Let's face it, every band lately has had the same thing: Nirvana and all the sub-Nirvana, as well as the ska bands that all play the same song. It's time for something different, isn't it? ASWSU agrees.

Lisa Blair, co-chair of the ASWSU Entertainment Committee said, "They sold out when they played here last year... and all the students seem to really like them." They'll be playing at Butch's Den in the bottom of the Cougar Union Building in Pullman tonight. The opening bands are Bugs in Amber (now with an independently released album), and Main Accelerator, from the Rx Remedy label.

Modest Mouse has recently put out their fourth album, entitled The Lonesome Crowded West. As an escape from the title "oh baby" rock songs, this album takes a large step away from the loudly boy themes of present-day rock.

When you compare song titles such as "Teeth Like God's" and lyrics like "wailing to bleed onto the streets/bleed onto the highways/sadness to other cities..." to that of Top 40 hits, it's simple to see a big difference. Not once on The Lonesome Crowded West does Isaac Brock throw in a baseless "oh yeah," "oh no," or "oh baby baby." But the most important question is "How's their live show?" A band is tested by their ability to perform, and if they can sound as good live as their recordings make them seem, you know you've found a winner.

Modest Mouse came to Pullman last spring touring with Built to Spill and lived up to everything their albums have promised. There was jumping, dancing, and the music was as crisp and crisp as anyone could hope for.

Although the music of Modest Mouse has struck a fine chord in my head, I have to be perfectly honest. At first I thought it was nothing but white noise. The only exception was the Custom Concern. But as I listened to this song over and over, the rest of the album played on, and eventually I was infected with the groove. It's music that you need to let seep into your skin first, and the more you listen, the more your'll like it.

So tonight when everyone is sitting around a beer in one hand and nothing to do in the other, get someone to drive you over to Pullman and check out these three less-than-youths: Modest Mouse. You won't regret it.

Tickets are being sold through 3 p.m. today at the west entrance of the CUB for $5 a pop. If you can't get there in time, they'll still be sold at the door tonight. The show will start at 8 p.m.
A Look Ahead

- She's So Lovely hits the screen in the Borah Theater tonight at 7 p.m. John Travolta and Sean Penn are in it, which is weird considering no one has ever heard of this movie!
- Experience the "Soul Food Sale" today from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the SUB. RAACE is sponsoring the sale in celebration of Black History Month.
- Select ensembles from the UI Lionel Hampton School of Music will present "Hampt's Gala" on Tuesday, Feb. 24. The concert will be given in the Administration Auditorium and will begin at 7:30 p.m. Donations benefiting the music scholarship fund will be accepted at the door.
- Sculptor, ceramist, and brushmaker extraordinaire Glenn Grishkoff will illustrate the little known history of brushmaking as an art. Slides will be shown, words will be spoken, all about his work and his sculptures, some of which refer to or incorporate the brush. This will all transpire on Feb. 26 at noon in the CUB Cascade Room 123.
- What are you waiting for? The Andy Warhol exhibit at the Prichard Art Gallery only lasts until Feb. 28. Time is running out!

This was a win Idaho needed, to win to keep the Vandals in the State and New Mexico State in the race for the conference championships. Unfortunately, the No. 1 Aggies had different ideas as they stole the early UIMl and ended up 59-50.

The Aggies of Utah State, under former Idaho coach Larry Eustachy, had already secured a berth into the Big West conference championships, boasting a halfway lead over Nevada-Reno, and were right where they wanted to be as they traveled north from Logan, Utah.

The situation couldn’t have been different for the Vandals. They were holding their own in the face, but a loss to USU would push them into fourth and a sure- come game against Pacific in the championships.

Yes, it was officially crunch time for the Vandals and there were going to need the type of effort they saw from the championship game when they took on the Aggies on the road before falling short by two at 66-68.

Idaho started out the first couple of minutes a little on the sluggish side, but they were holding hard for Max Tinti to spark the offensive attack in the paint. Nothing was falling for Idaho in the early going, missing three open shots while USU traumatised the outside. But Cameron Banks and a two jumpers from Curry at 15-feet pulled UI ahead by four, going 3-6 from the field compared to 1-5 for Utah State.

A couple of turnovers by Idaho let USU back into a tie, but Kris Bartosik worked on three-on-three, coming up with a big trey and the lead against the man-to-man defense.

On the defensive end, Curry had the advantage and did an excellent job of containing the Aggie offensive threats. Spectacular defense and the homecourt advantage helped the Vandals keep on top, but USU struggled horribly from the field.

The Aggies tried every defensive move in the book to stop UI, switching from man-to-man to a two-three zone. The constant switch-off didn’t seem to affect the Vandals much, with the possible exception of Eustachy, who missed several back-to-back shots from the outside, barely catching any air.

While the offensive attack was red-hot for Idaho in the opening minutes, it cooled considerably in the latter part of the half as Utah State slowly whittled down the UI seven point advantage before surging Idaho from the charity stripe.

Things weren’t looking promising with “big man” Tosi sitting a few minutes.

In the final minutes of the half, the lead was tossed back and forth between two clubs as the referees allowed the physical play on the part of both teams, but Idaho managed to finish off the half with a small half-time lead, on top of the Aggies 28-25.

Curry led all scorers at the half with 12 points followed by Troy Thompson off the bench with six.

Eddie Hampton and Tinti scored 10.

The Aggies were still out-rebounded by the Aggies 16-13 and racked up seven turnovers to USU’s five.

Marcus Bastin led Utah State with eight points and three rebounds.

After a fairly inconsistent start on the part of the referees, they were armed with quick whistles early in the second half of play. The travels and ouch fouls they missed in the first half were made up for.

Eustachy took the brunt of the officials’ officiating, picking up two quick ones and found himself on the bench with three.

“You can’t even look you’re going to touch somebody without getting called for the foul!”

exclaimed Bob Curtis, the Voice of the Vandals.

Offensive boards became a staple for the Idaho attack with many Idaho players throwing up some ugly shots. But Clifford Gray and Hampton worked the boards for a several put-backs.

While Idaho is usually not a foul-happy team, the whacks and ouches were slowly piling up, but luckily for UI, most of those fouls denied USU the freebies from the line.

Despite all the whistles, the score didn’t seem too much movement in the second half. With 9:29 left to play, the Aggies held a slight 38-39 lead, with each club scoring less than 15 points apiece in the first ten.

The key was in the functioning of the Utah State offense, threading a beautiful loop inside for a dunk and coming back with a short jumper for his twelfth of the night. Utah built its biggest lead of the night with nine minutes left, topping the Vandals 40-45. Tosi found Banks to chop the lead to three, but on the crucial play, Curtis cited it too much, forcing it down the lane and picking up an offensive foul and yet another turnover. Curtis redeemed himself a short time later by hitting the big shot.

Down by two, Gray had the chance to even things out, but he had no luck from the line, missing both of his free throws after missing three straight before another jumper and trip to the line by Utah State brought their lead to six with just over two minutes in the game.

Banks would pull Idaho within four at 50-54 on a goal-sending from USU’s Kevin Rice, but that was the last score for Idaho. Free throws would settle the score in the final two minutes, with the Aggies controlling the scoreboard and sealing the win 59-50.

STEVE BLAKEY

Hey Cyclops, open your eye one! My grandma could not make a better call than that! Are you watching the same game I’m watching?

These are just a few of the fit-for-print comments an intramural official might encounter during the course of a counter.

Officiating is a thankless and underappreciated job, especially at the intramural level. The only recognition an official can expect is the verbal berating after a bad or missed call.

So what makes a person do the stripes and pick up the whistle and put it on their shoulder, or do they just love the game?

For Jason Largent and Chris Youman, it is their pure enjoyment of the game.

“I’ve always liked sports, plus it’s fun,” said Youman, a two year official from Woodland, Wash.

For some officials, like Largent and Youman, their enjoyment of the game is enough to overcome any of the complaining they might hear on a given night.

Other officials, like Aaron Johnson and Kelly Jensen, became involved in intramural officiating because of the sports they knew. While both expressed love for the calling and participating in sports, Johnson, who is a four year official, became involved with refereeing because of a friend. Jensen, in his third year as an official, started because of his brother who worked in the intramural office.

Overall Largent, Youman and Jensen haven’t had any bad relations with any participants. Of course, one had apples and one had oranges.

“You always get those guys who will argue every call,”

Youman said. “I just try to learn how to deal with different problems.”

Youman also said that over time he became more familiar with the rules, which helped cut down complaints during a game.

Jensen noted that when there are problems with hecklers, “it’s usually the same people over and over again.

Intramural participants have to remember that the people out there officiating are just like them.

“Don’t be the people who want poor officiating shouldn’t play,”

Jensen said. Participants should try and remember that the same students refuse intramural activities could not exist.

The officials are not paid to listen to participants complain about Largent wants people to know “it’s [refereeing] not as casual as it looks; we can’t see everything that happens on the court.”

Johnson echoes Largent’s sentiments. “There is a lot more to it than people think. We try and do our best.”

George Yarno, Idaho's offensive coordinator for the past three seasons, is leaving to coach the offensive line at the University of Houston.

"It's a great opportunity," said Yarno, whose last day is Friday. "I'm coaching when you get opportunities, you have to take them. I felt this was something I had to do."

Yarno will remain in charge of the Idaho offensive line and be a part of a staff that coordinates the offense "by committee."

"I'm excited about the new opportunity," Yarno said. "I'm going to miss the players and people, but that's a part of the position."

Head coach Chris Tormey said a search will begin immediately and that he hopes to have a replacement before Spring Break (March 15).

"We're going to hire George," Tormey said. "He's done a good job coaching the offensive line and running out strength program."

Prior to joining Tormey's first staff at Idaho, Yarno had been an assistant coach at Washington State University for four seasons. He joined the coaching profession after playing 12 seasons in the National Football League with Tampa Bay (1979-84 and 1985-87), Atlanta (1988) and Green Bay (1990). Yarno is a 1979 graduate of WSU where he was a two-time all-PAC 10 defensive line selection. He and his wife, Cynthia, have three children.

Squires' dream team still strong

For all of you die hard hockey fanatics, the Ice Hockey Club here at the University of Idaho is worth checking out. The Ice Hockey Club began in 1992-93 and continues to prosper six years later.

Back in 1992-93, Scott Squires had a dream, so to speak. Coming from the Chicago, Ill. area, Squires had been playing hockey for the majority of his life. He decided to attend the UI in 1990 where the sport wasn't as accessible, but that fact did not deter the player from forming a club team at the school.

"After moving here, I just missed the game," said Squires. He was able to start the team, although it was a difficult process in the beginning.

The hockey player hung flyers around campus for any interested participants. In the end, Squires, who plays center, found 10 players that did have experience and the funds to help attain equipment, uniforms, and travel expenses.

In that first season, the club finished 6-5, which is a respectable mark considering that the team was in its first year of existence.

How times have changed since then! Squires is the last remaining link to the 10 original competitors and the club is 11-3 this season.

"More people know about us," said Squires. "We get invitations to play teams from Utah and Colorado. Also, word of mouth has helped us a little bit."

The hockey club usually begins its season in October with two to four practices in the fall semester at the Eagle Ice-A-Rena in Spokane, due to the fact that the university or any other local town does not have an ice rink. The official season does not begin until November in which the team plays against other club squads from the University of Washington, Montana, Western Washington University, and Walla Walla College. The club usually schedules two practices in the spring semester.

The team played this past weekend against Montana in which they split two games by the scores of 6-3 and 2-8. Mike Travis led the team with a hat trick in the 6-3 win.

The team will play their last two contests in Spokane at the Ice-A-Rena this Friday and Saturday. For more information about the team, contact them via e-mail from the UI homepage.

Baseball mourns death of broadcast legend

The death of baseball legend Harry Caray is indeed tragic. In a time in which salaries are at all-time high and most players show little appreciation to the team that are it was for, Caray spent over 50 years in one organization.

Caray was the Chicago Cubs broadcaster who was beloved by fans in the Windy City. He was best known for some of his colorful sayings and, of course, that one-of-a-kind voice. His devotion to the team was second to none, as he often led fans in the stadium in the singing of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" during each and every seventh inning stretch at Wrigley Field.

On television, Caray was identifiable by the personality and the competency that he exemplified during the broadcasts, not to mention those thick-rimmed circular glasses.

Those around the legend say that he cared about the fans. This was illustrated by the appearances he made at his restaurant in Chicago in which he signed autographs and talked with fans. Harry Caray wasn't about the glitz and glamour of professional baseball. He was all about what the game needs.

He was a dedicated worker who was unfailingly about his job. For many of those 50 years, the Cubs were not one of baseball's elite teams. Did that in any way deter the broadcaster from doing his job the best way he could? On the contrary, Caray persevered through the tough times and offered his services in a manner that symbolized top notch professionalism.

It will be sad to not see the man in the booth any longer. However, memories will remain and so will that voice shouting "Holy cow!"

"Your typing is all hoofs, Ms. Holstein, but I'm delighted that you never forget the cream in my coffee."

"Oh, Francine! Where did you get that fabulous turkey skin coat?"

"You call those coveralls? Your head's stickin' right out there in the open! Freak!"

"You'd better move in carefully. This guy's packing a mighty big heater."

While some prehistoric sports may have perished during the Ice Age, recent finds suggest that the frigid conditions served only to increase hockey's popularity.

"The most annoying thing about Christmas trees is the pictures."

"No, I meant turkeys playing our songs."

"I think I'll just putter around your office today."

"Vacationing for those who work at home."
