A supreme debate at the U of I

By Adam Eil
University of Idaho Arboretum

For the first time in 30 years, there are candidates running for a seat on the Idaho Supreme Court. For the last time, justices on the court have either fled their state in fear of death or were deafened by the sound of gunfire. All the replacements have been appointed by the governor.

Mike Wauthy (D) and Wayne Kilfoil (R) defined the race as one fought in the courthouses of the county. Their debate in the state capital was on Law vs Fairness.

When asked to discuss the eligibility of the state supreme court candidates, running for a seat that is not allowed to discuss their competency or identify how they will vote if elected, the debate was interrupted by the general legal philosophies of the candidates.

Indeed, much of the debate focused on just what candidates should be allowed to discuss, and whether the supreme court should be elected.

Spokeswoman point

"I happen to believe there is nothing wrong with voting for political justices," said Wauthy.

Kilfoil argued, saying, "The important thing is the integrity of the court.

The candidates, both U.S. generals, were once residents of Idaho, both supporting and deciding another's political positions.

"This is not an election, it is decided by the public," said Wauthy.

Wauthy told the audience that he was not a candidate for any position, but instead, he was referring to the morale of the state's supreme court, the "troops" of the system.

Kilfoil agreed with a general trend, however, he also called judicial review, the process by which laws are interpreted by the courts, the "most precious" of the system.

He mentioned that he agreed with the court's decision to bring Idaho's laws to court.

"That would be a kick," he said.

"To state a fact, he added, "You're not going to talk to get information.

Abbasi also ran into political problems. He said, "I do all kinds of perks for the bullied student," to the delight of the crowd.

He said he had studied race relations for the receiving and giving of the "troops" of the system.

"I don't know of any," he said.

Guest commentary: school safety not the issue

By John D. Mieczniker

In the wake of the school killings in Paducah, Ky. and Thurston High School in Lacey, Wash., many vocal 14-17-year-old students, their parents and teachers are wondering about safety. In Paducah, KY., the child who killed 13 people was found to have a history of school violence and had a history of mental health problems. In Thurston, the killer was a 14-year-old with a history of violence.

A reader tells The Argonaut that he believes school safety is not the issue. He says, “When I was in school, I was called a ‘thug’ for wearing a, an, and the issue was never raised. I think it’s a reflection of society that we have to worry about school violence and not the lack of education in schools.”

The problem is that the point of this resolution is to help the students, who are the very persons that are the ones at risk. In Paducah, KY., and Thurston, WA., the schools were called a “hotbed of violence” and “a place where kids go to learn”.

But there are other reasons for school violence, including mental health and social problems. In Paducah, KY., the student was found to have a history of mental health problems. In Thurston, the student had a history of violence.

The reader also says, “We need to focus on the root causes of school violence, which include mental health and social problems.”

The Argonaut reader suggests that schools should focus on mental health and social issues, rather than just on school safety.

The movie Good Will hunting comes out in exchange about the merits of a liberal arts education.

The movie Good Will hunting comes out in exchange about the merits of a liberal arts education. For many of us who have not seen the film or its critical reviews, the film is a love story between a self-educated person and a liberal arts education.

The case for the liberal arts is that the student faces the world with a prepared mind, and with the necessary intellectual and moral commitments to it.

After the release of the movie, three very important articles were written about liberal arts education.

Firstly, an article by William Deresiewicz in The New Republic, which said, “The liberal arts are a form of education in which the student is taught to think for himself and to question everything.”

Secondly, an article by David S. Landes in The American Scholar, which said, “The liberal arts are about thinking for oneself, not about memorizing facts.”

Thirdly, an article by John Rawls in The New Republic, which said, “The liberal arts are about shaping the mind for citizenship.”

The case against the liberal arts is that it is not the proper role of the student to be a critic of the world. The student should be taught to be a productive member of society.

Kibbie weight room feels time crunch

By Gretchin Vanderzarr
University of Idaho Argonaut

With only 3,000 square feet of space to train the 300-plus athletes, coaches, staff and faculty members, access to the University of Idaho's weight room is a luxury involved in the normal day-to-day activities. A large problem was brought to the attention of strength training coach Tommy Boys-Kendrick. The problem is simple: the weight room is a simple setting.

Each morning from 6 to 7 a.m. the men's basketball team works in the facility, while the women's team does the same. The space is 30 feet wide, 50 feet long and has a weight area in the middle. There are times when there are other teams in the room for workouts.

The teams also join in the early-morning workouts, but the weight room is a complicated place that is not always used. With athletes attending classes and other activities around the university, the weight room is sometimes left empty. When there are no other teams in the room, it is open for use by the athletes.

The weight room is equipped with various weights and machines, but there is no room for people to work together and take long rests from other athletes.

On some mornings, it is not a great working environment. If people can work together and take long rests from other athletes, then it will be a great working environment.

UI moves to Arizona, second round

By Todd Marrsford
University of Idaho Argonaut

Make rolled through the Sunny City on Friday night and Arizona on this weekend, before the final rounds of the tournament to the Mountain West.

The Vandals were led by junior guard Moore, who finished with 26 kills. Fellow senior Keith Cragg was looking to save the team with eight kills. Moore had 17 kills, and the Vandals' first set was an 18-21 victory. The Vandals then swept the final two sets 21-17 and 22-17, giving the Vandals their third straight win.

The Vandals are 17-13, 13-13, 1-8 on Friday night and two sets lead in the series game. Moore collected 17 kills and had eight blocks.

The Wildcats, ranked No. 25 in the country, have averaged a set win over the three games 15-10, 15-10, 15-10. The Vandals were again led by Craig, Moore and Reznick, who combined for 35 percent in the third game that lasted 2 hours and 15 minutes.

McGwire's clutch

By Bob Grau
University of Idaho Argonaut

Mark McGwire's home run last season won game 3 and was the key hit of the season. McGwire's solo shot in the first inning gave the ballgame a 2-0 lead. McGwire then added two more home runs in the third inning. McGwire's home run was the key hit of the season and was an important moment for the team.

The game was played in New Mexico State in Memorial Gym.

Sosa tied with McGwire at 62

By Bob Grau
University of Idaho Argonaut

Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa have tied for the major league record of 62 home runs with one game to play. The mark was set by McGwire in 1998 and was matched by Sosa in 1999. McGwire hit his 62nd home run in the ninth inning of a game against the San Francisco Giants on Wednesday night. Sosa also hit his 62nd home run in the ninth inning of a game against the San Diego Padres on Thursday afternoon.

The game between McGwire and Sosa ended in a tie, 4-4. McGwire hit his 62nd home run of the season in the ninth inning, and Sosa matched him with a home run in the 10th inning. Both players set the record for the most home runs in a season.

The game against the Giants was McGwire's first since returning from an injury. He had missed the previous four games due to a pulled hamstring. Despite being inactive, McGwire hit a solo home run in the eighth inning to tie the game at 2-2.

Sosa tied the record in the ninth inning with a solo shot off Giants relief pitcher Steve Kline. Sosa's home run was his 62nd of the season and came in the 10th inning of a game against the San Diego Padres.

The tie between McGwire and Sosa sets up an exciting conclusion to the season. The two players have been closely matched throughout the year, and their rivalry has been one of the most entertaining in baseball.

Both players are expected to play in the season finale, which will be a crucial game for both teams. The Cardinals are currently in the first place in the National League Central, while the Cubs are in second place. A win by either team in the final game of the season could secure a division title.
Lawmakers question nepotism policy

The University of Idaho's athletic department, facing severe financial problems, may have to scrap its top-salaried post, the athletic director, as part of a series of belt-tightening measures.

The school's present athletic director, Don Smith, earned $145,000 last year, the second-highest salary among the 18 major conference schools.

But the athletic department is dealing with a $1.5 million deficit, and Smith is being asked to reduce the department's expenses.

The athletic department has a $5 million budget, and Smith is being asked to cut $1 million from the budget.

Smith has been asked to consider cutting the salaries of the assistant athletic directors, who earn $75,000 to $100,000 a year.

He has also been asked to consider reducing the amount of money spent on travel and entertainment for the athletic department.

The athletic department is also facing a $1 million deficit in its budget for next year, and Smith is being asked to consider cutting the amount of money spent on scholarships.

Smith has been asked to consider cutting the number of sports the department offers, and he has been asked to consider cutting the amount of money spent on recruiting.
