Students released for Veterans Day

By Tom Craig
University of Idaho Argonaut

For the first time in recent history of the University of Idaho, the Student Senate will be allowed to miss classes on Veterans Day.

In the past, the ASUI Senate has voted that no classes be missed on the day before being a re-enactment day for all students, in recognition of the service of all veterans who deserve it.

However, the resolution of a similar nature has gone nowhere when submitted to the faculty council. This year, instead of submitting another statement, Bly Bly, Bill Vore, Larry Bly, William Redfield, ASUI Faculty Council Representative, and Donald Zundles, ASUI Faculty Council Representative, have submitted a petition, which is a statement for, in May, The Daily Observer.

In the proposal, Bly, Redfield, and Sandek asked (if the UI would) permit students to miss classes on either day, from 10:30 a.m. on Wednesday, Nov. 11. They asked the faculty to vote to pass any tone, queries, programs, and tabs thee. The faculty council was also asked to inform faculty members the Administration and the Senate that the faculty council will be supporting the proposition, and that it will be putting a proposal to the faculty council the day before.

For the first time, the students will have a break in the day before the day before.

The carillon has been a long-standing part of the University of Idaho. The carillon is essentially a set of bells that are played by a carillonist. The carillon was first played in the 16th century and has been played ever since. The carillon played so long ago, according to Ken Olson, Dean of College of Liberal Science, "It was way before the campus and the community."

Carl Bly, a UI musicans and Foundation Board Member, said, "I remember back to the US in 1987 and hearing the chimes ringing, which brought back good memories of college days."

Over the last several years however, the carillon slowly started to break down. Last year, it finally reached a point where it could not be restored. A group of students, including Assistant Band Director, decided to host the Carillon Reunion, and successfully raised the needed $30,000. Bly commented there was no more involvement from the UI alumni and faculty since they "were way before the campus and the community."

The carillon was delivered last Friday in the Administration Building Circle in honor of the Institute's 100th anniversary. It is an electronic bell, which reproduces the sound of real bells digitally. The carillon is more powerful and chanter than the original one of 1898 (Mus). Olson wanted to thank all of the people who worked on the restoration of the carillon. "We are very grateful for the support from the donors who make this possible."

Bly commented the bell is sounded every hour, play UP's fight song every night, and play "Happy Birthday" every night of November 8:30 p.m.

Palmer quits UI Women's Center

By Beth Green

Susan Palmer, a women's resource specialist at the University of Idaho Women's Center, left the UI on Friday for a position teaching sociology at the Idaho State University. Susan Palmer was re-instated here on campus, said Kerry McAlister, a member of the Faculty Council and professor of English.

For the future, Bly is working on setting up a series of seminars between the city and the Army ROTC. "One of the goals is to also get the State Board of Education to recognize Veterans Day to all in Idaho," Bly said.

"It's about this time the campus began to recognize the people who made this nice. One of my personal goals is to get the State Board of Education to recognize Veterans Day in the state of Idaho," Bly said.

"If we're going to forget that Veterans Day is not just about veterans, us and our family, but it is also about everyone who served in the military," Bly said.

"I have been an influential person for the network of services we offer and I am experiencing in program development," Palmer said after her replacement.

A reception for the Palmer was held at 7 p.m. on Oct. 21 following the Women's Center program, "From the screen to the stage: the birth of Elizabeth," at the Idaho Union Faculty lounge.

"Anyone who knows me, knows my heart is in the classroom and teaching sociology," Palmer said in an interview on her last day. "This is a unique opportunity for me to pursue a career doing what I love most - getting students involved about understanding their social world differently than they have ever had and cultivated to make sociological connections. She also transitioned a salary increase an incentive for teaching at Idaho State University."

While at the Women's Center, Palmer's duties included publishing the Center's newsletter and planning programs. Palmer said she enjoyed meeting personal contact with the women and writing her columns for the Center's newsletter.

"This column has been an opportunity for me to identify a variety of issues important to women in general, and the University of Idaho in particular," she said. "I hope appreciated being able to highlight the accomplishments of UI faculty, staff, students, and community members by featuring them in my programming."

Requiem for a Republic

A republic of the people, Counternpoint

By Greg Malley
University of Idaho Argonaut

Scott Mahurin has slapped his new title on the Idaho Statesman. Christian renaming is that it’s difficult to discern his basic argument. Ultimately, he declares a fa-sidestand of democracy that no amount of preacher can overcome. Democracy is not so much a political process as it is a guiding principle of a political system. The principle is that people have a say in the decisions that affect their lives. A representative republic is certainly a far cry from democracy; it is a process that ensures we are all represented.

UI football dismisses ineligible Niko

By Todd Mason
University of Idaho spokesman

The University of Idaho’s defensive tackle Mike Niko has been dismissed from the team because he is not eligible to play.

Niko, who transferred from the University of Idaho, Big West Conference and NAIA and thus does not have the required academic eligibility, according to athletic department officials.

Niko’s name was not listed on the University of Idaho’s roster for the 2013 season.

Niko is a redshirt freshman and is expected to play in the upcoming season.

However, he is not eligible to play because he did not meet the academic eligibility requirements set by the NCAA.

Niko attended the University of Idaho for one year and transferred to Western Illinois University in 2011.

He was not academically eligible to return to the University of Idaho, and the school has decided to dismiss him from the football team.

This decision was made after the athletic department reviewed Niko’s academic records and determined that he did not meet the eligibility requirements.

The athletic department will provide more information about Niko’s future plans.

Flag football not enough for husky 9-year-old

By Todd Mason
University of Idaho spokesman

The University of Idaho’s athletic department has announced that it will not offer flag football for the 2014 season.

The decision was made after the athletic department reviewed the popularity of flag football and determined that it would not meet the needs of the student-athletes.

Flag football is a popular sport among high school students, but it is not offered at the University of Idaho.

The athletic department will continue to evaluate all sports offerings and make decisions based on the needs of the student-athletes.

The University of Idaho is dedicated to providing a high-quality athletic experience for its student-athletes.

Crows gain despite loss of name

By Jon Carpenter
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Unless you are a freshman, you probably don't remember the Idaho Crows, a band that was eliminated from the Rubicon Dome last year. If you were there in 1997, you will remember that "The Amazing Royal Crows" were one of the opening bands that night.

With the change, and if there were Crows fans that were drooling over more death and destruction, you are probably happy to be without this world, which was really surprising when the Cobain music made up the band. "Royal Crown House" was a bit of a letdown.

The Amazing Crows don't seem to have been affected by the recent change.

We were there in 1997, and we think bands that are well-oiled and tightly-hinished often rule out of this world's shows. After hearing the Crows, you can't help but feel like you can't find a grungier band.

The Amazing Crows were a bit more bluesy and rock-infused. The guitar playing was smooth and the drums were solid. The lead singer's voice was perfect for this kind of music and made the band sound like a rock star.

The Amazing Crows won't be around for very long, but we can't say they didn't put on a good show.

The magic of pheasant hunting in Idaho

By Matthew L. Beal
University of Idaho Agmag gains

There's no denying it, the pheasant can be a tough bird to catch. The hunter who knows the right technique and patience can bring home a great meal.

The lifestyle and situations of the surrounding countryside of Moscow must be treated with pheasants. Many people may be sawing off a life that's been cut short, but the Department of Fish and Game is trying to replicate the same setting.

The state will be offering a variety of hunting seasons in the area, which will feature some of the best pheasant hunting in Idaho.

Moscow's Best Bars

This week's featured bar... Dutch Goose

Cold beer, great food, and a relaxed atmosphere, where else but the Dutch Goose could you find that winning combination. Nestled along Sixth St., the Dutch Goose is the perfect gathering place for students and Moscow citizens alike.

Now that the weather is getting colder, it is the perfect time to indulge in the Goose's steaming clam chowder, served to perfection in a sourdough bread bowl. Steamed clams are a favorite with the local community as well as the choices of beer either domestic or micro-brew that are popular with the students.

The menu at the Dutch Goose also includes burgers and hot sandwiches, made to your liking. No one can pass up the best curry fries in town! Buffalo wings and mozzarella sticks are available for the light snackers who are drowning a glass of their favorite brew.

The friendly atmosphere and great service is evident as soon as you walk through the door. The owner allows you to carve your name in the wood seats so you can leave your mark for others to see. Peanuts are also available for patrons to snack on and then throw on the floor.

Happy hour is always a blast with $3.75 pitchers on domestic beers. Thursday is the happening day at the Dutch Goose with $1.00 pints from 8-10p.m. Now on Thursdays are Kamaikazis for $1.75 and Jagermeister shots for only $3.00! Friday treats the Guinness lover to $3.00 pints of the dark stuff. Tuesday is the day for your and your friends to enjoy 2 for 1 domestic.

Polar bears braving the deck throughout the fall season will be treated to more of the same great service. Keep an ear open for upcoming bands that will soon grace the Dutch Goose establishment, or stay for a beer and a game of pool. Whatever the day and whenever the urge, the Dutch Goose will treat you right.
