Business confidence among women's defense services cash back on course

By Beth Green
The University of Idaho Argonaut

Business professors Mike McCollough and Duane Gremel like to practice what they preach — even if it means paying cash in the cold.

McCollough and Gremel offer a guarantee for their services at the beginning of each semester, the terms of which are determined at the beginning of each semester after a classroom discussion.

"If you teach in the mail- service, it's a classic example of practicing what we preach," McCollough said.

The terms to the present state that the student must not "miss the product." i.e. attend classes, do homework and participate in group discussions. In turn the instructor must also meet his minimum standards. Any class member can request the refund, and will still receive the credit for the course and be honored with a grade for the semester.

The amount of the refund offered is re-determined each semester, based on both on and off-campus student tuition, the prior year's fee and the value of the student's time.

This semester Gremel's Business 327 services marketing class is offered a refund of $20. Gremel and McCollough both agreed the idea of guaranteeing their instruction from the beginning is a laudable one. He said the guarantee is one of the largest in the state.

McCollough and Gremel's students have been involved in the MSA program in the School of Communications. If the class is witnessed to be experimental with guaranteed classes at an undergraduate level, McCollough said.

Besides the California professors, Gremel said he doesn't know of any other programs in the state that had a guaranteed service for students. "We haven't been made aware of any others," he stated.

"It's definitely radical to talk about giving money back for poor performance," Gremel said. He did know of a "handful" of universities that guarantee a different percent — the student — to "fix up employers."

"I think that the guarantee is necessary for the student to actually implicitly have," said Nazi, senior in finance and human resource management.

"I like the idea of professors holding students back," said Tami Morgan, a marketing major enrolled in one of the guaranteed classes.

In the business department, Gremel said we have a limited number of activities, (making that) and that students should definitely be required to attend every class. It's not enough, however, to just show up for the class. "If you want to take good notes, you're going to have a good time."

Both of the professors still suggest the student back up, carload of goods and guarantees, it makes sense for them to guarantee for the students. For, Gremel, said McCollough's Required class, the guarantee is "a natural extension of class continua, the only classes, it's not."

The service guarantee that McCollough and Gremel's students who accept the offer should be at a "pedagogical tool" Gremel said, rather than a "whole concept for running the entire university."

"The guarantee has been supportive particularly because of the size," he said. After three offerings of the guarantee to a total of just 10 students, the professors have requested the refund.

ASUI forum is less than lively

By Adam E. Wilton
Tanner Editor

As usual, the remarks of ASUI Senate hopefuls were largely ignored by the crowd in the SUB food court during the student forum Thursday.

Students filled the court, eating tater touns and burgers, leaving only a handful to listen to the six candidates who participated in the forum during their turn.

As usual, the candidates hoped to bring student concerns to the stage. As usual, they hoped to encourage residence halls and Creek house to work together and the lack of off-campus involvement.

A new level of stupidity, however, was evident when student: fire increases were questioned.

"There's nothing you can do about fire," said candidate Krissa Michel.

Bradley Schaff said. "Student fees are out of our involvement in the workshop. The seminar was a success at random from the Women's Center placed around Moscow.

Sue Christlau, the instructor, has a background in marital and has been teaching the full-award women's self-defense for eight years. She became interested in this genre of self-defense after she realized karate wasn't the best practical defense for women. "I really believe in the program and I believe it's the most effective. It's a lot of different self- defenses," Christlau said.

In the class, women were allowed to use the techniques they learned against a mock assailant, male instructor. Patrick Moore, who was greeted a full punch.

"Use full force, you're not going to hurt me," Moore assured the group after he demonstrated his stance, of mostly extended full fist. The use of the much-assailant gives women the chance to learn the techniques in an actualized form which helps memory retention.

Christlau has been interested in this genre of self-defense after the realization karate wasn't the best practical defense for women.

"I really believe in the program and it's the most effective., Christlau said. Women's self-defense was not included in the curricula, so the student's decision to adopt the self-defense is a real leap forward. "I'm excited about it," Moore said.

The new class continues to be offered for the next few months. It will include a class on self-defense as well as basic karate and other techniques.

The team played four games over the weekend, but fell to Idaho College, 9-13 then to Western Oregon, 7-8 and to the University of Alaska Fairbanks, 6-7.

Despite the losses, the team continued to show improvement throughout the season.

The team’s second goal

Mills would not get closer, however, as Western kept the pressure on and broke away for easy scores in the second half. Theyoutlasted the Vandals in the second half to win the game 14-2.

The Vandals continued to press the ball, but fell to Idaho College, 9-13. Then they went to Western Oregon to lose by a score of 7-8.

Football
Chris Turner looked at the stat sheet and shook his head in despair about the University of Idaho football team's limp performance in their last spring scrimmage. "I like the defensive side," he said, partially.

It was the team's first meeting. A veteran group of linebackers and linemen were in attendance, but head coach John Stitt was addressing the defensive team.

Brian Sudderth, a veteran defensive tackle, was in attendance to help start this fall, but four of the six rods returned Saturday morning while regional coach Jordan Kuiper was out of town on business.

The quarterback's performance was as expected, and the team had to make a few adjustments on their combined offense.

"We're really basic right now," he said.

Some feedback was received earlier this week, and the team has since made some adjustments.

The team has been working hard to prepare for the upcoming season, and the coaching staff is excited about the potential of the team.

Soccer Conference
A report was given to the team regarding the upcoming season and the expectations for the team.

The Freshman Comforter
Kibbie has spent the past six years in Vista, California, playing for the USA Senior Women's National Team. He is coming off a provisional season and will be returning to Utah State in the spring.

Summer Youth Baseball
The team will be hosting a summer camp for youth baseball players this summer.

Summer Camp Registration
The camp will be held on June 23-27, and will feature instruction from former major league players.

The camp will run from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., with lunch provided. The cost is $125 per camper, and registration is now open.

Miss Utah Teenage Pageant
The pageant will take place on May 12-14 at the Maverik Center in Salt Lake City.

The Miss Utah Teenage Pageant is a nonprofit organization that provides opportunities for young women to develop their skills and build their confidence.

Deadline for Registration
The deadline for registration is April 15, 2023.

Keanu plays dumb in Matrix does great

By Hazel Harmsworth, Seattle Weekly Staff Writer

The story behind The Matrix is an interesting tale that ends with the notion that anyone in the human body, given the right training, could be a robot. This fact alone provides a glimpse into the way society views the chances of anyone becoming a robot. As Keanu Reeves and Carrie-Anne Moss share a closer look at the alternative scenario, the story takes on a more dramatic tone. The future is no longer as far-fetched as it seems. The next chapter promises to be much more action-packed and will be sure to thrill audiences. The movie is a must-see for all those interested in the world of film and technology. This intriguing blend of science fiction and drama will appeal to both fans of the genre and those new to it.
