The new University Catalogue for 1907-1908 with announcements for 1907-1908, will be issued this week from the office of the Idaho Post, Moscow, Idaho. The catalogue contains 148 pages, which makes it slightly larger than that issued last year. Much material of interest to the prospective student is included, for it is designed for those who are considering making application for admission to the University.

The saying is well known that "A picture is worth a thousand words." This saying is not as well known that a catalogue is worth a thousand paragraphs. The University of Idaho has an excellent catalogue, which is worth reading and examining carefully. It is the best way to get all the information about the University that you need.

The catalogue will be issued on Friday, and it is recommended that you take the time to read it carefully. It contains all the information you need to make an informed decision about attending the University of Idaho.

The catalogue is available at the University Bookstore or online at the University of Idaho's website. It is a valuable resource that you should not miss.

In conclusion, the University of Idaho has an excellent catalogue that is worth reading and examining carefully. It is the best way to get all the information you need about the University. Take the time to read it carefully, and you will be glad you did.

History is Secondary Schools

History covers an exceedingly large field and only very recently has that field been appreciated even by the greatest extent far as the secondary schools are concerned.

Today we have generally prepared teachers in most of our secondary schools. Teachers who teach history not merely to fill in a curriculum, but to instill ideas of the real value and importance of history.

History opens up the great fields of real knowledge and experience. In its broadest sense history includes as language as the expression of men’s thoughts and feelings. It deals with men's motives and emotions as individuals or in society, with their dispositions, habits, and institutions.

The relation of persons to society in another in society gives rise to morals. Hence the study of characters in a good society would be the teaching of morals by example.

See the mingling influence of the "Hum" and the "Dumb" in the Bible of the Greeks, upon that wonderful people. Show how great men such as Lincoln, Washington, and McKinley, have bravely sought their way, through varied difficulties, in the formation of American citizens, and we see to be transported back to former days. We seem to receive an invigorating and uplifting stimulus which tends to raise our moral status in proportion to the moral level of the character which we study. This is the stimulus or incentive which must be awakened or instilled into the student of history before the teacher can say his work has not been in vain. And what Goldsmith says of this prerogative we may equally apply to the teacher. "He is to be the guide, he allures to brighter worlds and leads the way."

But besides the moral aspect, the purpose of history there are the disciplinary value and the storing of knowledge. Knowledge of the past should be closely correlated to the other studies. It depends much upon the nature of the people which it portrays. Do this language, also geography. The people from the nation and history records the deeds of such a nation.

We have given the definition of history, its purpose, and its relation to other studies. It now remains for us to speak of the qualifications of a teacher and the ability of the pupil and we can begin to deduce some method, if there be one, for teaching history.

There are at least four qualifications which every teacher should endeavor to win: first, practice in relating historical evidence; second, sufficient knowledge; third, fair mindedness and a wholesome spirit in presenting facts; fourth, skill in narration and in developing the pupil knowledge by questions, and the mental ability in directing the work of the class.

The qualifications are too nearly interdependent to need explanation.

We must consider the child which is the most important factor in our microscopic studies. Different pupils have different abilities. These abilities vary with age. They also vary with the environment, with the surroundings. Hence it follows that we must make the course contain in the mind of the pupil both to his age and his abilities whether he be innate or the result of conditions.

The teacher should be careful in selecting a representative and comprehensive text book. This book should be very simple when used in the grades. It should also be illustrative. Up to the 7th or 8th grade the lessons may be from 15 to 30 pages.
