The Artist Course

MOVING Broadway to the small-town—that is exactly what happens when an artist course is offered to the students. The artistic faculty is of such quality that we realize what a tremendous advantage it is for the pupils to have been in the world of music and drama brought here for our especial benefit. Very few of us think that we are able to see the productions here in our own community, and thus make a more vivid record breaking crowds in the largest of the eastern states.

We cannot begin to estimate the benefits that we derive from our associations with the best things of life—and that is really just what an artist course is to us. It is a means by which we are able to contact with those intrinsic factors that tend to give us culture in the true sense of the word.

The reason that you are urged to purchase tickets to the numbers of the artist course is because there would be no financial aid in filling the auditorium its seating capacity but because the course is primarily for students. Therefore, the people outside the University who will only be too glad to come but they have a chance to avail of his opportunity. All of the effort is being expended so that we may get something that is for our personal good. Think it over.

Caps and Gowns

THE action of the senior class, in refusing to abolish caps and gowns, has materially strengthened the foundation upon which our traditions and customs are ed. Traditions are not built in a day; they are formulated by our forefathers, and transmitted which endures. The senior class has demonstrated that these traditions cannot be overthrown and lashed, that they cannot be established or abandoned by the dictates of a momentary whim.

In the past, the class has recognized them as an integral part of college life, and the real soul of college spirit.

The Thanksgiving vacation has been the sealed event of the past weeks, and the Thanksgiving dinner was in many homes the highlight of the season. It was a time of family团聚, of good food and good company. The dinner was a time to remember, to appreciate the blessings of the year, and to give thanks for the abundance that has been bestowed upon us. It was a time to reflect on the past and to look forward to the future, with hope and optimism.

The preparations for the dinner were made with care and attention, from the shopping to the cooking. The menu was carefully planned, with dishes that were both familiar and new. The table was set with care, with silverware and china that were polished and gleaming. The tablecloth was a rich, deep color, and the napkins were the finest linen. The centerpiece was a beautiful arrangement of flowers, with red and white blooms that were both elegant and simple.

The guests arrived, and the dinner began. The conversation was lively and engaging, with stories and laughter that filled the room. The food was served with care, and the guests were treated to a feast that was both delicious and satisfying. The wine was carefully chosen, with bottles that were both red and white. The dessert was a rich, decadent chocolate cake, with layers of chocolate and cream that were both indulgent and sweet.

The night ended with a sense of contentment, with a feeling of gratitude and joy. The guests left, but the memories of the evening would live on. The Thanksgiving dinner was a time of thanksgiving, of reflection, and of joy. It was a time to be grateful for the gifts that we have, and to appreciate the blessings that we have received. It was a time to build upon, to cherish, and to remember.

The work is divided into two sections, a front section for the new papers, nothing of the old papers, nothing of the old. The front section for the New York Times, the City Journal, the Tribune, the World. The Times is a typical morning paper, the one the black of the town. The Tribune is a typical evening paper, the one the black of the town.

The students wrote feature stories describing the city. This made the whole column presentable.

One day Miss Yeats wrote an article entitled "The Wealth of the Town." She said the following.

"For the first time in its history, the city has been able to boast of a millionaire. The millionaire, who is a foreigner, has recently come to the city and settled. He is a rich man, and is known to be a great collector of art. He has already purchased several fine paintings and a beautiful collection of prints. It is expected that he will continue to buy art and that he will become one of the leading citizens of the city."
