TROOPER PORTER TELLS STORY OF EUROPAN STUDENT

The lack of social intercourse and experience, especially between students and the surrounding community, has become a significant issue.

In an interview with The Idaho Argonaut, Professor Jennings, a member of the religious studies department, expressed his concern about the lack of interaction between the campus and the town. He highlighted the importance of fostering a sense of community and emphasized the need for more organized social events to bring students and residents together.

"Social interaction is crucial for the well-being of students," Jennings said. "It's important for their personal and academic growth, and it helps to build a stronger connection between the university and the community."

Civil Engineers Meet in Specular Youths

Paul K. Knudsen and Charles F. counselling in the University of Idaho, have been conducting a series of meetings to discuss the importance of civil engineering.

The first step was taken last week at Lewis, Idaho, where some 300 civil engineers were present. The second step will be taken at Clark Fork, Idaho, where construction on the Clark Fork dam will begin.

These meetings are in connection with the 1922 Idaho Engineering Conference, which has been called to discuss the problems facing the state.

Early Weather

The winter season in the Idaho area generally produces rather difficult conditions. Early in the work season, the mountain snows, the spring thaw, and the melting snows may cause serious damage to the crops. The early snows are also important in the development of the winter crops.

The Serenaders are looking forward to sharing their musical talents with audiences throughout the region and to building relationships with local communities.

Rodeo: Made to Award Women's Athletic Cup

Point System For Different Events

A new point system has been established for the upcoming rodeo season, which will take place on Group North. The system is designed to encourage fair play and sportsmanship.

The scoring system will be awarded for the following events: lassoing, bulldogging, and bronc riding, called Wednesday. The following scoring system will be used:

- Lassoing: Will be scored by time. The quickest will receive the highest score.
- Bulldogging: Will be scored by the number of successful bulldogs. The most successful will receive the highest score.
- Bronc Riding: Will be scored by the number of successful rides. The most successful will receive the highest score.

This system is expected to increase the competitiveness of the rodeo and to foster a more enjoyable experience for all participants.
