Professor Axtell Explains History of Ancient Tablets

A small group of ancient Babylonian tablets containing cuneiform writing has been discovered by archaeologists. These tablets are believed to be the oldest known records of human civilization. The writing is in a form of pictorial script that was used in ancient Mesopotamia.

In a study of the slow, painful reading and meaning of the beautiful, ancient script, Dr. Axtell has made a great contribution to our understanding of ancient history. He has spent many years working on this project and his work is now being published in a series of volumes.
