VIEWS MODERN ART GIVEN BY MEMBER OF IDAHO FACULTY

Impressionist Tendencies Exhibited at University

Among the students in the School of English at the University of Idaho, there is a group of students who are interested in the study of modern art. These students have contributed to a recent exhibition of modern art, which was held in the auditorium of the university. The exhibition was sponsored by the university's art department and was attended by a large number of students and faculty members.

The exhibition included a variety of modern art, including paintings, sculptures, and photographs. The students who contributed to the exhibition were encouraged to experiment with new techniques and to explore new ideas. The exhibition was a great success, and it was praised by the faculty members for its innovative and creative approach to modern art.

By English Instructor

(1, Statoe Statelin), "The late story of Aunt Mary" is the autobiography of Hildy Stark, an English instructor at the university. The book was published recently under the title "Aunt Mary's Life Story," and it has been well received by the faculty and students.

The book tells the story of Hildy Stark, a young woman who was born in the small town of Idaho Falls. She was the daughter of a poor farmer who was forced to move to England when she was a child. Hildy was educated in England and became an English instructor at the university.

The book is divided into two parts: the first part, which is called "Aunt Mary's Life Story," tells the story of Hildy Stark's life. The second part, which is called "Aunt Mary's Letters," contains a series of letters that Hildy Stark wrote to her sister, who was living in England.

Vandal Basketball Started Campaign for Next Year; Prospects Good for Year

MacMillan said that he is looking for players who are interested in playing basketball. He said that he will be holding tryouts next month, and that he hopes to have a team of about 12 players.

Six Hundred Enthusiastic Idaho fans have left on their last and longest trip of the season. And what have they carried away with them to help them to the big game with the Trojans Saturday? They had our illustrious Coach "Mattie" Matthews; they have their complete team practically free from physical injuries; and they have their tradition-Is "the Idaho fight." And more than that, they have the unqualified support and solid backing of the whole student body and faculty. The teams knows this, the Coach knows it; and they will carry the memory of the five or six hundred students who gathered on the first Sunday in October, as they left.

It is our view that the Idaho fans don’t or apologize for demonstrating their loyalty and well-being. It makes them consider that they are fighting for a worthy object, a laudable cause. Great work, students, and carry that old fight into basketball season which is rapidly approaching.

Appreciation

Fully three-fourths of Idaho's students have proved their initiative and ability to recognize a good thing when they see it. The student fans have been a revelation. In the opinion of those who sponsored the exhibition here and undoubtedly in the minds of the faculty and parents throughout the state, it is indeed a marvelous development that Idaho students have hung up as proud of their interesting records and capacities.

Just Average

There's a student who romances half-a-million hybrids, who has them say he’s just a "nice kid." His dark brown hair, his mild blue eyes, his quiet unassuming air please him inconspicuously among the 1500 others on the campus. He is "just an average fellow." He goes about his own business, and seems to lack any unusual ability. But he, and tens of thousands of others, has early learned to appreciate the significance of campus tradition.

The other day a big lingering fellow passed into the vacant room next door. His exagerrated swagger and loud voice startled me as one who holds the world by the "breeches." Yes, there was a student who used to have his own way. From the very first this fellow drifted everywhere, and when he came in contact, and roamed over most of the men on that floor. Then one morning he appeared at breakfast, wearing a conspicuous "choker." Awed whispers swept around the room, centering on the question of the new student. He was noticeably shorter than the average of the men around the ball for the few days, and finally he passed and left. Little was said; and nothing done because, well, these men who are "just fellow fellows" are more or less taken for granted by everybody.

Cross-Country

One of Idaho's newest and most successfully coached major sports and one which is not being sufficiently appreciated by the campus, is the Cross-Country team. For years past, one team has been passed by one of Idaho's own students, but won the championship ship honors.

To Errol Hileman, Louis Williams, and Arthur Sweder is due the championship of the state and the credit for the team which was most successful.
