Is College Worth While?

John B. Thomas, a member of Harvard Law School in 1931, attempts to answer "Was College Worth While." He is found that by the time he began his studies, he had a list of 50 men who had attended Harvard Law School, and that all of them were successful in their profession.

Most of his data is of interest to those who have attended or are considering attending a college or university. He states that the employment of a person who has attended college is 20% higher than that of a person who has not.

Mr. Thomas doubts whether college was worth while for the Boy Scouts. He makes much of "the mediocrity of our schools," and remarks that "the Boy Scouts are better prepared to meet the world after graduation than the average college graduate."

As for the next, some of us maintain our original mediocrity despite university training, but at least we are better prepared to meet the world after graduation than the average college graduate.

Well, the election is over, and there’s no more fun until someone stems another light.

Have you been watching the election returns? They are exciting. One man says, "Get out, eat, damn it, what are we scared of?"

You Democrats just remember, though, that if you lose the election, it’s just the way you look quoted, but I guess you’re out of here, too. I say, the Republicans are a bunch of happy days are here again.

"Looking for trouble with a smile"

It is the job to look for trouble before it happens.

This is one of many who inspect telephone companies, to prevent interruptions in the service. When a fault occurs, he is called "preventive maintenance." This work is of the highest importance. It helps to prevent interruptions in the service, which sometimes are very serious. It helps to keep telephone service at the highest efficiency.

To plan this work requires management and imagination and the ability to balance the many factors involved in the maintenance problem.
