Geologists Exhibit Large Collection

Many schooled geologists of the University of Idaho know that the famous Mr.700,000,000 B.C.] is located near Butte, Montana. But did you know that the life is in the Butte region of South Dakota? This year, a number of geologists made the trip to South Dakota to study the region. Mr.700,000,000 B.C. is named for the fossilized remains of a creature that lived during the time period known as the "Cambrian Period." This creature is considered one of the most important fossils ever found because it provides evidence of the evolution of life on earth. Mr.700,000,000 B.C. is now on display at the South Dakota Paleontology Museum in Rapid City.

Ease With Which It Is Guided Makes Guests Want to Try It For Whirl

Many an old professor and nursery mother and father at the University of Idaho had their hearts broken by a picture of a motorized lawn mower on the campus. The lawn mower in question was a model that was introduced at the University of Idaho this year. The lawn mower was designed by a young engineer, and it is one of the most advanced lawn mowers on the market today.
