Levy and Litany
By L. R. Tenney

There was neither a stable body nor a consistent personality in the Levy and Litany. Their goals were to achieve fame and fortune, but the means to achieve these goals were often questionable. They were known for their love of money and power, and their pursuit of these goals often led to conflict and chaos.

Hunting for the Next Big Thing
By G. R. Smith

The next big thing is always on the horizon, whether it's a new technology, a trendy fashion, or a hot stock. But how do you know when you've found the next big thing? It's not always easy to spot, but here are a few signs to keep an eye out for.

Gentleman Jim

A reporter (it must be Spalding) wants to write every wrong.

The Supreme Court has nothing on our tree now, though it’s nearly pure, for they are both due to get “jailed”.

This reporter after much effort (fail), feels that the worst pin of the week has been found. Only this week the girls went twice, so may you have your choice—any.

No. 1: Europe seems to have a Spains in the stomach.

No. 2: The wreath ceremony tomorrow reads: “I take this woman, to heaven and all.”

If a good girl is pure gold, a bad one must be pure rust.

And out of a “swell” moment, a recent cause the following fact in the American Speech: Jim has taken a “swell” nick on his jaw.

And now for our weekly (or it is weekly)

Noted: T. L. H. (Litkey), and J. (Goodby), are now “Canse”.

On to the sea so deep.

Audas says: “Many a girl has started to make a new friend, and has ended up by making a new enemy.”

“Just Jim” in a special of those five-day ones of the big fund and the season past. It’s one of those antiquated things that schools the count-
